Now, while this clause, "the right to alter, amend, or repeal is hereby expressly reserved," is possibly worth something, yet I do not believe that that clause goes far enough in regulating the sale of power generated by these companies.

Mr. MANN. That was put in the law in the first place out of abundance of caution, but the gentleman perhaps recalls that the general act reserves the right to amend, alter, and repeal generally and in every special case, without any liability to the Government for the change that may be made. In other words, under the general dam law, Congress would have the power to repeal the right absolutely after the dam was constructed, or the right to regulate the charges that would be made, if Congress has that power constitutionally, and I think it would have, or to regulate anything else without any liability on the part of the General Government.

Mr. FOSTER. But I think that this provision ought to go further. If we acknowledge that the General Government has some rights in these navigable streams, we ought, in exercising those rights, see to it that no combination of water-power companies in any part of the country shall be brought about whereby it may be almost impossible for the people to regulate the charges that are made to them for the use of that water power. The gentleman from Illinois and I are pretty well in accord on these matters, I think——

Mr. MANN. Absolutely——

Mr. FOSTER. Because I recall distinctly that in the matter of a dam in Alabama, on the Black Warrior River, the gentleman from Illinois was very pronounced in his statement of what he thought the General Government ought to do.

Mr. MANN. And I still maintain those views.

Mr. FOSTER. And I was going to state that I believe my colleague still maintains that opinion. I hope that he will join with some of us who feel that there ought to be some restrictions placed in these bills that he has mentioned that are now sought to be passed through this House—restrictions that might control the prices charged to the people.

Now, I will state that I have suggested a few amendments to these bills so they might go through, but I have not met with any encouragement in offering them, so that I have thought the better plan to follow, if possible, to prevent their passage entirely was to assume this position until Congress could take some definite action in reference to the control of the water power in the country.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not the wiser policy, when we are endeavoring to do what the gentleman has so well stated should be done, that we deal in general terms and reserve to the Government all powers of control and supervision and repeal, rather than attempt now in advance to particularize? Is not that the better and the broader and the safer policy to pursue?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I think we ought to put in all these bills that pass through the House provisions that give to some one—and I know of no authority better than the authority granting it—the power to regulate these water-power sites until there is a better general law enacted.

Mr. TOWNER. I think there is no question about that, but my thought was that if we attempt in advance to particularize we may not be able to know what may be needed hereafter in the protection of the rights of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I think with the gentleman that general protection in a law is better than to try to specialize.

Mr. TOWNER. In bills of this character all the rights that the Government could exercise are reserved in advance until such occasions may arise in the future. It occurs to me that that is the better policy to pursue.

Mr. FOSTER. I would state to the gentleman from Iowa that while "the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act" is in these bills as they are passed, yet I think the restrictions should be in the bill when it is passed. That is the safer plan, in my judgment.

Mr. TOWNER. I will ask the gentleman if he does not believe that the general terms of the dam act, the general statement in the law at present, in connection with the broad provisions that already exist in the general dam act, do not constitute an abundant and, in fact, a very broad and sweeping reservation of the rights of the Government?

Mr. FOSTER. I think not sufficient to regulate the matter of charges for water power in this country. I am frank to say to the gentleman that possibly at the time this law was passed it was the best that could be gotten through, but I think the time has now come when it is not sufficient, and it ought to go further than this law goes at this time.

Mr. TOWNER. I am very much in favor of doing everything that can be done to reserve the rights to the Government in water powers.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the water in the rivers, great and small, has been there, changing from time to time, for many, many thousands, if not millions, of years; and all that water has never, in the absence of dams and development, furnished an ounce of power.

Now, what the loss is to the United States, or to the people of the United States, every year from this great mass of water—enough to fill a part of an ocean—that goes to waste I do not know. If there was any way by law by which I could convert that water into power and navigation for the benefit of the people I would favor it. Now, there are but two ways to do it, as I understand. One is for the United States to go into the power business and sell the power or give it free to the people, building and maintaining the dams, making the canals and locks. The other way is to allow private enterprise and capital to make the development. As to the first way, I think we are not ready to resort to that. I do not know that we ever will be ready. I sometimes hope that the United States will not go into the business of building railroads and building power houses and dams for the purpose of selling power.

The development of this power requires money, and in some instances power is developed that is not remunerative. There are other instances where it is developed and it is wonderfully profitable. If somebody wants to build a dam and divert the water and keep it from running wastefully to the ocean and devote it to the purpose of turning machinery, I do not know what better we can do than to let them build the dam. We do not know how much power they are going to develop. They may break up. It may be a good venture, or it may be a bad venture; but when you put into the law itself the power to repeal or amend the franchise, then if extortion should appear Congress could amend or repeal the act granting the franchise, and the United States or the respective States could fix the prices for the power sold by those who develop it. So I do not think we are in a bad way, provided we utilize that which has been wasted from the dawn of creation and is still being wasted, keeping the right when we grant the franchise to regulate under the power to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] a question. Does this amendment, which the Senate placed in this bill, take the place of section 2 of the bill which passed the House?

Mr. ADAMSON. I did not notice how it was printed.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. What is the question of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FOSTER. There is a Senate amendment which is marked section 2 of this bill. Does it take the place of section 2 of this bill? Is that true?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is an independent amendment. It does not take out anything that is in the bill. I will say further to the gentleman from Illinois that the general dam act has that section attached to it, with the right to repeal or amend any act that is referred to the Secretary of War in accordance with its terms.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. And that reservation is in this act also.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with my colleague who has just taken his seat, the ex-Speaker of this House [Mr. CANNON], that the water as it runs to the sea in its millions of barrels is worth nothing in the way of power until some individual or corporation places it in proper condition to be of advantage to the people. Yet I think that when we give away valuable franchises we ought to know something about how the franchises are going to be used, and I think my colleague agrees with me that we should have some sort of control, or that the control should be vested somewhere, so that there will be no question about it, and that the people's rights will be protected.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who has just taken his seat. He once lived in the piedmont region of the South. In those days there were no manufactures there. To-day it is the finest section upon the face of this earth, both in farming and manufacturing. The mills are there, the cotton grows there, and it is manufactured there. I do not know the conditions that exist in other sections of the Union, but I do know the conditions that exist in the South. We need development there, we need the capital there, we need the mills there, and we need water power developed, and I can not understand why gentlemen object to the construction of dams and water power in many sections of the South where this development is so much needed.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman may not understand that, because he possibly has not studied the question sufficiently to know why. I will say to the gentleman that the reason why I object, without certain restrictions being placed in these bills, is that the corporations of the country ought not to control all the water-power sites of this land. That is why I am opposed to it, and I think a Democrat can afford to stand upon that kind of a platform, and ask that the people's rights in these matters be safeguarded, and that they shall not be permitted to be oppressed by any corporation or any set of men anywhere and at any time.

Mr. GALLAGHER. And that is what the corporations are trying to do.

Mr. PADGETT. If there are individuals who want to construct dams for the benefit of their local communities, what objection has the gentleman to that? I am speaking of a case where the privilege is asked by individuals, not by corporations, and where the people of the neighborhood want the dam built.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he can inform the House how long those individuals will keep a franchise without transferring it to some corporation or possibly some water-power trust?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know how long, and it does not make any difference, so long as it will be for the benefit of the local people who want it developed.

Mr. FOSTER. It may not make any difference to the gentleman from Tennessee, but I think it does make a difference to the people of this country to know what shall be done with this water power.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman suggest wherein he would further safeguard this bill so as to protect the public? Let me suggest in that connection that I know of localities where water power is going to waste. Of course, the gentleman agrees that a mill can not be run with the water that has passed, and if water power is put in it will be of great advantage to a given locality, possibly making it a manufacturing district, where coal is not available at a reasonable price. As I understand it, the State has the power in this bill to fix the price if it is unreasonable, and the United States Government has the power to alter, amend, or repeal. I do not know where this dam is located. I am not interested in it, but it does seem, as a general proposition, that there ought to be an opportunity to develop these water powers. In the meantime the coal of this country is being mined and wasted where it is burned at points where water is running away useless that should be used to provide power.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] misunderstands me. I am not opposed to the development of water power in this country. I am for it. I believe I stand just as much for the development of water power in this country as the gentleman from Pennsylvania does, and will lend a helping hand in doing whatever is in my power to help along in the matter; but I want to look a little further than simply the development of water power which gives some individual or corporation or company the right to use as they please that water power when they have it. The fact that a great amount of capital may be necessary to develop the water power is not the only question that concerns me; but I am concerned, and I think the gentleman is concerned, with the proper regulation of the water power and the rights of the people in these matters—the rights of the consumers themselves who have to buy the power after it is generated by these companies. I think that all of these bills should contain provisions that safeguard the rights and the interests of the consumer.

Mr. BOWMAN. This bill is safeguarded in that respect. The Government has the power to alter or amend or to repeal it at any time, and the State also, by virtue of the amendment inserted in the Senate, has the power to change or alter the price if it is not reasonable. Does not the gentleman think it is sufficiently guarded, and if not, what would he suggest?

Mr. FOSTER. I could not go into all of the terms at this time, but I would state that I would have proposed such amendments as would guarantee to some one, the Secretary of War or some one else, the right to examine the books and papers of the company in reference to fixing the charges they may make to the people of the community or wherever that power may be consumed. I would have that. That is the main and important point in this matter. Then there is another matter.

Possibly I am treading on ground that may be disputed, but I think that when the General Government is called upon to improve navigation by spending thousands and millions of dollars the Government retains some right there, and I believe that in the generation of water power the Government has some right to remuneration when that water power is used by a corporation.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I would state in connection with what has been said that the bill pertains to my district. It is a local measure, and the purpose of the amendment is to meet local conditions. The Government has condemned the White River as a navigable stream for 150 miles below where this power plant is to be located.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that I think very highly of him and that I would not fight any bill simply because he happened to advocate it and because it affected his district.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Oh, I do not mean to imply anything of the kind, but I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me finish. The gentleman says the Government has declared this stream for 150 miles to be nonnavigable. I want to state that in the report of the Waterways Commission he will find it stated that the rights of the Government extend far beyond the actual navigability of the stream, and that for the purpose of conserving and making that river navigable the General Government has rights far beyond where the stream may be actually navigable.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I insist that this bill does not deny any of the rights of the General Government. The Senate provided for an amendment to the bill which permits the people of the State, it is true, to regulate prices and prevent discrimination. It expressly recognizes in the State a right that the State undoubtedly now has. Does the gentleman from Illinois object to that?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no; I am for it, and I hope the State of Arkansas will regulate the prices. I think the amendment improves the bill very much, and without some amendment giving the right to regulate charges I would not be for it.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. And I want to state further that the right to amend or repeal or modify this act is reserved to the Government in the act itself. It is left within the power of Congress, at any time in the future when they decide on a permanent policy in reference to these water powers, to revoke or modify or amend this act and in the grant as thus modified to regulate the affairs of the power company by the action of Congress in so far as the rights and powers of the Federal Government extend or may be involved.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I think the amendments are good.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I am not fighting the gentleman's bill. I am talking on the general policy.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I am not talking about the general policy. I want to get this matter settled, because it is a matter of great interest to my people and my State. In this connection I wish to State that the bill as it passed the House was in strict conformity with the requirements of the general dam law. The Senate amended the bill, inserting as a new section the following amendment:

SEC. 2. It is understood, and this act is enacted on the express conditions, that the State of Arkansas shall first consent to the construction of said dam and shall have authority to fix from time to time reasonable charges for power and current furnished by the said Dixie Power Co., to regulate the service for the electric current and power produced by requiring that the same shall be furnished to all proposed consumers who apply in good faith to purchase the same without discrimination as to service and charge, and in the order in which application therefor is made, except that in the event power and current sufficient to supply all applicants can not be produced that preference shall always be given to such applicants as shall consume the same within the said State. Upon the expiration of the authorization granted by this act the said dam shall, at the option of the said State, become the property of the State of Arkansas, or any grantee of hers, upon the payment to the said Dixie Power Co. of the value thereof as a structure, disconnected from any license, grant, permission, or franchise, as said value may be ascertained by negotiation, or, in default of agreement, by fair arbitration or by judicial proceeding, as said Dixie Power Co. shall elect.

This amendment, in my opinion, improves the original bill. It recognizes in the State of Arkansas the right to regulate charges and prevent discriminations on the part of the Dixie Power Co. It also provides that at the expiration of the authorization granted by this act the said dam shall, at the option of the said State, become the property of the State of Arkansas upon the payment to the said Dixie Power Co. the value thereof as a structure, and in case of disagreement as to price it provides for settlement by arbitration or by judicial proceedings. It seems to me that every one of these provisions are in the interest of the general public and at the same time are just and fair to the power company receiving the franchise. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will understand that the very purpose of this amendment is to protect the public against exorbitant charges and unjust discriminations by the Dixie Power Co. or its assigns.

In conclusion, I will add that the construction of this proposed dam and the development of a great water power thereby will be of incalculable benefit to the people of Arkansas. It will stimulate development along many lines and will create new industries and new enterprises, all of which supply employment for hundreds of workingmen. It will utilize for power purposes a magnificent mountain stream little used for navigation, and I therefore hope that at the conclusion of this discussion all opposition will be withdrawn and that the conference report will be agreed to and that the bill will pass.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has 25 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I shall take that much time. The question of water-power development in this country and in Canada is in a formative state. There has not been much demand for water power until a comparatively recent period. There was not any demand for it until it was ascertained that without appreciable loss water power could be converted into electrical energy and could be carried 200 miles. Since then it has become valuable, and there is the best of reasons why it should. This bill may possess much merit. It apparently does. This amendment put in by the Senate seems fair upon its face and is a long step in advance, but it does not settle the question by any means. It is not an answer to the objections we make to these bills to say, what are you going to do about it; are you simply going to obstruct these bills; what do you want us to put in them and what sort of legislation do you want that will protect the interests of the States and individuals and the General Government? No man can answer those questions offhand. At the present time water-power lawyers are beginning to develop throughout the country, and they all take the water-power side of it, and they are filling the legal journals of the country with briefs and with arguments on the question of water power and its development and the right of the States and the rights of individuals and the rights of the General Government.

At the present time in Canada they have taken steps far in advance of anything we have attempted, and in the matter of water development in Canada they are ahead of us. In the Province of Ontario, Canada, in the last two or three years they have adopted a method of dealing with water power which may not be applicable here in this country, but which seems to suit them. They have appointed there a hydro-electric commission, and that hydro-electric commission has been given the power to appropriate land, take possession of water-power sites, and to control water-power development in the rivers, and they are leasing these water-power rights to municipalities within the Province of Ontario, and it seems to meet with general approval there and in other sections of Canada. Now, whether that would be a proper thing to do here or not I am not prepared to say. These numerous bills are each of them separate attempts to secure 50-year franchises from this Government for the purpose of developing water power in isolated localities. It is no answer to the objections made by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to say "I have no interest in the general question of water-power development; I am just interested here in this particular question." If all of these projects go through and all other similar water-power possibilities are absorbed in this way, as they will be, it will not be long until there is no water power to conserve—the trusts will have it all. Now, I do not know much about the White River in Arkansas, but I have heard within the last two or three days that the company which has attempted to secure the largest number of franchises down there is the company known as the Ozark Power Co., represented here now in the city of Washington by a very pleasant gentleman from St. Louis, who is here interested in this bill, and perhaps in other bills. He does not live in the State of Arkansas at all, but he lives in the city of St. Louis, and he is especially interested in this particular bill. Therefore I take it that his incorporators or the persons who are interested now or who will be ultimately interested—and perhaps the gentleman from Arkansas does not know who will be ultimately interested, and I do not know, either—will be somebody who lives outside of the State.

I understand the Ozark Power Co. has already secured certain rights in other portions of the White River; that high above this particular section where it is sought to put in this power plant another company—I do not remember the name now—secured a franchise some time ago by a private bill which passed through Congress, and the Ozark Co. immediately took over the other company. This same Ozark Co. is also interested in another bill reported out by this committee and asking for another franchise to build another dam at still another power site on this same river. Now, if this bill goes through granting these rights to the Dixie Power Co. in this river, what assurance have we that it will not be long before the Ozark Co. takes this particular project over? There is nothing to prevent the transfer of these franchises from the individuals who get them or from the companies who get them to any other company. Now, the mere fact that individuals are here from Tennessee asking for the right to build a dam across a river is of itself a circumstance that should compel Congress to examine carefully into the project. It takes millions of dollars to develop a river, a million dollars to build a dam and the locks that the Government might afterwards require to be built there, and individuals can not float that kind of an enterprise; and whenever we hand to individuals a franchise—and we do not know how valuable it is; there is no evidence before the committee of this House to show how valuable any of these franchises are—when we hand them that we have given them something they can sell the next day for $100,000, perhaps, and we do not know it. Most of these bills are speculative. It has not been long since a number of little companies were organized to develop power down in South Carolina, and it has not been long since the country found out that the Southern Development Co.—I think that is the name of the organization—controlled all of these power propositions and were extending their operations into other States; and we know now, at any rate I have reliable information, that the Southern Development Co. are the Duke tobacco people. They have developed power in South Carolina until at the present time they develop 260,000 horsepower of electrical energy every year, more power perhaps than is developed in any of the States in the Union except New York, where they have over 800,000 horsepower—where they have Niagara Falls—and perhaps also California and the State of Massachusetts.

I heard only yesterday, from a reliable source, that the Southern Development Co., after arranging to supply power for all these factories and arranging contracts with cities to supply the electricity with which to light their streets, and after having made it absolutely necessary for these factories and municipalities to be dependent upon them—I heard yesterday that the Southern Development Co. had notified all their patrons that as soon as the present contracts terminated they proposed to raise the price for the power they were supplying to these individuals and to these municipalities. Now, the power possible to develop in rivers is just as valuable as the coal that lies under the surface of the ground. You do exactly the same things with it, and our coal supply, we are told, is rapidly diminishing. Now, would it be right for Congress, if it could, to pass an act without any investigation granting all of this over to corporations——

Mr. GALLAGHER. And you do not know who the individuals are.

Mr. RAINEY. And that would not make it right, if you did—to go on the public lands and to give them the right over 100 square miles of territory for 50 years to mine coal and to take out all the coal they wanted to mine. Why, such a bill as that, if it passed this House, would cause a wave of opposition and indignation to sweep across this country. Why? Because people understand about coal, because they know its value, and because they have been using it for centuries in the world. They do not understand about water power, they do not understand the potential value of our rivers that flow down to the seas, and yet for hundreds of years and thousands of years, as my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has said, these rivers have been flowing on down to the seas, this power has been created every minute of every day of a million years, and has been going to waste until now, and the time has now come to develop it.

The time has come to develop it because it must be done, and because it can be utilized, and because it can be sold 200 miles away from the place where it is generated on the rivers. If the time has come when this valuable property which the Government owns can be used and can be sold—has not the time come, before we do that, to find out what we are giving away and to find out how valuable it is? Now it is proposed to turn it over under the policy embraced in the general dam act which simply provides for the restoration of the navigability of rivers after these power dams have been completed, and which attempts to do nothing else of importance. That is as far as we have gone with the question of developing a water-power policy in this country. In Norway they develop water power, and I understand it is done by the State, and they sell it to the consumer there at from $4 to $6 per horsepower.

Throughout this country we are developing water power on sites where it is easier to develop power than it is in that country, and on rivers that are bigger, and in places that require less investments of capital. Corporations are doing it, and individuals are doing it, and they are selling it to consumers at $25 per horsepower. When there is such a varying price in the amount consumers have to pay in different parts of the world to-day, does not that at least indicate that before we give all these things away we ought to find out what we are giving away, and then we ought to find out how to give it away, if we are going to give it away. But whether or not the State or National Government is entitled to receive revenues in order to protect——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Which is entitled to the revenues, the National or the State government?

Mr. RAINEY. It is a moot question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In the opinion of the gentleman.

Mr. RAINEY. My opinion would not be any better than your opinion. You are welcome to your opinion and I am welcome to mine. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] that I am not prepared to discuss at this moment that question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Are you prepared, then, to vote on it?

Mr. RAINEY. I am commencing to study this question, and I propose to form opinions on it, and I think every Member of this House ought to do it; but you can not vote intelligently on this question until you can form an opinion as to the rights of the State and the General Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman say that he ever read a law book that did not give the right of navigation to the Government and the State the use of it? Have you ever read a law book——

Mr. RAINEY. I have read a great many law books, I will say to my friend.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do you remember ever to have read one that did not concede the fact that the Government alone had control of the navigation?

Mr. RAINEY. That is the law—the common law. It always has been so. I will say to my friend from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] I hope the National Government is entitled to some revenue consumers from these plants. The question of water-power development is so new that the courts have not passed upon it yet. I will say that this question is being fought out in the courts of New York, and water-power lawyers are contending that the State can not exercise the powers it seeks to exercise over power companies in the interest of consumers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was one of the conferees on this bill and supported it, and I have my fixed and firm ideas about water power.

Mr. RAINEY. For which no man has greater respect than myself.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am very glad to know that. You stated you wanted to know whether this dam had been provided for and taken care of. Why, do you not know it to be a fact that when——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROBINSON). The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like, Mr. Speaker, a little time to express my views on this subject.

Mr. RAINEY. I will be glad to answer the gentleman's question, if I can.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When the House passes this bill, as it will do this afternoon, it will make it depend upon the water dam act, will it not?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The dam acts as passed in 1906 and 1910?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, is it not a fact that the Government requires of this party to pay toll?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not so understand it, and I have no confidence in these clauses which provide that this franchise can be revoked. The Government can not destroy property in this way, and if two or three million dollars is spent in this project the Government can not revoke this franchise without paying the men who have invested their money for their property, and the Government will not do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, who would those men pay for the use of the water?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know. The Government has not adopted that policy yet, but I am hoping it will.

A great organization in this country, the National Conservation Association, with ample capital and means, is investigating this very question at the present time, and is employing the highest legal talent in solving it. They have not yet reached a conclusion, and, if they have not, I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not compel me to do it in 20 seconds of time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to hear from you.

Mr. RAINEY. You may some day, but not now.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman think, with the great progress of this country, that we should stand still and wait for that society to make up its mind?

Mr. RAINEY. I think that we have stood still in this country as to the question of giving away these rivers from the time the bells rang out announcing the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, and if we have stood still upon this question that long, now when it becomes a vital question, no man, except those individuals and these corporations who are trying to grab off these valuable franchises, can be injured in the least by waiting a little while longer, until we find out what we are doing.

I was in this House about nine years ago when a bill passed without any opposition, by unanimous consent, because then we did not know about water power, granting to a private corporation the right to dam up the Mississippi at the city of Keokuk. And they have built there now the Keokuk Dam, one of the greatest dams in the world. We are all proud—those of us who live in the States adjoining that river—of that magnificent enterprise. It is the greatest dam in the world, perhaps, except the dam erected down on the Isthmus of Panama at Gatun and the dam erected by the British Government across the River Nile. It is nearing completion. They got that franchise without the payment of a single dollar to any State or to the National Government.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to his colleague?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know that that franchise cost them about $2,000,000 in improvements for the benefit of the General Government?

Mr. RAINEY. No. I know they have expended more than that amount, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. For the benefit of the General Government, I say?

Mr. RAINEY. No; I do not understand it so.

Mr. MANN. That is the case.

Mr. RAINEY. They built better locks there than were there before. The gentleman is right about that, but they already had locks there that were ample.

Mr. MANN. But not the same ones.

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman is right about that. They built new locks. They are not the same locks.

That dam is now nearing completion, I say, across the Mississippi River. I was informed by a stockholder of that company not over four days ago that they had made a contract, to commence next year, as soon as they generate power there—a contract with one of the traction companies in St. Louis—to furnish it with enough electric power to move its cars along its tracks in the city of St. Louis, and that the income that they expect to derive from that one contract, which, so far as I know, is not one one-thousandth part—it is certainly only a fraction—of what they will be able to produce when they fully develop this plant, will pay 5 per cent interest, the interest required to be paid on their bonds, on their entire bond issue, and the rest that they can get out of it every year is absolutely clear. In the meantime they are going through the States of Iowa and Illinois and Missouri acquiring rights of way for transmission lines. A company is making arrangements to build there in the coal section of Illinois what water-power advocates claim will be a steam plant to compete with the Keokuk Dam, where they propose to produce electricity by steam and supply the cities of Chicago and St. Louis from there. They are now arranging to build that great steam plant. It is only about 150 miles away from the Keokuk Dam. I make this prediction: I will say that I do not know anything in detail about this proposed steam plant, but I have been examining into these water-power companies and looking into their ways of doing business, and I make the prediction that they can not market their power for the purpose of moving cars along traction lines every day; they can not market their power to run factories every day, unless it is possible to supply them with power all day long and every day in the year. There are times when the Mississippi River freezes solid, and the Keokuk plant can not then develop power; and there are times when the water is low in the river, when they can not develop all the power they need.

Then, what do they need? A steam plant. That is why they are cornering coal fields there in central Illinois for the purpose of establishing a steam plant to enable the Keokuk company to supply electrical power when the Mississippi River fails, is low or is frozen over. This steam plant, we will find, is not a competitor for the Keokuk Dam, but we will find it will be a part of that project. I want to see the power facilities of our rivers developed, completely developed, but I would like to see the development occur when we determine how it ought to be done, when we have taken steps to protect the National Government and the States of this Union and individuals who, in this period of diminishing coal fields in this country, will soon need this power, and who ought to be protected by this Congress.

My position is that it is not a wise policy now to give these things away indiscriminately in advance of knowing what we are doing, and I think we will know what we are doing in a short time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman to state that this Keokuk company had arranged to dispose of not to exceed the one-thousandth part of their power?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know enough about the Keokuk company to speak positively as to this. When I said they were doing that, I meant to say that they were disposing of a relatively small amount of the power they can develop there to this one company, and that the relatively small amount they were so selling will pay the interest on all of their bond issue, and therefore they are left with tremendous profits; I do not know how much.

Mr. MANN. I want to say to the gentleman, further, that the gentleman who gave him his information was indulging in a "pipe dream."

Mr. RAINEY. He may have been, but——

Mr. MANN. It may have been because he was an enthusiastic stockholder.

Mr. RAINEY. I will say that I got my information from a stockholder of the company, and he told me that is what the company claims they can do. He has made his investment; he thinks he is going to make some money.

Mr. MANN. Those companies issue very glowing prospectuses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman from Illinois desires to speak, I would like to bring this debate to a close.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for just one minute.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] a question. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that in all of these cases of water-power improvement, where it requires an act of Congress to make improvements, Congress does have the right to place upon the grants such conditions as Congress may see proper to impose?

Mr. RAINEY. I think so; yes.

Mr. SIMS. That is the groundwork of the gentleman's whole contention?

Mr. RAINEY. No; the groundwork of my whole contention is that we do not know what we are doing.

Mr. AUSTIN. When are we going to know?

Mr. RAINEY. And my contention is that we ought to know what we are doing.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] insists that on account of some things said in debate he ought to have some time, and I yield to him 10 minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe it the duty of the American Congress—of every Member of Congress—to do practical things in the discharge of our official duties here, not to indulge in idle dreams and fancies, not to delay the development of this country until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] makes up his mind as to what the policy of the National Government should be in reference to these power propositions. He has already admitted in this discussion that for nine years this matter has been held in abeyance, awaiting some policy that might meet with the approval of the impractical and the dreamers on this and other kindred subjects.

Every water-power development means a conservation and the saving of the coal in the mountains. [Applause.] Every lock and dam on a navigable river by a private company means the expense of that improvement to private citizens and the saving of that amount to the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Every water-power development means the loss of that amount to the coal barons who sell their coal at high prices.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. It is a question of whether we will have now in this day and time and generation a cheaper motive power by the development of the water powers of the country or whether we will forever procrastinate and delay the settlement of this question and in the meantime permit those who control the steam or fuel supply of this country to continue to sell power at high prices and thus increase the cost of running every plant in America. It not only means the development of these streams for practical slack-water navigation now to every community upon them, but it means a cheaper transportation rate for the products of the farm, the factory, and the mine. It means an investment of millions of dollars in the employment of thousands of workingmen at good wages. Yet the gentleman [Mr. RAINEY], when questioned on the floor of this House, could not answer a specific question as to whether the States or the National Government should collect a royalty from water-power companies. Well, are we going to delay it until he reaches a conclusion? He says it has been a disputed question for nine years.

I asked the other day for the passage of a bill which meant a saving to the taxpayers of $3,000,000 on the initial improvement of a river that would give cheaper coal transportation to the cities and towns along the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers, and insure the maintenance and operation at private expense for all time of the locks and dams upon the Clinch River. Yet the gentleman who has addressed the House [Mr. RAINEY] objected to it. Well, if the Government insists upon the withholding of water-power rights, then we demand of the Government the immediate improvement of that river at the expense of the taxpayers of the country. Magnificent water powers in the South have been and are running to waste and will continue to do so until the theorists and dreamers of this land decide what they want to do. As a practical Member of this House and one living in the present and not in the distant future, I want to see legislation along practical lines for the people that sent us here to legislate, and not indulge in dreams and speculation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] modestly admitted the other day that in objecting to four or five of these bills he had saved the taxpayers $25,000,000. I believe that to be a pipe dream. That gentleman the other day denominated these bills a steal and a robbery. One of them comes from a district represented by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. PADGETT], and a more honorable man does not sit upon the floor of this House. [Applause.] His was a bill to dam a little river in his district—Duck River—by a private company composed of his own citizens, to develop less than 2,000 horsepower and bring into the towns of his district cheaper power. Yet it was denominated on the floor of this House a steal.

Here is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] who has been here many years. I repudiate the idea that he is back of any steal in offering and advocating a bill for water-power development in his district. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] is the author of another bill. I do not believe he could be misled or seduced or deceived into fathering a bill which was a steal or a robbery. The general dam act of the United States says the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall have authority to impose upon every one of these companies compensation to the United States for any right or privilege in the years to come. Is there not ample authority in every State of this Union to regulate the question of rates for the use of power in any county in a State? These companies can not live without an income, which they must derive largely from furnishing cities and municipalities power for street and lighting purposes. In the State of Tennessee every mayor and board of aldermen have the right to say, "You can not enter the corporation limits unless you frame your schedule of prices so and so."

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee declines to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. No man accusing me of fathering a steal can have any of my time on the floor of this House. [Applause.] There is power, under the general dam act, in the Secretary of War to protect the people of the United States. There is authority in every State legislature and every municipality to protect and safeguard the interests of consumers of power. This Congress, while Democratic, has been legislating in the interest of the people. Let them keep up that splendid record by being practical and doing something to develop the industries of the country and advance water-power projects, which means cheaper transportation on the rivers and cheaper motive power in many hamlets and cities in the land. Do not be driven from this great undertaking in the growth and development of our splendid Republic by the demagogue of this House or any man who, in order to oppose it, must unkindly and unjustly reflect upon the honor and the manhood of the men who introduced these bills in good faith. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the beautiful speeches in this academic discussion have consumed so much time I am loath to extend the debate to any great extent, and I am perfectly content to close with a very few remarks before I move the previous question, if the House will first grant me permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentlemen who have so eloquently spoken and covered such extended territory of learning and wisdom are not opposing the particular bill now in question. They are talking on general subjects, and, like Judge Longstreet's man who was out in the woods preceding the fight on the market day and was pummeling the ground and punching holes and cussing and bragging, they are simply showing how they "could have fit" if there had been issue here. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I deny that the innocent little bill involved here is helped or harmed by the Senate amendment. I yielded to that amendment because I was assured by the Senate conferees that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD], my colleague, could not pass his bill, which was very necessary to the people of his community, unless that was added. The idea that that bill gives to the State of Arkansas authority to do the things recited in it I utterly repudiate and deny.

The State of Arkansas already had the authority to do what the amendment provides. If she did have it, Congress has no power to order her to do it. If she has not the authority, Congress has no power to give it to her. I do not know whether the amendment seeks to give the authority to Arkansas or seeks to order her to do it herself, or provides that it is done by Congress. In either event it is idle and nugatory. Certainly that part of it which provides for discrimination against the citizens of other States in favor of the citizens of Arkansas is unwise and contravenes our purpose to regulate interstate commerce. Persons have a right to run their lines across the State lines. If they do, then the transmission of power across the line will be interstate commerce. The very purpose of the commerce clause of the Constitution was to prevent the citizens of one State from discriminating against the citizens of another State.

I think every State should, like my own State, understand the duties of statehood as well as the rights of statehood and recognize the difference between States which helped make the Union and States which Congress made. Rightly interpreted, there is no difference and they are on the same basis, and all of them are charged with the duty of local responsibility and government instead of throwing it onto Congress.

It would also be well for statesmen to learn and observe the difference between the principle and form of government obtaining in this country and in Canada. The State of Georgia successfully controls and regulates the transmission, distribution, and rates of power and light within her borders. Every other State that is worthy of statehood can and should do the same.

I did not stop to quarrel about my views. I wanted this water power to be developed and I yielded. My colleague from Alabama, Judge RICHARDSON, thoroughly agrees with the doctrine that where a State grants authority to a corporation or an individual owning the land and the shoals, and the Government will grant its consent under conditions for water power to be developed in such a way that it will not obstruct navigation, then the State and the citizens have the right to the revenue and to control the same and not the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to reply to the remarks just made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]. I do so as one of the conferees who differs with my friend from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]; and to such an extent did we differ that we struck out the statement entirely, and we unanimously reported the bill. I favored the bill as the same was signed by the conferees; but I have fixed and matured views on water powers, but I deem it unnecessary to apply my views to this Arkansas dam.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the gentleman signed the conference report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did.

Mr. MANN. There is no division as to that part of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course there is no division, but there was a division, a marked division, in the writing out of that conference report before the signing of it, and then afterwards we altered it.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That portion of the conference report to which I objected is as follows:

SEC. 2. It is understood and this act is enacted on the express conditions, that the State of Arkansas shall first consent to the construction of said dam and shall have authority to fix from time to time reasonable charges for power and current furnished by the said Dixie Power Co., to regulate the service for the electric current and power produced by requiring that the same shall be furnished to all proposed consumers who apply in good faith to purchase the same without discrimination as to service and charge, and in the order in which application therefor is made, except that in the event power and current sufficient to supply all applicants can not be produced that preference shall always be given to such applicants as shall consume the same within the said State. Upon the expiration of the authorization granted by this act the said dam shall, at the option of the said State, become the property of the State of Arkansas, or any grantee of hers, upon the payment to the said Dixie Power Co. of the value thereof as a structure, disconnected from any license, grant, permission, or franchise, as said value may be ascertained by negotiation, or, in default of agreement, by fair arbitration or by judicial proceeding, as said Dixie Power Co. shall elect.

It now is due to myself to say I did not believe that reference to the rights of the State of Arkansas had anything on earth to do with the Dixie Power Co. It could not add anything to the rights of the State of Arkansas and could not take anything from the State rights, and especially in relation to water powers in dams or otherwise.

I believe that the act to regulate water power, outside of its provisions to regulate navigation of navigable streams, will be yet passed on by the courts, and I hope a case will soon reach the Supreme Court of the United States and give the country light on this important question—upon what responsibility is charged on these dams and from what source.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not acting upon any idea that I will enforce my views or stop the machine. I have stated to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who is a doctor and not a lawyer, and whose views therefore on these questions are entitled to be received with toleration, that I was willing, perfectly willing, to have hearings to amend the general dam act if he or other gentlemen would show to us defects in it or meritorious provisions which ought to be added, and we intend to do that. We intend to appoint a subcommittee to summon every solitary one of these gentlemen before it and find out just how many divergent views and opinions there are, and what things ought or ought not to be put in as amendments, and whenever that is done we will report it to the House. We expect to do that at the next session of Congress. I have further told the distinguished gentleman, in reply to what he said about it, that instead of objecting to particular bills and obstructing progress and the development of water power he should rise and offer some amendments to the bill, but he was afraid he could not pass them, and that did not suit him.

It was easier simply to object to the consideration of the bill than it was to offer an amendment and make a suggestion to the House and let the House pass upon it. Now our idea is to have such authority in the general dam act which we have adopted under which we refer bills to the Secretary of War. We think the general dam act is sufficient, but we are ready to amend it if necessary. If the Secretary of War and the Department of Justice do not do their duty, we can not help it. I admit I am not perfectly qualified for trust busting, and to hear men talk there are a great many who can beat me at trust busting, but I have never seen the practical and beneficial results of any of their work in that respect, and I say, Mr. Speaker, that I do hate, with a pure and holy hatred, any combination which excludes or limits the rights and opportunities of fellow men and pockets unjust profits by combinations and trusts, raising prices to consumers and putting men out of employment and destroying their opportunities. [Applause.]

I hate them with as much red-eyed hostility as any progressive reforming apostle of pretended advancement who is or ever was in this country. But I want something practical. If there is any one of these cases that is bottomed in rascality, of which they did not learn in time to come before the committee with the information, they can get up and state it to the House. Specify—general innuendoes and insinuations do not become great statesmen. Let them get up and say thus and thus is true of a particular case. This man is a rascal; he has gobbled up all the opportunities, all the steals, all the resources, and I will move to strike out the item from an omnibus bill, or I will vote to defeat this or any other bill. But they are not specifying any particular thing. Now, the gentleman from Illinois, the last speaker, by beloved friend RAINEY, for whom I have great affection and regard, excuses his performance in this case, in my judgment, by saying he has just commenced to study the question. Well, we have been studying this question for many years. There is nothing he has named that happened since the first general dam act was passed. Nothing wrong has developed since the general dam act was passed, as brought out by my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. If there is, it is the fault of the Secretary of War. It is up to him to fix any condition under the sun on which these dams can be built. Now, in all fairness I say to my beloved friend from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] he ought not to stop us at this point. He halts the progress of development, he deprives men of the present generation, whose lives are growing shorter every day, of opportunity while he is studying the question. We want him to study it. The gentleman has studied lots of questions and has gained knowledge from them and benefited the world thereby, for he is straight on most of them; but while he is studying water power and learning the difference between a dam which private capital builds, by the consent of the Government, on which the private owners have the right to take the profits and which the States have the right to control, and those which the Government builds in the improvement of navigation, which pays the expense of it, and thereby becomes the riparian owner and proprietor as well as the Government—while the gentleman is learning that distinction, which we have learned years and years ago, let him not obstruct these projects. Let progress go on; let us pass these little bills, and no man, Mr. Speaker, will be more ready than I to vote down any bill at any stage where it is necessary to throttle a trust or deprive unholy cupidity of unjust and ill-gotten gains. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had an hour. He has not consumed his hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not have an hour when he began his last speech.

Mr. MANN. Certainly, the gentleman did not consume all his time. I took the floor in my own right in the first place. I did not get time.

The SPEAKER. Possibly the Chair is entirely wrong about it, but the gentleman from Georgia first got the floor, and he was entitled to an hour.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the Speaker is in error; the gentleman from Illinois took the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois spoke in his own right. How much time did the gentleman from Georgia parcel out?

Mr. ADAMSON. Ten, fifteen, or twenty minutes since I took the floor. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has 20 minutes left.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am not stingy about a little matter of this sort myself. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit the following report:

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report (No. 1050), to accompany H. R. 25882:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25882) to authorize the construction of certain dams across various navigable waters of the United States therein specified, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The first six projects mentioned in H. R. 25882 were each separately reported to the House, placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, on threat of objection postponed for two weeks, and then all but one stricken from the Unanimous Consent Calendar on single objection, the objector stating "because the Government has as yet adopted no fixed policy with reference to the water powers in our navigable rivers, and that all of these reports are very meager and insufficient." In point of fact, each bill was accompanied by a report containing the following, which in the judgment of this committee was not meager nor insufficient.

It was carefully and fully prepared by Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, who understands the subject and was a member of the subcommittee of able and faithful members who prepared the amendments of 1910 hereinafter referred to.

"The War Department sent to the committee the foregoing letter from the Chief of Engineers approving the bill, but the Secretary of War transmitted a report proposing some changes in the bill which we are unable to approve for the reason that every suggestion he makes is already provided for in the general dam act. The great diversity of circumstances and conditions presented in the multitude of projects seeking authorization by Congress render it difficult and cumbersome to enact extended legislation to prescribe and provide detailed regulations and specific requirements in the bill authorizing each project. Therefore Congress wisely standardized the form of the bills granting the consent of Congress and enacted the general dam act conferring upon the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers full power and authority to consider all the questions now raised by the Secretary of War and dispose of them absolutely in each case as conditions of the approval of the plans and specifications presented to him without which no dam can be lawfully constructed. Having by the general dam act conferred absolute power upon the Secretary of War to dispose of all these subjects, to the full protection of the public and the promotion of navigation, we deem it unwise to nullify a beneficial purpose of the general dam act by returning to the suggested old method of incorporating in each bill all legislation upon the subject.

"In the report upon this bill the Secretary of War has suggested amendments in two respects: First, for additional compensation to the United States because of the use of its rights in the generation of the power and the consequent profit from such use; secondly, some reservation for the control by Congress of the rates to be charged to consumers.

"The committee has carefully considered these suggested amendments and is of the opinion that the substance of them is fully covered by the provisions of the general dam act of 1910. The second proviso to section 1 of this act reads as follows:

"'That in acting upon said plans as aforesaid the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War shall consider the bearing of said structure upon a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway over which it is to be constructed, with a view to the promotion of its navigable quality and for the full development of water power; and, as a part of the conditions and stipulations imposed by them, shall provide for improving and developing navigation, and fix such charge or charges for the privilege granted as may be sufficient to restore conditions with respect to navigability as existing at the time such privilege be granted or reimburse the United States for doing the same, and for such additional or further expense as may be incurred by the United States with reference to such project, including the cost of any investigations necessary for approval of plans and of such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interests of the United States.'

"This requires the Secretary of War to consider a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the whole waterway affected by the proposed dam, both for navigation and water power, and as a part of his approval of the plans to provide for the improvement of navigation and 'to fix such charge for the privilege granted as may be sufficient to restore condition in respect to navigability as existed at the time such privilege be granted.'

"In case where the United States has not made improvements and has no property rights in connection with the waterway, this proviso authorizes the Secretary of War to fix charges for whatever rights of the United States which now or can exist with respect to navigability of this waterway in any way affected by this project. The Secretary of War may impose such proper charge as he may see fit upon this basis and within this limit. So the committee does not believe that any further extension of authority is necessary, and a construction of this language in the existing law can secure all the Secretary of War desires within the limits of the constitutional powers of Congress.

"Second. The suggestion that Congress reserve the right to supervise the price charged to consumers is guarded by the general dam act by the right to 'alter, amend, or repeal this act' and by the expiration of the franchise at the end of 50 years. The proper authority to control the charge to consumers are the several States, in the exercise of their police powers, while the United States can only act subordinate to them, by conditions made a part of its grant authorizing the construction of the dam. This subordinate right of control should only be exercised in flagrant cases where the State is unable and unwilling to properly perform its functions. Such cases should not be assumed. But if any shall arise in the future, Congress may amend its grant by fixing conditions as to proper charges for the consumers, if it shall be shown to be necessary for their protection. But now it does not seem wise to presume that the several States will be derelict in their responsibility to their own people."

Neither does your committee acknowledge that the Government has not as yet a fixed policy as to water power in our navigable streams. On the contrary your committee for seven or eight years worked upon a general scheme whereby the Government could consent in uniform method to improve water power without in any way conflicting with the activity of the Government in developing and maintaining the navigation of rivers. Finally our investigations culminated in a bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], one of the most astute and profound statesmen of the present generation.

Your committee has observed the vast number of projects demanding the aid of the Government to perfect navigation, and the hundreds of millions of money required for that purpose, as well as the improbability, if not inability, of the Government's undertaking such vast expense within any reasonable period of time. Therefore we conceived the idea that in the shoaly rivers of the country, which could not be navigated without the expense of locks and dams, yet in which shoals owned by private citizens offer tempting opportunities for the development of water power and the conservation of our resources, the Government might avoid the great expense of building dams and locks, hasten the navigability of the rivers, and at the same time permit the development of water power by private capital by granting the consent of Congress that private capital and enterprises might erect dams in such streams, under the direction and with the approval of the War Department, imposing such conditions and requirements as would prevent such development of water power from interfering in any respect with any movement the Government might afterwards wish to make to improve the navigability of the stream, but on the contrary would advance the interests of navigation and help the Government by eliminating the expense of the dams.

The bill introduced by Mr. MANN in pursuance of that idea became a law known as the general dam act, and was regarded by the leading statesmen of the country and the business interests of the country as a happy solution of the question. We had not sought to interfere with or regulate those projects undertaken by the Government itself at the cost of the Treasury for the improvement of navigation, all of which were under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and depend upon an entirely different principle, or rather a radical variation of the same principle. In those cases the Government, becoming the proprietor of the soil, assumes the position as proprietor as well as governor, and while it governs all the operations and regulations as governor it has the right to take the profits and manage all the private details of same as the owner. With those dams we have nothing to do. Some persons, however, either without sufficient acquaintance with the system and the proper distinctions, or differing in judgment from us as to the correctness of those distinctions and the sufficiency of the general dam act, demand more detailed legislation, and pursuant to that demand the late President took a position, sustained by a few Members of the House and Senate, which resulted in arresting the development of water power in the country, and to that extent the development of navigation in those shoaly streams, by suspending for several years the granting of the consent of Congress to such projects. We believed the act needed approval and enforcement rather than amendment, but while not conceding any insufficiency in the terms of the general dam act, your committee, anxious to secure the development of our resources and their conservation for the benefit of the people, proceeded to consider amendments to the general dam act. The distinguished author of the general dam act, Mr. MANN, of Illinois, and the author of this bill and report both opposed any amendment to it on the ground that under its terms the interests of the Government were fully protected and the powers of the Government fully recognized, contending that the granting of the consent of Congress was wisely and succinctly standardized, making it only necessary by individual bills to refer each project to the discretion of the Secretary of War and placing upon that official the responsibility, while vesting him with plenary power, to couple with his approval of the plans and specifications all conditions and requirements necessary to protect the interests of navigation, the good of the country and public, and the interests of the Government in all respects. In order to secure action, remove objections, and resume the process of development in this respect, we yielded our objections, and by the Stevens bill of 1910, after full conference and clear understanding with the ex-President, who had given force to the objections, the War Department, the incumbent President, and every person and official known to have insisted on such amendments, the bill was amended, and it now reads as follows:

GENERAL DAM LAWS.

[Public, No. 262.]

An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters.

Be it enacted, etc., That when, hereafter, authority is granted by Congress to any persons to construct and maintain a dam for water power or other purposes across any of the navigable waters of the United States, such dams shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, or until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such dam and accessory works; and when the plans for any dam to be constructed under the provisions of this act have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of such plans has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: Provided, That in approving said plans and location such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that such persons shall construct, maintain, and operate, without expense to the United States, in connection with said dam and appurtenant works, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers at any time may deem necessary in the interest of navigation, in accordance with such plans as they may approve, and also that whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of a lock, or other structures for navigation purposes, in connection with such dam, the person owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States a free use of water power for building and operating such constructions.

SEC. 2. That the right is hereby reserved to the United States to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam built under the provisions of this act, a suitable lock or locks, or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control the said dam and the level of the pool caused by said dam to such an extent as may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation.

SEC. 3. That the person, company, or corporation building, maintaining, or operating any dam and appurtenant works, under the provisions of this act, shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property either by overflow or otherwise. The persons owning or operating any such dam shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe.

SEC. 4. That all rights acquired under this act shall cease and be determined if the person, company, or corporation acquiring such rights shall, at any time, fail to comply with any of the provisions and requirements of the act, or with any of the stipulations and conditions that may be prescribed as aforesaid by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That any persons who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and any persons who shall be guilty of a violation of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every month such persons shall remain in default shall be deemed a new offense and subject such persons to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to the penalties above described the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may, upon refusal of the persons owning or controlling any such dam and accessory works to comply with any lawful order issued by the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers in regard thereto, cause the removal of such dam and accessory works as an obstruction to navigation at the expense of the persons owning or controlling such dam, and suit for such expense may be brought in the name of the United States against such persons, and recovery had for such expense in any court of competent jurisdiction; and the removal of any structures erected or maintained in violation of the provisions of this act or the order or direction of the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers made in pursuance thereof may be enforced by injunction, mandamus, or other summary process, upon application to the circuit court in the district in which such structure may, in whole or in part, exist, and proper proceedings to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States at the request of the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to navigation created by the construction of any dam under this act, the cause or question arising may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in any district in which any portion of said obstruction or dam touches.

SEC. 6. That whenever Congress shall hereafter by law authorize the construction of any dam across any of the navigable waters of the United States, and no time for the commencement and completion of such dam is named in said act, the authority thereby granted shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam authorized in such act be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of such act.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be constructed in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof to the owner or owners or any other persons interested in any dam which shall have been constructed in accordance with its provisions.

SEC. 8. That the word "persons" as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and the plural, as the case demands, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations.

Approved, June 21, 1906.

[Public—No. 246. H. R. 24375.]

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That when authority has been or may hereafter be granted by Congress, either directly or indirectly or by any official or officials of the United States, to any persons, to construct and maintain a dam for water power or other purpose across or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, such dam shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for such dam and all accessory works, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such dam and accessory works; and when the plans and specifications for any dam to be constructed under the provisions of this act have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans or specifications either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of such plans or specifications has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: Provided, That in approving the plans, specifications, and location for any dam, such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that the persons constructing or maintaining such dam shall construct, maintain, and operate, without expense to the United States, in connection with any dam and accessory or appurtenant works, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structure or structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers or Congress at any time may deem necessary in the interests of navigation, in accordance with such plans as they may approve, and also that whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of a lock or other structures for navigation purposes in connection with such dam, the persons owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States free water power or power generated from water power for building and operating such constructions: Provided further, That in acting upon said plans as aforesaid the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War shall consider the bearing of said structure upon a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway over which it is to be constructed with a view to the promotion of its navigable quality and for the full development of water power, and, as a part of the conditions and stipulations imposed by them, shall provide for improving and developing navigation, and fix such charge or charges for the privilege granted as may be sufficient to restore conditions with respect to navigability as existing at the time such privilege be granted or reimburse the United States for doing the same, and for such additional or further expense as may be incurred by the United States with reference to such project, including the cost of any investigations necessary for approval of plans and of such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interests of the United States: Provided further, That the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War are hereby authorized and directed to fix and collect just and proper charge or charges for the privilege granted to all dams authorized and constructed under the provisions of this act which shall receive any direct benefit from the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of storage reservoirs at the headwaters of any navigable streams, or from the acquisition, holding, and maintenance of any forested watershed, or lands located by the United States at the headwaters of any navigable stream, wherever such shall be, for the development, improvement, or preservation of navigation in such streams in which such dams may be constructed.

"SEC. 2. That the right is hereby reserved to the United States to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam built in accordance with the provisions of this act, a suitable lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control the said dam and the level of the pool caused by said dam to such an extent as may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation.

"SEC. 3. That the persons constructing, maintaining, or operating any dam or appurtenant or accessory works, in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise. The persons owning or operating any such dam, or accessory works, subject to the provisions of this act, shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe, and for failure so to do in any respect shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not less than $500, and each month of such failure shall constitute a separate offense and subject such persons to additional penalties therefor.

"SEC. 4. That all rights acquired under this act shall cease and be determined if the person, company, or corporation acquiring such rights shall, at any time, fail, after receiving reasonable notice thereof, to comply with any of the provisions and requirements of the act, or with any of the stipulations and conditions that may be prescribed as aforesaid by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, including the payment into the Treasury of the United States of the charges provided for by section 1 of this act: Provided, That Congress may revoke any rights conferred in pursuance of this act whenever it is necessary for public use, and, in the event of any such revocation by Congress, the United States shall pay the owners of any dam and appurtenant works built under authority of this act, as full compensation, the reasonable value thereof, exclusive of the value of the authority or franchise granted, such reasonable value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of War and the said owners, and in case they can not agree, then by proceedings instituted in the United States circuit court for the condemnation of such properties: And provided also, That the authority granted under or in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall terminate at the end of a period not to exceed 50 years from the date of the original approval of the project under this act, unless sooner revoked as herein provided or Congress shall otherwise direct: Provided, however, That this limitation shall not apply to any corporation or individual heretofore authorized by the United States, or by any State, to construct a dam in or across a navigable waterway, upon which dam expenditures of money have heretofore been made in reliance upon such grant or grants.

"SEC. 5. That any persons who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and any persons who shall be guilty of a violation of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every month such persons shall remain in default shall be deemed a new offense and subject such persons to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to the penalties above described the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may, upon refusal of the persons owning or controlling any such dam and accessory works to comply with any lawful order issued by the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers in regard thereto, cause the removal of such dam and accessory works as an obstruction to navigation at the expense of the persons owning or controlling such dam, and suit for such expense may be brought in the name of the United States against such persons and recovery had for such expense in any court of competent jurisdiction. Said provision as to recovery of expense shall not apply wherever the United States has been previously reimbursed for such removal; and the removal of any structures erected or maintained in violation of the provisions of this act or the order or direction of the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers made in pursuance thereof may be enforced by injunction, mandamus, or other summary process, upon application to the circuit court in the district in which such structure may, in whole or in part, exist, and proper proceedings to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States at the request of the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to navigation created by the construction of any dam under this act the cause or question arising may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in any district in which any portion of said obstruction or dam touches.

"SEC. 6. That whenever Congress shall hereafter by law authorize the construction of any dam across any of the navigable waters of the United States, and no time for the commencement and completion of such dam is named in said act, the authority thereby granted shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam authorized in such act be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of such act.

"SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be constructed in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof to the owner or owners or any other persons interested in any dam which shall have been constructed in accordance with its provisions.

"SEC. 8. That the word 'persons' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and the plural, as the case demands, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations. The word 'dam' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and the plural, as the case demands."

Approved, June 23, 1910.

Your committee submits to the judgment of a candid world as well as to the statesmen and lawyers in the House and out, if the act as amended does not present and adopt a fixed policy with reference to the water powers in our navigable rivers. A commission, known as the National Waterways Commission, composed of able statesmen of every shade of opinion, objection, and notion on that subject, has thoroughly considered the questions in all their aspects and details, and in conclusion advise that for the present we proceed as we have been proceeding. The Secretary of War, however, taking up some old suggestions that were insisted upon before the amendment of 1910, has demanded that each of these bills be amended so as to incorporate certain restrictions which the general dam act already permits the Secretary of War to impose in each case as conditions of approval if he sees proper. We can not concur in those suggestions, because one wise purpose of the general dam act was to avoid prolixity and multiplicity of detail in each separate bill, and the terms of that bill conferred upon the Secretary of War plenary power to impose those conditions. We have to consider it unwise to adopt his suggestion and thereby forego that much benefit of the general dam act, and we have disregarded his suggestion as to the eight projects in this bill.

The Corps of Engineers and the President are not in accord with the Secretary of War in his demands, and the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers is favorable to those eight bills; therefore we have not seen proper to adopt the recommendation of the Secretary of War, but reported the bills permitting the construction, maintenance, and operation in accordance with the general dam act as amended in 1910. Two of these bills have not at this time been reported to us by the War Department, and it is not usual for us to report bills until that is done, at least until some sort of report is made for us to consider and present to the House; but in one of these cases, No. 25881, the committee has been informed reliably that the project can not fail to be favorably reported by the War Department, because it is proposed to erect a dam on a site already selected and approved by the Engineers of the War Department for the erection of Dam 18 on the Coosa River, and the proposition offered in this project is that private capital will relieve the Government of that expense, if this consent is granted, and erect that dam in which a lock may subsequently be placed, on such terms as the Secretary of War sees proper to impose. Of course we expect from the Secretary of War the same letter, in substance, which he has adopted as to the eight bills in which we can not concur, and therefore we deem it unnecessary to wait for his letter. The other bill, No. 25592, we are advised will be favorably reported by the Chief of Engineers and accompanied by the same letter which the Secretary of War has used in the other cases. Being unable to concur in his propositions, we deem it unnecessary to wait for that letter. If, however, the report from the War Department should present other valid objections not now anticipated the committee will frankly bring the information to the attention of the House and ask to amend by eliminating this project.

We realize that combinations of capital monopolize water-power sites in the country, prevent the improvement of those they can not utilize profitably by holding them idle and unimproved, and use all arts and devices, just as combined capital does in every other activity, to oppress and wrong the public to its own gain, the ill-gotten profits of the promoters and bondholders if not stockholders. We reprobate the evil, and we seek jealously to guard against that and all other evil which might be incident to the encouragement of these projects, but we think those evil combinations ought to be broken up by prosecution for violation of the antitrust law, and we think the vigilance, wisdom, and activity of the War Department ought to place such conditions and restrictions upon the approval of the plans and specifications as will guard the interests of the Government, prevent as far as possible improper conduct on the part of those operating the project, and promote the interests of navigation, while permitting business development. While we wish to give effect to the all-powerful arm of the General Government in the exercise of its legitimate functions, we wish carefully to guard the exercise of those functions so as to prevent the infliction by such exercise and incident thereto of harm and injury to property rights and the personal right of the citizens of the country, being careful not to impair by activities of the General Government local responsibility or local authority.

Whether the general dam act must again be amended so as to grant the demands of certain statesmen for more specific restrictions is a question for Congress to decide, but we have not now time to decide it. It is important and ought to be done carefully and cautiously, and we have the support of the General National Waterways Commission in that position. Yet Congress is about to adjourn, and these projects are pressing. They ought not to be delayed on account of the notions of particular individuals who have perhaps never given the subject that consideration which might lead them to different conclusions.

The author of this bill has suggested that in the hope of satisfying all objectors we add the provision that the consent of Congress to these projects shall be subject to any amendment that Congress may hereafter make to the general dam act, but it was objected by leading Members of the House and the Senate that such provision would produce such uncertainty as to render it impossible to finance an enterprise, and those statesmen further insisted, as we insisted in those other individual reports, that the Government has ample power to protect by the reservation of the right of amendment, alteration, and repeal, but your committee is so anxious to avoid delay and retardation of development in water power and navigation under the scheme of the general dam act that your committee is perfectly willing and intends at the next session of Congress to take up all the suggestions of the National Waterways Commission in the consideration of bills now before your committee, and if it is found requisite to the safety and interest of the Government and the conservation of resources of the people to make any amendments suggested, your committee will certainly report them to this House for its action, and so anxious are we that the good work should go on that we are willing, as some of us did in the case of the amendment of 1910, to yield our convictions on the subject in order to secure peace and progress.

It is hoped that this report will not be considered too meager, and that pending the consideration of amendments to the general dam act the House will concur with us and pass this bill granting the consent of Congress to these projects. It is believed that none of them is obnoxious to any of the objections raised, that no alarm need be felt as to granting the consent of Congress to them pending the consideration of the amendments to the general dam act. If there are specific reasons why any particular one or more of them should be rejected, which reasons have escaped the attention of your committee, it would be easy and more fair to the authors of the projects and to the public for those who discover such objections to specify them, and your committee will gladly cooperate in eliminating any such project from the bill.

[Mr KENNEDY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes none.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill, and ask that it be considered on Tuesday morning next as to whether or not the conferees will be appointed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish the conferees appointed now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] has objections to it in connection with the West claim.

The SPEAKER. Now, what is the motion of the gentleman?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The request is to call up the bill on next Tuesday morning and make it a special order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, let me make a suggestion, if the gentleman will yield. I think what the gentleman desires to do is this: That on Tuesday morning next, after the reading of the Journal, it shall be in order to take up the Indian appropriation bill and consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that all the amendments be disagreed to, with the exception of one amendment which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] is interested in, and about that he may make a motion to concur. That, I think, is what is desired.

The SPEAKER. Where is this bill now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent now that on Tuesday next the bill may be taken from the Speaker's table and the Senate amendments be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that on next Tuesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the Indian appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's table and that the Senate amendments be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report upon the bill H. R. 22043.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22043) to authorize additional aid to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report be read in lieu of the statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report was read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1060).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22043) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to that part of the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, striking out the following words: "The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to station the light vessel for which appropriation was made in the act of May 27, 1908, or any other light vessel at such position in the vicinity of Frying Pan Shoals as he may determine to be most advantageous to navigation"; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the Senate recede from that part of its amendment numbered 4 which reads as follows: "That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase a site, and to construct a wharf and buildings and purchase the necessary equipment, so far as funds may permit, for a depot for the sixth lighthouse district, at a cost not to exceed $125,000."

W. C. ADAMSON,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
F. C. STEVENS,
Managers on the part of the House.

KNUTE NELSON,
THEO. E. BURTON,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

By the terms of the conference agreement between the managers of the two Houses the House recedes on amendment No. 1 and part of No. 4, made by the Senate, while the Senate recedes from and abandons the other 18 amendments and part of No. 4, which propose authorizations in the aggregate amounting to about three-quarters of a million dollars. These 14 amendments and a part of one the House conferees could not accept, first, because they operated to change the character of the bill from a special urgent deficiency bill to meet emergencies into a general omnibus bill for aids to navigation, proposing an amount which we did not think at this time the House was willing to authorize; second, the parliamentary situation was such that we could not, in fairness to the Members of the House, accept them, because the Senate amendments represented projects of interest to various parts of the country, while other projects in which House Members were vitally interested could not be placed in the bill in order to equalize and render justice, because they were not in issue between the two Houses and could not, under the rule, be added. We thought it wiser to exclude them all, and in the future, when we are ready for it, prepare and pass a general omnibus bill fair to all interests and localities, Members, and Senators in so far as such projects may be necessary to promote the good of the service.

The two items which the managers on the part of the House saw proper to recede on and accept are No. 1 and No. 4. No. 1 authorizes two lightships, which are not only needed, but urgently needed, as shown by the following statement:

Of the 64 light vessels in the Lighthouse Service 1 is 63 years old and 8 others are over 50 years old. To maintain properly this number of light vessels, permitting them to be overhauled as needed and the older vessels to be replaced as they become worn out and unseaworthy, it is necessary that provision be made for the building of several new vessels each year. One vessel, No 28, has been condemned during the past year, and two others, No. 29 and No. 50, are in a condition which permits of their use only on protected stations.

It is proposed to use the appropriation of $250,000, the amount provided for in this bill, in constructing two new light vessels, to cost approximately $140,000 and $110,000, respectively. The larger vessel would probably be placed at Nantucket Shoals, which is the most important light-vessel station in this service, being the first aid to navigation sighted by trans-Atlantic steamers bound to the port of New York.

This vessel would be so designed that she could be maintained on her station for long intervals without likelihood of being displaced by storm, and with sufficient capacity to carry provisions and supplies for a long interval.

The smaller vessel, as well as the vessel which would be relieved at Nantucket, would be available for use at other light-vessel stations, and to relieve vessels worn out in service or vessels requiring periodical repairs. The present complement of light vessels is not sufficient to permit withdrawing various vessels from their stations as frequently as should be done for the docking and annual overhaul which is necessary to prolong their usefulness.

Therefore, regarding them as of the same emergency character with the items in the original bill agreed upon, we thought it wise to accept them; therefore we receded from amendment No. 1.

We receded from a part of amendment No. 4 for the reason that the lightship which the original bill proposed to authorize the Secretary to remove from the present station we found to be necessary where it is, and that if it should be removed, as we originally proposed, it would necessitate the authorization of another lightship. Therefore we deemed it wise and economical, on the showing made, to recede from that part of the amendment and allow the lightship to remain at the station now located by law.

W. C. ADAMSON,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
F. C. STEVENS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. On amendment 4, as I understand from the report, if I have read it correctly, both the House and the Senate provisions go out?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; that is right. The first part of amendment 4.

Mr. MANN. Neither one remains in?

Mr. ADAMSON. The vessel remains where it is, and depot goes out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if under this arrangement the Goose Island Light item goes out?

Mr. ADAMSON. Every single one proposed by the Senate goes out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that on the morning of the legislative day following the completion of the general deficiency bill, after the reading of the Journal, I will move to take up for consideration the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The general deficiency bill will undoubtedly take Friday and Saturday—that is, to-morrow and the next day. Next Monday is unanimous-consent day, and the gentleman can not come in then. It is set apart for unanimous consent.

Mr. PADGETT. I will call it up on Tuesday morning.

Mr. MANN. The Indian bill is fixed for Tuesday, and will take a little while. The gentleman will then proceed after the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill are disposed of?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; that is my idea.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] notifies the House that on next Tuesday, immediately after the Senate amendments on the Indian appropriation bill are disposed of, he will call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565).

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 22043. An act to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes;

S. 6340. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6978. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5623. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 20347. An act to authorize the Dixie Power Co. to construct a dam across White River at or near Cotter, Ark.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 25069. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes;

H. R. 24450. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes;

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. COPLEY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William P. Fullmer, Sixty-second Congress, first session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

DELAWARE TRANSPORTATION CO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 22111) for the relief of the Delaware Transportation Co., owner of the American steamer Dorothy, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion to concur in the Senate amendments was agreed to.

LAWS RELATIVE TO SEAMEN.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for further consideration the bill (H. R. 23673) to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to prevent unskilled manning of American vessels, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] calls up the seamen's bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Beginning on page 11, line 14 of the bill, the Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That section 24 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," approved December 21, 1898, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. That section 10 of chapter 121 of the laws of 1884, as amended by section 3 of chapter 421 of the laws of 1886, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10 (a). That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to make any order or note or any other evidence of indebtedness therefor to any other person, or to pay any person, for the shipment of seamen when payment is deducted or to be deducted from a seaman's wages. Any person violating any of the foregoing provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100, and may also be imprisoned for a period of not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court. The payment of such advance wages or allotment shall in no case except as herein provided absolve the vessel or the master or the owner thereof from the full payment of wages after the same shall have been actually earned, and shall be no defense to a libel suit or action for the recovery of such wages. If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment as seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment, he shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

"'(b) That it shall be lawful for any seaman to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of any portion of the wages he may earn to his grandparents, parents, wife, sister, or children.

"'(c) That no allotment shall be valid unless signed by and approved by the shipping commissioner. It shall be the duty of the said commissioner to examine such allotments and the parties to them and enforce compliance with the law. All stipulations for the allotment of any part of the wages of a seaman during his absence which are made at the commencement of the voyage shall be inserted in the agreement and shall state the amounts and times of the payments to be made and the persons to whom the payments are to be made.

"'(d) That no allotment except as provided for in this section shall be lawful. Any person who shall falsely claim to be such relation, as above described, of a seaman under this section shall for every such offense be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court.

"'(e) That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels as to vessels of the United States, and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for similar violation.

"'The master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with.

"'(f) That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the Commissioner of Navigation shall make regulations to carry out this section.'"

SEC. 11. That section 4536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4536. No wages due or accruing to any seaman or apprentice shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and every payment of wages to a seaman or apprentice shall be valid in law, notwithstanding any previous sale or assignment of wages or of any attachment, encumbrance, or arrestment thereon; and no assignment or sale of wages or of salvage made prior to the accruing thereof shall bind the party making the same, except such allotments as are authorized by this title. This section shall apply to fishermen employed on fishing vessels as well as to other seamen."

SEC. 12. That no vessel, except those navigating rivers exclusively and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers, are of a rating not less than able seaman: Provided, That no vessel carrying passengers, except those navigating rivers and harbors exclusively, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she shall have a sufficient crew to man each lifeboat with not less than two men of the rating of able seaman or higher.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEFLIN). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph. It is this:

Page 13, line 21, after the word "States," insert the words "to any agreement made in American ports."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 21, after the word "States," insert the words "to any agreement made in American ports."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I will explain the purpose of the amendment. We have prescribed in the other portions of this section that it shall be unlawful to pay wages in advance to any seaman or to make any note or any evidence of such indebtedness, and that if payment is made repayment can be enforced in American courts. Then there is provided a punishment in American courts for violation of this section.

Now, I call the attention of the House to the fact that a contract that is made between two foreign subjects in a foreign country, a contract that is carried out upon a foreign ship, although that ship is in an American port, is a foreign contract, and that ship is deemed to be foreign soil so long as such contract, in being carried out, does not disturb the peace of this country or affect our rights. The authorities are uniform upon that question, and yet we propose here in this portion of the bill that if a British shipowner or other foreign shipowner pays in advance a portion of the wages of a British seaman in a British port, when that vessel comes into our port that contract is not only void, but that the owner of the vessel shall be imprisoned.

Now, that being a contract made abroad, between foreign subjects, being carried entirely upon the vessel, is in foreign territory, and we have no authority to enforce it; and I, for one, do not think we ought to attempt any such legislation as that, even if we could enforce it. I do not believe that this Government ought to attempt to tell the shipowners of Germany, England, Japan, and the other foreign nations how they shall pay their sailors, what contracts that they make in foreign ports, unless a portion of it is carried in our ports in some way that will interfere with the rights of American citizens.

As I said before, the authorities are clear, and, so far as I know, uniform upon that proposition. But even if we could do it, are we going to do it? Do you think that Germany or Japan or England is going to permit this country to tell her what kind of a contract her subjects are going to make with their own sailors in their country, in order that their vessels may come into our ports?

We have been hearing a great deal recently about the violation of the treaty with Great Britain with regard to the Panama Canal. But here we propose to violate every treaty that we have with foreign nations and absolutely to undertake to punish their citizens for making a legal contract in their own country, a contract that in no way concerns us.

The other day when the question was up the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] called my attention to the fact that this applied only to American ports, as he understood it. But I call his attention to the fact that the proviso that was in the original section has been stricken out, and I shall offer that also as an amendment.

I can see no good reason why we should get into complications with foreign countries over such a frivolous matter as this. It is small to us, but not to them, and they are not going to submit to it. And we know we can not enforce such a statute, and we know that we have no intention of trying.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The purpose of this legislation, if there is any purpose in it, is simply a political one; simply an attempt now, before the campaign, to deceive some one; because there is no man in this House who believes that this Government is going to attempt, without at least first taking the question up with foreign nations, to pass such drastic legislation as that. No nation in the world has ever attempted to do such an insulting thing to other nations as we propose in this, if we attempt to make it apply to contracts and agreements made in foreign countries.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the provision in the bill to which the gentleman takes exception and to which he has offered his amendment is the present law, and has been the law for many years past.

The section relating to advances and allotments of wages, paragraph "f," provides that the section—shall apply as well to foreign vessels as to vessels of the United States; and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for a similar violation.

The proviso does not appear in the bill. If the gentleman wishes to restore the proviso, as far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection. The proviso is as follows:

Provided, That treaties in force between the United States and foreign nations do not conflict.

Now, if we have a treaty with any foreign Government which would make the enforcement of this provision against a foreign vessel owner a violation of the terms of that treaty, then, of course, we do not wish to violate the terms of the treaty; but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that we are under no obligation to enforce in our courts the provisions of a contract made in a foreign country any more than one State in the Union is under obligation to enforce the provisions of a personal contract made in another State, if it is in violation of the law of that State.

The different States of the Union have different statutes of limitations, and if the suit were brought in the State where the contract was made it would be enforced according as the statute of limitations of that State would apply; yet, if the suit is brought in another State, the statute of limitations in the State where the suit is brought would apply.

I think the gentleman is entirely too considerate of the feelings of foreign nations. He expresses a great fear that we may offend them when he says that we must enforce in our States all contracts that are made in foreign countries. We are under no such obligation, and this provision, as I have stated, is existing law. If we have a treaty that binds us to do so, then, so long as the treaty is in force, we do not want to violate the terms of the treaty; but I am not aware of any treaty in force which places any such obligation upon us.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Missouri in regard to the proviso, I will withdraw the amendment which I have offered and will offer the proviso instead. I think that eliminates my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In its stead I offer the following amendment, to come in after the word "violation," in line 25, page 13.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "violation," in line 25, page 13, "Provided, That treaties in force between the United States and foreign nations do not conflict."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 14, line 1, after the word "the," by striking out the word "master" and inserting the word "captain."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Perhaps the gentleman knows that this portion of the statute is almost entirely new, so that we are not simply copying the old one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, we have reached a point in the bill where we are not dealing with existing law. This section is new, and therefore it is subject to amendment by the House without reflecting upon our legislative ancestors.

There is a theory in labor circles that the term "master" by contrast indicates serfdom. The converse of the term "master" is "slave." This bill is entitled a bill to abolish involuntary servitude. The gentlemen who have advanced this bill say that they wish to remove what they call the last vestige of involuntary servitude. The term "master" has been and is offensive in labor circles, and it seems to me the proper term to apply here is the term "captain" or "commander." I suggest the word "captain" because that best denominates the official status of the man in control of the ship.

Mr. HOBSON. I want to ask the gentleman, simply along the line of the philosophy of his point, how it is that labor itself has retained the title of "master mechanic."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I do not understand.

Mr. HOBSON. And, in the same line of philosophy, I would ask him how it was that in the United States Navy, instead of the grade of lieutenant we had the grade of master for a great many years without any implication of slavery in it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is a term that has been handed down through the ages and that implies the mastery or control of men, which, on the other hand, would mean involuntary or even voluntary servitude.

Mr. HOBSON. Does it not also mean a certain skill or efficiency? You can master an art, you can master a trade or profession, as well as be a master of men.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman and to those upon the other side of the House who bring in this measure as a Democratic measure, and with the support of those who stand for organized labor, that I would prefer as a legislator to perfect this bill, and I believe we can perfect it by taking out of it a term which implies servitude and replace it with one which does not have that implication. The term "master" is not an American term. The term "captain" would be appropriate and would fit the situation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I have such great faith in the ability and learning of the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, the gentleman need not dwell upon that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes no boast in that regard.

Mr. MANN. But it is a pleasure for me to dwell upon it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And in that respect the gentleman from Pennsylvania always yields to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman, on account of his erudition, whether the term "master in chancery" implies that the court is a slave to the master or that the litigants are.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Most of those who go into court find themselves enslaved in one form or another before they get out. I have been one of those on this floor who have not accepted as gospel every lawyerlike expression which has been handed down by those who seem to control the House. I think people should have some little freedom in legal matters. I do not like the term "master." If the gentlemen on the other side of the House want to vote upon the sailors the term "master," it is up to them. I suggest to them that we take it out and that we say the man in control of the ship is the captain and not the master of the men on the ship.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. COVINGTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is usually clever when he is not serious. I, of course, can not believe that he is serious in offering an amendment to change the word "master" to the word "captain." His amendment in the present instance is, however, not cleverly facetious. It is simply ridiculous. It is obvious to him, familiar as he is with the navigation laws of the United States, that the word "master" has a peculiar significance in its application to the merchant marine of the country.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. COVINGTON. I do.

Mr. HARDY. I think the gentleman from Maryland is taking the gentleman from Pennsylvania too seriously. It is only a joke that he is attempting to perpetrate on the House.

Mr. COVINGTON. If the gentleman from Texas had been listening, he would have heard that I stated that I believed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is usually clever when he was not serious, and I was going on to state that I did not presume any Member of this House would believe that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with his knowledge about the navigation laws and the completeness of the use in them of the word "master," had offered his amendment in anything else than a spirit of levity, which he thought clever, and that the Democratic side of the House under the circumstances could let him have his little joke and refuse to consider the amendment otherwise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to know whether the gentleman does not know that in the carpentry and building trades the term "master builder" is offensive to the journeyman? I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] if that is not true?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, so far as the great bulk of the wageworkers of the country is concerned, they do not care what the term is. What they are opposed to is any man having any power over them unjustly. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman if it is not true that in the labor unions, with which he is familiar, the use of the term "master" has been objected to?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Oh, there are some men who are opposed to the use of the term "master," just as there are some men who are opposed to the use of other terms, but the men who have delved sufficiently under the surface to understand the facts are not quibbling about any particular term. What they are insistent upon is that no man shall have unjust power over them, whether he be called a captain or a master.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I would like the gentleman to explain why labor objects to it. What is the reason?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss the matter any further, though I suppose there might be somebody here who might object to the use of the term "master of art," or something of that sort. These little comedies come on, but they are taking up time, and I do not see anything else except a matter of humor in the gentleman's amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That section 4536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4536. No wages due or accruing to any seaman or apprentice shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court, and every payment of wages to a seaman or apprentice shall be valid in law, notwithstanding any previous sale or assignment of wages or of any attachment, encumbrance, or arrestment thereon; and no assignment or sale of wages or of salvage made prior to the accruing thereof shall bind the party making the same, except such allotments as are authorized by this title. This section shall apply to fishermen employed on fishing vessels as well as to other seamen."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 14, line 22, by inserting after the word "seaman" the following:

"Provided, That nothing contained in this or any preceding section shall interfere with the order of any court regarding the payment by any seaman of any part of his wages for the support and maintenance of his wife and minor children."

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman to withhold that amendment. I think it is already covered in other provisions of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have looked over the bill and find nothing there that pertains to the protection of an abandoned or deserted wife and child. If it is in the bill of course I do not want to press the amendment.

Mr. HARDY. I will ask the gentleman to look at page 12, section b, line 24.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have read that section, and it does not cover the point proposed in the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not think it is covered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That leaves it entirely in the discretion of the seaman as to whether or not he shall make allotment to his wife and children. I propose that the seaman shall be liable to maintain his lawful wife and minor children. We give him the right to protect his wages against every kind of contract made, whether he is in his good senses or his bad senses, against his grocer or boarding-house keeper or the man who gives him employment. We protect him against his contract with every one of those, but we do not protect his wife and children who may be absolutely dependent upon him, and who may be left in port in destitution. I question whether the gentlemen on the other side can afford to leave this provision out of the bill. It appeals as much to the instincts of humanity as does the very title of the bill itself. The gentlemen can not afford, in my judgment, to pass a bill of this kind which exempts a wage earner from those obligations which he makes, not by a written contract, but before God, with his wife and children. You can vote this down, if you care to. I submit that the sailor, like any other man, must support his wife and children if he be lawfully wedded and if the children be his own. Gentlemen, it is up to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to have the amendment read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HARDY. We have no objection to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

BATTLESHIP "OREGON."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks relative to matters concerning the battleship Oregon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD regarding the battleship Oregon. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. How long is it to be?

Mr. HAWLEY. About a half a column, possibly a little more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

LAWS RELATIVE TO SEAMEN.

Mr. McMORRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of asking the chairman a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that section 12 be passed informally.

Mr. McMORRAN. Will not the gentleman consent that sections 13 and 14 be passed? They are important sections.

Mr, ALEXANDER. Thirteen, 14, and 15 all relate to the imprisonment of deserters. I do not suppose the gentleman is in favor of human slavery.

Mr. McMORRAN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is not any other question there except that relating to boys, and there is an amendment to be suggested.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. HARDY. We have one also.

Mr. McMORRAN. There is also section 14, as to the towing of more than one barge.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We want to offer an amendment to section 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman request that section 12 be passed informally?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the amendment I offered been adopted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; the amendment of the gentleman was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That every sailing or steam vessel shall carry in her crew a boy or boys, native of the United States, or one whose father or mother is a naturalized citizen of the United States, as follows: If she be 300 registered tons or more, but less than 1,500 registered tons, at least 1 boy; if she be 1,500 tons register or more, at least 2 boys or apprentices. Any vessel leaving any port of the United States without the boy or boys required by this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense: Provided, That this penalty shall not apply if, after reasonable diligence, the boy or boys required by this section could not be obtained.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not understand the gentleman has a committee amendment. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is a member of the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. So am I a member of the committee, and this is not a committee amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I desire to make this explanation, Mr. Speaker, that in the original draft of this bill in the consideration of this bill for submission to the House this amendment was agreed to, and in the preparation of the report, through some inadvertence on our part, the amendment was omitted, and that is how it comes to be a committee amendment at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I submit it is not a committee amendment. We are both equally members of the committee. The Chair recognized me first to offer my amendment. I do not care to stand on my rights, but——

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have not any objection——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington (continuing). I see no reason why the gentleman should have preference.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment being considered first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Washington? The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 16, line 21, after the word "apprentices" to insert:
"Such boys shall not be less than 14 years old nor more than 21 and shall perform such duties as the master of the vessel may direct, and shall be educated in the duties of seamanship and shall receive a reasonable compensation for their services."

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It simply makes the section mean something.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice the language of the bill just ahead of where the amendment comes in says "at least two boys or apprentices." I do not understand that the word "boys" and "apprentices" are synonymous.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. That is the way it has been used in the statutes.

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Perhaps not.

Mr. MANN. I want to inquire whether the gentleman considered them synonymous or whether his requirement only went to boys, or whether he intended to leave the existing law as to apprentices to apply, or whether he made a distinction in his proposition between the requirement of the boy and the requirement of existing law as to apprentices?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. The understanding I have of it is that these boys are synonymous with apprentices under existing law.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know where the gentleman gets the understanding. The definition of "boy" is one thing, and the statutes define what an apprentice is on board ship. The use of the word "boy" on board ship is not uncommon. Sometimes he is a man 50 years of age. There is no reason for inserting two words meaning the same thing connected with the word "boy" in this bill, and the law provides what an apprentice is.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think it ought to be "as apprentices," instead of "or." I am not sure, however.

Mr. MANN. I am not seeking to correct the gentleman, but the amendment being offered, it attracted my attention to it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the purpose of it—that these boys should be there as apprentices.

Mr. MANN. Then, it would be better to change the word "or" to the word "as."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Then the statute, section 4500, would apply, which provides:

Every shipping commissioner appointed under this title (R. S., 4501–4613) shall, if applied to for the purpose of apprenticing boys to the sea service by any master or owner of a vessel, or by any person legally qualified, give such assistance as is in his power for facilitating the making of such apprenticeships; but the shipping commissioner shall ascertain that the boy has voluntarily consented to be bound, and that the parents or guardian of such boy have consented to such apprenticeship, and that he has attained the age of 12 years, and is of sufficient health and strength, and that the master to whom such boy is to be bound is a proper person for the purpose. Such apprenticeship shall terminate when the apprentice becomes 18 years of age. The shipping commissioner shall keep a register of all indentures of apprenticeship made before him.

I think for that reason we should say "as apprentices."

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman that that would not correct the difficulty.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It may not——

Mr. MANN. Except in that one place. Is this to be changed by the amendment offered to the language?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No.

Mr. MANN. This says here:

That every sailing or steam vessel shall carry in her crew a boy or boys—

If that means "apprentices," then you had better say "apprentices," because below you provide that certain vessels there shall have not less than one boy, and then on the other not less than two boys or apprentices. And if your language should not be changed it would be in the second case, "two boys or apprentices."

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think in both instances it ought to be changed.

Mr. MANN. Whoever is operating the vessel ought to know who is an apprentice, because the statute——

Mr. ALEXANDER. They ought not to take a boy without the consent of a parent or guardian.

Mr. MANN. Very properly they ought not; but the manager of the vessel ought to know.

Mr. ALEXANDER. After the word "boys," in line 16, if the words "as apprentices" were inserted, it would correct it.

Mr. MANN. I think so.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And, in line 21, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "as." Mr. Chairman, I move to amend——

Mr. MANN. The amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is pending.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thought it had been agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. MANN. Let us see before we agree to that as to the language you want to use.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the law of 1891, under which we have been operating for a good many years, uses the terms "cadets or apprentices," and it seems to me it would be as well to use the word "apprentices" in order to make it definite as to what should be done.

Mr. COVINGTON. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that, beginning on line 20, he should strike out the word "boy" and insert "apprentice." The section would then read in entire harmony with existing law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If you will read section 4509 you will find that the language of the law is that the boy's parents or guardian of such boys shall give their consent to such apprenticeship. Those are the words of the existing law. In other words, the word "apprentice" has a restricted meaning under section 4509 and refers to boys.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. But it is not simply to provide for apprentices. It is meant for the purpose of providing for the American boy becoming an apprentice. Now, the gentleman from Illinois has just called attention to the fact that so far as the meaning of the word "apprentice" is concerned it might apply to any person of any age who is learning any particular line of industry. The purpose of this section is to make a provision for American boys as apprentices.

Mr. COVINGTON. But the gentleman also understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] very accurately said that the words "ship's boy" has a meaning entirely inconsistent with the word "apprentice," and you may find ship's boys 50 years of age performing the work of a ship's boy.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Washington be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in reference to the age, an apprenticeship runs a certain length of time. Does the gentleman mean 21 years at the end of the apprenticeship or 21 years at the beginning?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Twenty-one years at the beginning.

Mr. MANN. Why not say 21 years of age when apprenticed?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The statute, section 4509, says from 12 to 18.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. From 12 to 18?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought, but I did not see any objection.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to making it from 14 to 21.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman insert there then——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to suggest to the gentleman that he permit an amendment to the amendment raising the lower limit from 14 to 16. There are a good many States in the Union where boys are not allowed to work in factories——

Mr. MANN. This will not be a sweatshop.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask unanimous consent to insert, after the word "twenty-one," the words "when apprenticed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by inserting certain words.

Mr. MANN. At the age when apprenticed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to have the amendment again reported with the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Such boy shall not be less than 14 years old nor more than 21 when apprenticed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, after the word "boys," in line 16, I ask to insert the words "as apprentices," and, in line 21, strike out the second word "or" and insert the word "as."

Mr. COVINGTON. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in line 21 that must also occur.

Mr. MANN. Strike out "or apprentices." If you insert the word "apprentices" above that, it means the same thing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] repeat his amendment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In line 16, after the word "boys," insert the words "as apprentices," and, in line 21, strike out "or apprentices."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, page 16, amend by inserting, after the word "boys," the words "as apprentices," and, in line 21, strike out the word "or" after the word "boys" and insert the word "as" in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire to strike out the words "or apprentices"?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there is objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I think it will be proper and perhaps necessary, in line 15, to offer an amendment to make this provision specially applicable to the vessels of the United States, by inserting after the word "vessel," in line 15, page 16, section 13, the words "of the United States," so that it will read, "that every sailing or steam vessel of the United States shall carry in her crew a boy or boys."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 15, page 16, after the word "vessel," insert the words "of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY. Along the same line, Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert in line 22, before the word "vessel," the word "such," so as to show that it is a vessel of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Amend, line 22, page 16, by inserting before the word "vessel" the word "such."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I sent an amendment to the Clerk's desk some time ago. It has not yet been acted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 15, page 16, by inserting between the words "sailing" and "or," in said line, the words "vessel engaged in the foreign or offshore trade."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. That would make it read:

That every vessel engaged in the foreign or offshore trade or steam vessel shall carry in her crew a boy or boys, etc.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It applies to the sailing vessels engaged in the offshore trade.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. There are no sailing vessels in any other trade, anyway, are there?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. There are some; a few.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] whether he had not better insert the words "of the United States" after the word "vessel." It is an entirely new paragraph.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting after the word "vessel" the words "of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the subject we discussed the other day. It is a new paragraph entirely, and you want to designate the vessel properly. I offer as an amendment that the words "of the United States" be added, following the word "vessel."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What is the purpose of the amendment? I want to ask that question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. The purpose is to except sailing vessels, other than those engaged in the foreign trade, from being required to carry one of these boys.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why does the gentleman think they ought to be excepted?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Because there are a great many small vessels along the coast.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; but you limit the tonnage anyway. You say, "300 tons register or more." I do not really see the reason for this.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. That is the purpose of the amendment. That is why it is offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, we ought to have a division on that. I can not see the purpose of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, can we not have the amendment read again?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That every sailing vessel engaged in the foreign or offshore trade or steam vessel of the United States shall carry in her crew a boy or boys as apprentices, native of the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am utterly unable to see any reason why this exception should be made. These sailing vessels in the coastwise trade that go up and down our coast are the best means we have of training our boys. I can not see why they should escape any burden. I can not see any reason for it at all. I think the amendment should be voted down. Let us treat them all alike.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McMORRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment. I want my amendment to follow, on page 17, line 2, after the word "obtained."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McMORRAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17, at the end of line 2, after the word "obtained," insert the words "that nothing in this section shall apply to the Great Lakes."

Mr. McMORRAN. Mr. Speaker, we have on the Great Lakes a considerable number of small barges engaged in the coal trade, varying from 500 to 1,500 tons capacity, running to Ohio ports, and Canadian ports, and Michigan ports as well.

Now, the theory of this section, as I understand it, is to build up the merchant marine, and the imposition on these barges of the burden of placing another boy or two boys on the barges does not tend to build up the merchant marine, and it is only a burden upon these small shipowners.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman wants to exempt what class?

Mr. McMORRAN. These small barges carrying anything on the Great Lakes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why does the gentleman want to exempt them? Why not limit them to the barges?

Mr. McMORRAN. I want all barges exempted engaged in that trade.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman refer to freight steamers?

Mr. McMORRAN. No; I refer to barges.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. What is a barge?

Mr. McMORRAN. A barge is sometimes called a vessel.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Are they sailing or steam vessels?

Mr. McMORRAN. They are what might be called a sailing vessel, towed by a steam vessel. They were originally schooners, and after the sailing vessels passed out of existence they were converted into barges. They have two masts, as a rule, and they carry all the way from 500 to 1,000 or 1,500 tons of freight. I may say in that connection that they are carrying coal at 30 or 35 cents a ton.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why not say that this shall not apply to barges in tow on the Great Lakes?

Mr. McMORRAN. That is all right.

Mr. ALEXANDER. A barge is a dangerous place, and boys ought not to be required there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not think the Great Lakes ought to be excepted.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Barges in tow.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman wants to except barges engaged in the Lake traffic?

Mr. McMORRAN. When towed by steamers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think this would be a very harsh restriction if enforced with regard to tugboats plying on rivers?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The act does not apply to rivers, to begin with; but we are going to suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McMORRAN] that he offer his amendment so as to make its exceptions apply generally, not only to the Great Lakes, but to the ocean as well.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. In other words, that it shall not apply to barges in tow, whether upon the Great Lakes or at sea. A barge in tow is a dangerous place for a boy, or any man who is not familiar with that employment, and whether on the Great Lakes or at sea, a boy should not be required on a barge in tow.

Mr. McMORRAN. I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman accept the inclusion of the word "tugboats"?

Mr. McMORRAN. There is no objection to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Tugboats or boats in tow.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I suggest that this shall not apply to tugboats or barges in tow.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would cover it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman wish to amend the amendment?

Mr. McMORRAN. I do. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Let the Clerk report the amendment as now modified.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be reported as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That nothing in this section shall apply to tugboats or barges in tow.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That towing of more than one barge or other vessel 50 miles or more through the open sea is hereby prohibited, unless such barges or vessels so towed are provided with sail or other motive power and a crew sufficient to manage such barges or vessels.

Mr. McMORRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I should like some further information as to section 14 and why the prohibition is necessary in that case? I might say for the gentleman's information that on the Great Lakes at the present time no tugboat or steamer is permitted to tow more than two barges on account of a rule made by the insurance companies refusing to insure the cargoes where more than two boats are towed. As the towing of barges through the Lakes is now done, there are very few of them that have sails that would amount to anything if they got out in a seaway. Places of safety on the Great Lakes are close at hand, and I can not see any necessity of applying this provision to them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the reading of the section has not been completed.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the reading was completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk concluded the reading of section 14.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The part of the section contained in lines 10 to 16, inclusive, on page 17, has not been read.

Mr. MANN. That is a part of section 15, and there is a committee amendment proposing to strike out the first two lines of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Section 15 does not begin there. It begins at line 17.

Mr. McMORRAN. Mr. Speaker, I can not see any necessity for imposing a penalty upon these barges for not carrying sails.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I will say that representatives of the barge owners and barge operators were before the committee, and we amended it to harmonize with their views. In its amended form they have no objection to it. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the section provides that the towing of more than one barge or other vessel 50 miles or more through the open sea is prohibited, unless such barges or vessels so towed are provided with sails or other motive power and a crew sufficient to manage such barges or vessels. We amended it so as to read "sail or other motive power" because they all agreed that in the interest of safe navigation, in the interest of the protection of the lives of those on the barges, they should be equipped with sails or some other motive power for use in the event of a hawser breaking and the barge drifting at sea.

Mr. McMORRAN. Would not the gentleman consider the word "motive" to apply to the boat that was towing the barges?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No. The barges must be equipped with motive power, either sail or of some other kind of motive power, so that if the hawser breaks, and they are cast adrift, the cargo and the sailors aboard will have some protection, and can navigate the barge, and also that the barge and the sailors may be protected.

Mr. McMORRAN. A barge with a sail they would carry would be small protection if it broke loose.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not familiar enough with the situation to say.

Mr. McMORRAN. There is this feature about it, that those tow barges, where the insurance companies carry the insurance on the cargo, have all to pass a rigid inspection. Every hawser has to be passed on, and the lines aboard have been passed on, before the insurance companies will take the risk.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said that it was impossible to get insurance on more than two barges in tow on the Great Lakes.

Mr. McMORRAN. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said it was impossible to get insurance on their cargoes where more than two boats were towed behind one steamer.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It was impossible to get insurance on the cargo?

Mr. McMORRAN. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Is not that itself an admission that the insurance companies consider the danger of towing to be exceedingly great, and greater in proportion as the number of barges are increased?

Mr. McMORRAN. Oh, I do not think so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMORRAN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMORRAN. Insurance companies do not require the sails on the mast, and if they considered it hazardous without the sail, I should think they would impose that restriction.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. And consequently the necessity for there being sufficient sail or some other motive power, not only to protect the cargo if the hawser breaks, but to protect the crew as well.

Mr. McMORRAN. I do not think there would be very much risk with the crew on the barges on our Great Lakes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. There would be just as much, or nearly as much, risk to the crew as to the cargo.

Mr. McMORRAN. We have a great many boats there that are running a short distance—for instance, from Cleveland to Detroit or Cleveland to Port Huron or Cleveland to Goderich, on the Canadian shore.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. This makes a limit of 50 miles.

Mr. McMORRAN. The distance is greater than that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is one of the best features of this measure, if it is made effective. There is great danger to navigation along the Atlantic seaboard, and I presume there is upon the Pacific coast, from vessels in tow at sea, particularly in time of storm, in the dark, or during a fog. A vessel having in tow three colliers, for instance, would have the cable line continued probably a mile or two beyond the original towboat, thus endangering any vessel that has to cross the lines, but I am unable to ascertain from a careful reading of this section whether it is intended that the number of barges in tow shall be limited to one or whether there still may be in tow two or more barges, provided that those barges are properly manned and have a sailing or engine equipment.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this bill that limits the number of barges that may be in tow. What it provides for is a sufficient sail or motive power and crew to man the vessel if it is cast adrift. So far as this bill is concerned, it makes no limitation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It reads that the towing vessel may have in tow not more than one barge or other vessel except under certain conditions.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Except under certain conditions prescribed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if those conditions are with regard to the safety of the men and sailing equipment or enginry, then a towboat can have in tow two or three vessels, as is the custom now.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I can not say positively, but my recollection is that we have at the present time a statute limiting the number of barges that can be in tow.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a demand for the abolition of that system of towing at sea. I do not know whether it was in the mind of the committee to abolish it or not, but apparently the bill does not do it. You can still go on and have a tow two or three barges in length under this bill, which, of course, is a menace to navigation.

I would like to ask the gentleman, because I thought we were still considering section 14, why the towing of log rafts or lumber rafts on the coast line is eliminated. Surely if there is danger to navigation from a tow line of vessels that are properly manned and equipped, there would be very much more danger to navigation from logs of rafts that might be floating in the ocean.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that the Congress has not been remiss in protecting the life on barges. In the act of May 28, 1908, this whole question was legislated upon and an inspection of barges provided for. The law provides that barges shall be equipped with certain appliances approved by the board of supervisors and at least one lifeboat and one anchor and a suitable chain and cable and at least one life preserver for each person on board.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have done with the question of the towboats in line. I was inquiring about the rafts, and why in this bill the committee had eliminated that measure of protection against rafts which would seem to be necessary for the safety of navigation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. So far as the hearings before the committee showed, there were no rafts of consequence, except on the northwest coast, and we struck it out for this reason: The testimony was overwhelming that rafting logs on the northwest coast did not interfere with or imperil navigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what precautions are taken with regard to manning of rafts which now pass up and down the coast, this provision being stricken out of the bill. May rafts be towed in barge form as vessels may? Are they to be properly protected by crews, or other safeguards and restrictions, or are they to continue to float in the sea, a menace to navigation? If the gentleman does not care to answer, I am perfectly content.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

I want to know why we are discussing provision 15 when we have not come to it. It seems to me that ought to be taken up separately.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did it merely as a matter of convenience and——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is there any amendment pending to section 14? If not I will ask the Clerk to proceed.

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last two words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has the floor.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman get it? He has nothing pending and I offer a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the gentleman from California has no amendment the gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman, if I may—if the gentleman from California desires to talk about section 14 I am perfectly willing to yield to him.

Mr. RAKER. We have another provision in lines 10 to 16, and while you are amending section 15 you ought to incorporate the provisions of lines 10 to 16 in this provision rather than ask unanimous consent to return to section 14.

Mr. MANN. Not at all, if we strike it out, it becomes part of section 14. Is the gentleman from Missouri able to give a definition of what a barge is?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the law defines it.

Mr. MANN. For instance, we have on the Great Lakes, as we have at other places, car ferries where a steamboat tows those ferryboats across the Lakes with railroad cars on them which pass from one railroad to another. Of course it is perfectly out of the question to put sails on them or steam on them, and I want to know whether they are covered by the term "barge"?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They are not in tow.

Mr. MANN. They are in tow, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. MADDEN. They call them scows, do they not?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what they call them, but what are they under the law? Are they covered by this provision?

Mr. COVINGTON. If the chairman will permit me, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the existing law, as I understand it, already creates a definite limitation for barges. I have had occasion to go into that with the Commissioner of Navigation in connection with another bill which has been recently pending, and I understand that barges are a well-recognized class of boats. They are boats used for carrying cargoes in tow, and no other vessels are recognized under the existing navigation laws as barges.

Mr. MANN. Then car ferries would not be barges.

Mr. COVINGTON. I am sure they are not within the meaning of existing law.

Mr. MADDEN. They are scows.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That the towing of log rafts or lumber rafts 50 miles or more through the open sea is hereby prohibited.

Any person, firm, or corporation violating the provisions of this or of the preceding section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment for not less than 90 days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the words——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, there is a committee amendment to be considered first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, strike out all of lines 8 and 9, as follows:

"SEC. 15. That the towing of log rafts or lumber rafts 50 miles or more through open sea is hereby prohibited."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Page 17, line 11, strike out the words "or of the preceding."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On page 17, line 13, after the word "dollars," strike out the words "nor less than $500," and in line 14 the words "less than 90 days nor," so that it will read, "shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500, or by imprisonment for not more than one year." I understand that is in harmony with the statutes generally now, and I think it ought to be that way.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "nor less than $500."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 14, strike out the words "less than 90 days nor."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, now I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question, or rather to make a statement. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, as the next two sections deal with our treaties, while it will not take very long to discuss them, it seems to me that it is very important, if we are going by statute to abrogate all the existing treaties with commercial nations, that we have more Members present. Would not the gentleman consent we might now adjourn and then have a quorum here when we can finish up this bill? I do not believe we will make any time by considering it now. There ought to be more Members present than there are now when we consider a question so important.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is a mere matter of taking steps to abrogate the treaties.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be well, if these matters go over, to see if we can not get amendments that are to be offered printed for information so we will know what they are to be?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no objection to offering amendments which I have to sections 15 and 16. I have no objection to offering them and have them printed for information and let them go over.

Mr. MANN. Suppose we read section 15 and then let amendments be offered for information.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the pro forma amendment to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. That amendment is already pending.

Mr. BATHRICK. I move to strike out the last two words, then.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will withdraw my amendment, and then the gentleman can have it.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, the employees of vessels to which this bill particularly applies—and which is so long and voluminous it has required the attention of some of the best minds of this House for a long period of time in order to elucidate it and make it plain—are, many of them, far removed from the means of acquiring information regarding the rights that this bill is expected to give to them. Many of them are for months and weeks separated from all avenues of information, far out upon the ocean and upon our Great Lakes. They have not the facilities for acquiring information in respect to this remedial measure that men on shore have. Therefore I arose to ask the gentlemen in charge of this bill if they do not think it wise to incorporate as a separate section this amendment. I will not attempt to offer it, but I desire to call it to their attention merely as a matter of suggestion. It is as follows:

That the Attorney General of the United States shall place his construction, in brief, upon the provisions of this act applying to seamen, and in plain language; and cards, upon which this construction is plainly printed, shall be conspicuously posted where they can be read by the employees in at least three places upon all vessels to which this act applies.

I rather think it is quite necessary, Mr. Speaker, that such a section should be incorporated in this bill. What do the gentlemen in charge think of such an amendment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman can offer it, if he wishes, and we will take it under consideration. It is quite unusual to post any law or statute as a rule of action.

Mr. BATHRICK. I understand that people are supposed to know the law, but here would be a law that applies to a class of people that have less means of knowing the law than any other people on earth, and those who would infringe it to the detriment of some poor fellow more opportunity than any other.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Would the interpretation of the Attorney General, if this is placed in the statute, be the interpretation that would have to go in the courts?

Mr. BATHRICK. It was not my intention to imply that at all. I have assumed that the Attorney General would be the one to place a tentative interpretation upon it, which would only be his construction.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will yield, I just want to say that, so far as the seamen to whom this law would apply are concerned, they have been working with Congress for 15 or 20 years, and they have had their representatives here during the entire session of this Congress. They have their coast seamen journals and other journals that discuss these measures, and I do not know of a class of people in the United States who take more interest in legislation concerning their own interests and who are better informed than they. And the gentleman is mistaken about their being misinformed.

Mr. BATHRICK. I am a friend of the bill, and I would not say for a moment that they are in any respect inferior in ability to any other class of people. I know they are well informed. I simply said that they were removed from avenues of intelligence such as no other class of people are; that they are more liable to be imposed upon at sea than those on shore.

Mr. HARDY. But I wanted to give the gentleman information which he probably did not have——

Mr. BATHRICK. As a matter of fact, is it not true that a great interest has been taken by a few men who are the very able leaders of these men, and the rank and file may not be posted?

Mr. HARDY. The leaders are in daily communication with them by telegrams and hundreds and thousands of letters coming in to them every day in reference to the matter.

Mr. BATHRICK. I am willing to concede that the amendment should not be in the bill, if the gentlemen who have charge of it think so. I simply offer it as a suggestion.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BATHRICK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Just what does the gentleman mean by having the Attorney General construe the law?

Mr. BATHRICK. I meant by that to have him construe it in abbreviated language his way. I did not mean that he would be a court of last resort, by any means.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to have the Attorney General put in other language than what is in this law?

Mr. BATHRICK. I meant to imply by this suggestion that the Attorney General would be the proper person to abbreviate this law and make a construction that everybody could understand.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes.

Mr. BATHRICK. Why prolong the controversy when I yield to the wisdom of the men in charge of the bill, that the suggestion is not apropos?

Mr. MANN. We are very glad to know that, because the little conversation that the gentleman was carrying on with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] was not heard on this side of the House.

Mr. BATHRICK. My voice is usually so loud that I thought that the gentleman could hear.

Mr. HARDY. I thought we were speaking loudly enough.

Mr. MANN. We could not hear.

Mr. BATHRICK. I will try to make the gentleman hear next time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] withdraws his pro forma amendment, and likewise the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we read sections 15 and 16; and if gentlemen have any amendments to offer, they can be offered and read. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that that be done.

Mr. MANN. Suppose you read only the one section. Suppose you read section 15 and then rise.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I want to offer a few suggestions of amendments to sections that we have passed over.

Mr. MANN. For printing in the RECORD?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Let section 15 be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks unanimous consent that certain amendments be offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] and others and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. And he himself desires to offer some. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he ask unanimous consent that any gentleman who may have amendments to offer be allowed to offer them and have them printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks unanimous consent that any gentleman who has amendments to offer may have them printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to-morrow morning.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that that should also apply to section 12.

Mr. MANN. As stated, it would apply to all of the sections.

The SPEAKER. It will apply to all of them. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if that will prejudice amendments to be offered by other gentlemen?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can answer that now. It will not prejudice amendments offered by other gentlemen. The section will be read.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to section 12, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that when it comes time to consider it it will have to be read anyhow. What is the use of reading it now? I have an engagement, and I want to go.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We are going to move to rise presently. Let the Clerk read the section.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That section 5280 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, repealed, and that section 4081 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso: "Provided, That this section and the foregoing sections, 4079 and 4080, shall in no case be held or construed to require or authorize the arrest, imprisonment, or delivering up of any deserter or deserting seaman to the vessel from which he has deserted unless the application in writing required thereby shall allege, and on examination it be made to appear, that such deserter or deserting seaman has been guilty on board of such vessel of some act or omission which is a criminal offense under the laws of the foreign nation to which such vessel belongs other than having withdrawn or being about to withdraw himself from the control and discipline of the master and officers of the vessel. That all treaties in conflict with this act be, and are hereby, abrogated, and the President of the United States is required at once to so notify every nation having any such treaty."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] now that——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment to that section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. I will suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] that there is no quorum present, if that is necessary. I thought the gentleman from Missouri was going to move to rise.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman has an amendment to offer to this bill, he can mark it and send it up to the Clerk.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But not discuss it?

The SPEAKER. Not discuss it or read it.

Mr. MANN. Just put it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Yes; put it in the RECORD, to be printed for information. The amendments offered will be considered as pending.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to move to adjourn, as the majority leader requested to be notified.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania offered the following amendment:

Page 18, line 12, after the word "treaty," add the following: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the arrest and deportation of any person who shall come to the United States upon any vessel in violation of the immigration laws of the United States."

Mr. MADDEN offered the following amendment:

Amend, page 16, line 9, by striking out the words "and shall" and substituting in lieu thereof the word "or."

Mr. ALEXANDER offered the following amendments:

Amend, by inserting after the word "States," in line 10, page 2, the words "navigating the ocean and the Great Lakes and on voyages of more than 12 hours' length."

Amend, by adding at end of line 14, page 15, "who shall be drilled in the handling and lowering of lifeboats under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. AYRES offered the following amendment:

On page 15, line 3, after the word "by," strike out the words "the officers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "an officer."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 6340. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6978. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 5623. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Was the point of no quorum made?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; only a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Has any gentleman any motion to make?

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 26, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 25, 27, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 47, 48, 58, 61, 62, 70, 71, 72, 75, 76, 78, 80, 83, 86, 91, 110.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 44, 45, 46, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 59, 60, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 73, 74, 77, 81, 82, 84, 88, 89, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 103, 108, 109, 115, 117, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment, in line 1, strike out the word "naval" and after the word "officer" insert the words "of the Navy or Marine Corps," and after the word "may" insert the words "with his consent"; in lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "grade from which he was retired" and in lieu thereof insert the words "same rank"; in lines 10 and 13 strike out the word "commander" and in lieu thereof insert the words "senior grade"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment, in line 2, after the words "United States" insert the following: "as amended by section 16 of an act entitled 'An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States,' approved March 3, 1899"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment, in line 6, after the word "received," insert the words "except pay and allowances for the unexpired period not served"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following words: "Such island possession of the United States as in his judgment may be best adapted to the permanent care and segregation of such sufferers," and in lieu thereof insert the words "the island of Culion, in the Philippines"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the words "and forty-three" and "two hundred and fifty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following words: "and sixty-seven" and "seven hundred and seventeen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment except the following, which is retained as a separate paragraph:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to exchange such quantities of potassium nitrate now in store as may not be needed in the manufacture of black powder for sodium nitrate of equal value for use in the manufacture of smokeless powder."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following: "That $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the survey, investigation, and report upon coal and coal fields available for the production of coal for the use of the United States Navy or any vessel of the United States," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "That $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the mining of coal and development work of public lands in Alaska for the purpose of supplying coal for the United States Navy, and the sum of $345,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the coaling station and fuel station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the words "one on the Washington or Alaska coast"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment, in line 7, after the word "Hawaii," insert the following: "at a cost not exceeding $1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the word "eighteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the word "thirty-seven" and in lieu thereof insert the word "thirty-one"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following: "one shell house, $20,000"; strike out the word "seventy-three" and in lieu thereof insert the word "fifty-three"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the words "five million one hundred eighty-six thousand three" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "four million six hundred twenty-three thousand three hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 40 of the bill, line 20, after the word "officers," insert the words "of the Dental Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment restore the matter stricken out, with the following amendments in lines 6 and 9, strike out the word "section" and in lieu thereof insert the word "act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Provided further, That a reserve corps of dental surgeons is hereby authorized to be organized and operated under the provisions hereinbefore provided for the organization of a medical reserve corps and differing therefrom in no respect other than that the appointees thereto shall be graduates of reputable schools of dentistry instead of graduates of reputable schools of medicine, and so many of said appointees may be ordered to temporary active service as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary to the health and efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, provided that the total number of dental officers in active service shall not exceed the proportion of one dental officer to each one thousand of said personnel."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment restore the matter stricken out with the following amendment: Strike out the word "ten" and in lieu thereof insert the word "thirty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment in lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following: "No enlisted men or seamen, not including commissioned and warrant officers, on battleships of the Navy, when such battleships are docked or laid up at any navy yard for repairs, shall be ordered or required to perform any duties except such as are or may be performed by the crew while at sea or in a foreign port"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 102, 104, 105, 106, 107, 111, 112, 113, and 114 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

GEORGE C. PERKINS,
H. C. LODGE,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
L. P. PADGETT,
A. W. GREGG,
GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement and ask for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator from California in reference to the amendment in regard to submarines.

Mr. LODGE. That is in disagreement. It is all that is in disagreement; but the conferees on the part of the Senate can not state what is likely to be the outcome.

Mr. JONES. While I know the conferees can not state what is likely to be the outcome in regard to submarines, I have some data in reference to that matter which I wished to submit to the Senate before it went to conference again, showing the importance of insisting upon the submarine amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I can assure the Senator, so far as the two conferees on this side of the Chamber are concerned, that they are determined to insist on the submarines.

Mr. JONES. With that assurance, I will not detain the Senate in order to get the data in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. We are thoroughly in favor of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. TILLMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

MINING AND GRAZING ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 6812) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty," and so forth, approved February 28, 1891. I ask that the bill may be read and put on its final passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Before giving unanimous consent, would the Senator object to explaining in a few words what the bill is?

Mr. ASHURST. I feel it my duty to do so, and I will do so very cheerfully.

Under the present situation unallotted lands in Indian reservations may not be used for mining purposes or for grazing. This bill was prepared by gentlemen representing the Interior Department. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, lease for a period of not less than five years lands within Indian reservations for grazing purposes and lands within Indian reservations for not less than 10 years for mining purposes. The Secretary of the Interior has made a report to that effect upon the bill, which accompanies it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say the bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior may lease mineral lands on an Indian reservation for mining purposes?

Mr. ASHURST. It does, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill simply extends the provisions of existing law with reference to reservations created by legislation to reservations which are created by Executive order. It does not alter the existing law, I understand, at all.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But it simply extends the provisions of law to additional subjects matter.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not in accord with any plan that places it within the discretion of an administrative officer to say whether or not the mines of the country shall be opened. We have the best mining law that could be devised in the old act of 1872, which says that all mineral deposits on public lands shall be open to exploration and purchase under a law, not under a discretion; and it is not my intention, so long as I can interpose an objection and support it, to see a right converted into a privilege at the discretion of any person.

I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go to the calendar.

NELLIE ORTON NICHOLS.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 363, submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] on the 20th instant, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Nellie Orton Nichols, widow of David Robinson Nichols, late a private in the Capitol police, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

INCITEMENT OF INSURRECTION IN MEXICO.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 335, submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that resolution will be taken up and passed.

Mr. BRIGGS. I call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the report.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that it may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations or a subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized and directed to inquire, investigate, ascertain, and report whether any persons, associations, or corporations, domiciled in or owing allegiance to the United States, have heretofore been or are now engaged in fomenting, inciting, encouraging, or financing rebellion, insurrection, or other flagrant disorder in Cuba or Mexico against the lawful, organized Governments of those countries.

Resolved further, That said committee or a subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to summon witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to take and secure whatever testimony and evidence may be required to ascertain and report upon the matters aforesaid; and said committee or a subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized for the purposes aforesaid to sit wherever necessary and act as well when Congress is not in session as when in session.

Resolved further, That the said committee is hereby directed to report the result of its said investigation and inquiry to the Senate during the first month of the next session of Congress; and the expenses incurred by such investigation and inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

RAVAGES OF THE ARMY WORM.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 125) making appropriation for checking the ravages of the army worm, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in employing experts to aid in checking the ravages of the army worm in those sections of the country where its presence is now threatening the crops: Provided, That the amount herein appropriated shall be deemed a part of the fund now provided for like purposes in the agricultural appropriation bill and shall be subtracted from said fund upon the passage of the said agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if a joint resolution similar to this was not passed last evening?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The joint resolution from the House was passed, but the Secretary of Agriculture has claimed that it will take at least $25,000 at once to meet the spread of this pest and has asked that that joint resolution be supplemented by this measure. I have a telegram here to the effect that unless they can get these experts on the ground immediately the entire cotton crop of the South is threatened.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean to say that it will take $25,000 next week to do that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Next week, just as early as it will be possible to get the experts into the infected region.

Mr. SMOOT. How much does the agricultural appropriation bill provide?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Something like $100,000 or $125,000. The Secretary of Agriculture wants to have this appropriation immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HEYBURN. What is the purpose of this appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is for the purpose of sending men into the infected region who understand the preparation of the poison and the method of meeting the pest in different kinds of vegetation. For instance, in a hayfield unless there is a very careful process employed in the hay it would poison the stock.

Mr. HEYBURN. How do they do it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The department has the process, and therefore——

Mr. HEYBURN. Is it a secret process?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It depends upon the knowledge of experts to find the point of incubation. Their expert knowledge enables them to find the worm before it starts its ravages. Only entomologists can differentiate between the appearance of the ordinary insect and this worm until he is large enough to begin his ravages.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is it handwork?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The poisoning is handwork, and is carried on by the individual who owns the land, under the direction of these experts.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then it is the owner of the lands who applies the poison?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does he share in this appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. HEYBURN. Who gets this appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The appropriation is to defray the expenses of the different experts who are sent to do this work and who have been in the business for years—the entomologists.

Mr. HEYBURN. Who hunts out the nests from which these pests are propagated?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The expert instructs the farmer how to locate the worm.

Mr. HEYBURN. And the expert gets this money?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Agricultural Department defrays the expenses of this work.

Mr. HEYBURN. How many experts are there?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Secretary of Agriculture has said that $25,000 would enable him to send men throughout the Southern States where the pest now is threatening the destruction of the corps.

Mr. HEYBURN. How much is the aggregate appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. HEYBURN. I mean in the regular appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, that is for various purposes, and is something like $150,000, I think. If the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture were here he could give the exact information.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suppose they pay the experts by the year?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, no; this is merely an emergency fund to enable the Department of Agriculture to employ men for this work. There has been no appropriation at all so far, but the Secretary has sent some experts out already, paying the money out of his own pocket. On account of the failure of the passage of the agricultural appropriation bill he has not a dollar for any purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Can the Senator advise us whence he obtains the experts?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. He has had them all along. Experts are being trained throughout the country. The Secretary has entomologists in every State, and this measure is to concentrate them in this emergency that has now arisen in the South.

Mr. HEYBURN. And he will send experts over a section of the country to instruct the farmers how to find the pests?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. How to find the pests and the manner of mixing the poison to destroy them.

Mr. HEYBURN. How is it mixed?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I really do not know, and that is the reason I want the experts employed, because my own farm is threatened as well as others.

Mr. HEYBURN. What is this pest?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is the army worm, which appears about once in every seven years. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that usually it comes about the latter part of September or the first of October, but for the first time in its history it appears now in the last week of July, and has therefore two months in which to work. Unless it is checked now, its ravages will be great.

Mr. HEYBURN. And, then, for seven years it will disappear?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. So that this is not an appropriation to recur each year?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely wanted some information. I have noticed a vast amount of proposed legislation for the destruction of various pests, but the information in detail has been very meager, and I thought it a proper occasion to put in the RECORD something that would inform the people of the country why these appropriations are made, and not for the purpose of treating them lightly or opposing them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the passage of the joint resolution. On the contrary, I heartily favor the destruction of all injurious insects and worms which are at the present time great pests throughout the country; but I should like to suggest to the Senator from South Carolina and his colleagues on the other side of the Chamber that if they will remove their opposition to the passage of Senate bill 6497 the insectivorous birds of the country will dispose of the insects and their destruction will not cost a penny.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 7368) granting an increase of pension to Otto Weber; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

A bill (S. 7369) granting an increase of pension to Annie Shannon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRIGGS:

A bill (S. 7370) for the relief of Kate D. Augur, widow of Jacob A. Augur, and others; to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOURNE. I am instructed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to introduce the bill which I send to the desk. I ask that it be read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The bill (S. 7371) to provide the manner of determining the compensation of railroads for the transportation of the mails was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 7372) granting a pension to Edwin B. Wright (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7373) granting an increase of pension to Ellen M. Banning (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROOT:

A bill (S. 7374) granting an increase of pension to C. W. Goff; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 7375) for the relief of Owen S. Willey; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. PAYNTER:

A bill (S. 7376) granting an increase of pension to William H. Frederick; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 126) authorizing Federal bureaus doing hygienic and demographic work to participate in the exhibition to be held in connection with the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography; to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE SUGAR SCHEDULE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hold in my hand an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909. I want to present it now and have it printed, and I give notice that it will be offered to-morrow as a substitute for the House sugar schedule tariff bill. I wish to explain that it is the substitute agreed upon by the Democratic members of the Senate Finance Committee.

In this connection I ask consent of the Senate to file during the day or to-morrow morning a report expressing the views of the Democratic members of the Finance Committee in support of the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 25970).

Mr. SUTHERLAND submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $360, being an additional amount to pay the assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a salary of $1,800 per annum, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $217,693.39 to reimburse the State of Texas in full payment of all claims of any nature whatever on account of expenses incurred by that State prior to February 9, 1861, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay Robert W. Farrar for indexing and extra services as clerk to the Committee on Pensions, and also $1,200 to pay Dennis M. Kerr for services as assistant clerk by detail to the Committee on Pensions, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment to enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay the officers and employees of the Senate borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of July, 1912, a sum equal to one-twelfth the annual compensation then paid them by law, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to each employee on the rolls of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, at the end of each session of Congress an amount equivalent to 5 cents per mile each way in coming to Washington and returning to his home, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

STREET RAILWAY IN SOUTH HILO, HAWAII.

Mr. CLAPP. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, was passed. I note that motion at this time. I now move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator what bill it is?

Mr. CLAPP. It is a bill to grant a franchise for a street railway in the Hawaiian Islands. The word "freight," in the draft that came from the House, was omitted. It is desired to recall it and insert the word "freight."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota that the House be requested to return the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

EXCISE AND INCOME TAXES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The unanimous-consent agreement will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Friday, July 26, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21214) to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations, to persons, and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special excise tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships, and before adjournment on that calendar day will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21214) to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations, to persons, and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special excise tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person, firm, or copartnership residing in the United States, any Territory thereof, or in Alaska or the District of Columbia, shall be subject to pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such person equivalent to 1 per cent upon the entire net income over and above $5,000 received by such person from all sources during each year; or, if a nonresident, such nonresident person shall likewise be subject to pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such person equivalent to 1 per cent upon the amount of net income over and above $5,000 received by such person from business transacted and capital invested within the United States and its Territories, Alaska, and the District of Columbia during each year. The term "business," as herein used, is and shall be held to embrace everything about which a person can be employed, and all activities which occupy the time, attention, and labor of persons for the purpose of a livelihood or profit. The word "person" wherever used in this act shall be held to include natural persons or individuals and firms or copartnerships.

SEC. 2. That in computing incomes the necessary expenses actually incurred in carrying on any business, not including personal, living, or family expenses, shall be deducted, and also all interest paid within the year by such person on existing indebtedness; and all national, State, county, school, and municipal taxes, not including those assessed against local benefits, paid within the year shall be deducted from the gains, profits, or income of the person who has actually paid the same, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgagor; also losses actually sustained during the year, incurred in trade or arising from fires, storms, or shipwreck, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and debts ascertained to be worthless: Provided, That no deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate: Provided further, That only one deduction of $5,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family composed of one or both parents and one or more minor children, or husband and wife; that guardians shall be allowed to make a deduction in favor of each and every ward, except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family and have joint property interests the aggregate deduction in their favor shall not exceed $5,000: And provided further, That in cases where the salary or other compensation paid to any person in the employment or service of the United States shall not exceed the rate of $5,000 per annum, or shall be by fees, or uncertain or irregular in the amount or in the time during which the same shall have accrued or been earned, such salary or other compensation shall be included in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income of the person to whom the same shall have been paid, and shall include that portion of any income or salary upon which a tax has not been paid by the employer, fiduciary, or other person, where the employer, fiduciary, or other person is required by law to pay on the excess over $5,000: And provided further, That in computing the income of any person there shall not be included the amount received from any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company as dividends upon the stock of such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, if the special excise tax of 1 per cent now imposed by law has been paid by such corporation: And provided further, That in computing the income of any person there shall not be included the amount received from any firm or copartnership, if the special excise tax of 1 per cent imposed by this act has been paid by such firm or copartnership.

SEC. 3. That there shall be deducted from the amount of the net income of each of such persons, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $5,000, and said tax shall be computed upon the remainder of said net income of such person for the year ending December 31, 1912, and for each calendar year thereafter; and on or before the 1st day of March, 1913, and the 1st day of March in each year thereafter, a true and accurate return, under oath or affirmation, shall be made by each person of lawful age, subject to the tax imposed by this act, to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which such person resides or has his principal place of business, or, in the case of a person residing in a foreign country, in the place where his principal business is carried on within the United States, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, setting forth specifically the gross amount of income from all separate sources and from the total thereof, deducting the aggregate items or expenses and allowance herein authorized, and likewise returning the amount of income, gains, and profits of any minor or person for whom they act, but persons having less than $4,500 net income are not required to make such report; and the collector or deputy collector shall require every list or return to be verified by the oath or affirmation of the party rendering it, and may increase the amount of any list or return if he has reason to believe that the same is understated: Provided, That no such increase shall be made except after due notice to such party and upon proof of the amount understated; and in case any such person having a taxable income shall neglect or refuse to make and render such list and return, or shall render a willfully false or fraudulent list or return, it shall be the duty of the collector or deputy collector to make such list according to the best information he can obtain, by the examination of such person or any other evidence, and to add 50 per cent as a penalty to the amount of the tax due on such list in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a list or return; and in all cases of a willfully false or fraudulent list or return having been rendered to add 100 per cent as a penalty to the amount of tax ascertained to be due, the tax and the additions thereto as a penalty to be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a list or return, or of rendering a false or fraudulent return: Provided further, That any person in his or her behalf, or as such employer or fiduciary, shall be permitted to declare, under oath or affirmation, the form and manner of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that he, she, or his or her ward, employee, or beneficiary was not possessed of an income of $5,000, or may declare that he, she, or his or her ward, employee, or beneficiary has been assessed and has paid a special excise tax elsewhere for the same year, under authority of the United States, measured by all his or her income, gains, or profits, and upon all the income, gains, or profits for which he or she is liable as such employer or fiduciary, as prescribed by this law; and if the collector or deputy collector shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration, such person shall thereupon be exempt from excise tax in the said district for that year; or if the list or return of any person shall have been increased by the collector or deputy collector, such person may be permitted to prove the amount liable to be assessed; but such proof shall not be considered as conclusive of the facts, and no deductions claimed in such cases shall be made or allowed until approved by the collector or deputy collector. Any person feeling aggrieved by the decision of the deputy collector, in such cases may appeal to the collector of the district, and his decision thereon, unless reversed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall be final. If dissatisfied with the decision of the collector, such person may submit the case, with all the papers, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision, and may furnish the testimony of witnesses to prove any relevant facts, having served notice to that effect upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as herein prescribed.

Such notice shall state the time and place at which and the officer before whom the testimony will be taken; the name, age, residence, and business of the proposed witness, with the questions to be propounded to the witness, or a brief statement of the substance of the testimony he is expected to give: And provided further, That the Government may at the same time and place take testimony upon like notice to rebut the testimony of the witnesses examined by the person taxed.

The notice shall be delivered or mailed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a sufficient number of days previous to the day fixed for taking the testimony, to allow him, after its receipt, at least five days, exclusive of the period required for mail communication with the place at which the testimony is to be taken, in which to give, should he so desire, instructions as to the cross-examination of the proposed witness.

Whenever practicable the affidavit or deposition shall be taken before a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, in which case reasonable notice shall be given to the collector or deputy collector of the time fixed for taking the deposition or affidavit.

SEC. 4. That all assessments shall be made and all persons shall be notified of the amount for which they are respectively liable on or before the 1st day of June of each successive year, and said assessments shall be paid on or before the 30th day of June, except in cases of refusal or neglect to make such return, and in cases of false or fraudulent returns, in which cases the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, upon the discovery thereof, at any time within three years after said return is due, make a return upon information obtained as above provided for, and the assessment made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue thereon shall be paid by such person or persons immediately upon notification of the amount of such assessment; and to any sum or sums due and unpaid after the 30th day of June in any year, and for 10 days after notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be added the sum of 5 per cent on the amount of tax unpaid, and interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said tax from the time the same becomes due.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of all paymasters and all disbursing officers under the Government of the United States, or persons in the employ thereof, when making any payment to any officers or persons as aforesaid, whose compensation is determined by a fixed salary or upon settling or adjusting the accounts of such officers or persons, to deduct and withhold the aforesaid tax of 1 per cent, and the pay rolls, receipts, or accounts of officers or persons paying such tax as aforesaid shall be made to exhibit the fact of such payment. And it shall be the duty of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, when auditing the accounts of any paymaster or disbursing officer, or any officer withholding his salary from moneys received by him, or when settling or adjusting the accounts of any such officers, to require evidence that the taxes mentioned in this act have been deducted and paid over to the Treasurer of the United States or other officer authorized to receive the same. Every person, firm, or corporation who pays to any officer, employee, or other person a salary or compensation, interest, or other accrued profits, exceeding $5,000 for a taxable year, every lessee or mortgagor of real or personal property who pays to the lessor or mortgagee interest or compensation exceeding $5,000 for a taxable year, and every trustee, executor, administrator, conservator, agent, or receiver, employing any person or paying any person business earnings, within the meaning of this act, exceeding $5,000 for any taxable year, computed on the basis herein prescribed, shall make and render a return as provided herein to the collector or a deputy collector of his district, and shall deduct and withhold the tax herein imposed, and shall pay on said return the tax of 1 per cent per annum as required by this act: Provided, That any officer, employee, or other person for whom return has been made and the tax paid, as aforesaid, shall not be required to make a return unless such person has other net income, but only one deduction of $5,000 shall be made in the case of any such officer or employee: Provided further, That salaries paid to State, county, or municipal officers shall be exempt from the special excise tax herein levied: And provided further, That interest upon the bonds or other obligations of a State or any political subdivision thereof and also the proceeds of life-insurance policies paid upon the death of the person insured shall not be included in computing the net income of a person subject to the tax herein imposed: And provided further, That all property or its value passing by will or by intestate laws or transferred by deed or gift made or intended to take effect in possession after the death of the grantor, donor, testator, or ancestor shall be exempt from the operation of this law.

SEC. 6. That if any person, corporation, company, or association liable to make the return or pay the tax aforesaid shall refuse or neglect to make a return at the time or times hereinbefore specified in each year, or shall render a false or fraudulent return, such person shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $50 and not exceeding $500. Any person, corporation, company, or association required by law to make, render, sign, or verify any return who makes any false or fraudulent return or statement with intent to defeat or evade the assessment required by this act to be made shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, with the costs of prosecution.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of every collector of internal revenue to whom payment of any tax is made, under the provisions of this act, to give to the person making such payment a full written or printed receipt expressing the amount paid and the particular account for which such payment was made; and whenever such payment is made such collector shall, if required, give a separate receipt for each tax paid by any debtor on account of payments made or to be made by him to separate creditors in such form that such debtor can conveniently produce the same separately to his several creditors in satisfaction of their respective demands to the amounts specified in such receipts; and such receipts shall be sufficient evidence in favor of such debtor to justify him in withholding the amount therein expressed from his next payment to his creditor; but such creditor may, upon giving to his debtor a full written receipt, acknowledging the payment to him of whatever sum may be actually paid, and accepting the amount of tax paid as aforesaid (specifying the same) as a further satisfaction of the debt to that amount, require the surrender to him of such collector's receipt.

SEC. 8. That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the district courts of the United States for the district within which any person summoned under this act to appear to testify or to produce books shall reside, to compel such attendance, production of books, and testimony by appropriate process.

SEC. 9. That all administrative, special, and general provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment, remission, collection, and refund of internal-revenue taxes not heretofore specifically repealed and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby extended and made applicable to all the provisions of this act and to the tax herein imposed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, day before yesterday I submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill. I desire now, by permission of the Senate, to withdraw the amendment with the view of offering it in a different form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is within the Senator's right to modify the amendment in any way he pleases.

Mr. BORAH. Then I offer, in lieu of the amendment which I then submitted, the one I send to the desk, and I should like to have it read at this time so that the Senate may be informed with respect to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That for the calendar year 1912, and for each calendar year thereafter, duties shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid upon incomes, herein specified, received in such calendar year by every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad, and by every other person as to an income received from any property, business, trade, occupation, profession, or employment, situated or carried on within the United States. The dutiable incomes shall be those in excess of $5,000, and from every such dutiable income the sum of $5,000 shall be deducted in order to ascertain the amount upon which the duty shall be assessed, levied, and collected. The rate of duty upon dutiable incomes shall be as follows, to wit: Upon incomes not exceeding $10,000, 2 per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $20,000, 2½ per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $40,000, 3 per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $60,000, 3½ per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $80,000, 4 per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $100,000, 5 per cent; upon all incomes exceeding $100,000, 6 per cent.

SEC. 2. That the incomes upon which the duties hereinbefore specified are to be assessed and levied shall be incomes received during the calendar year and derived as follows, to wit:

First. Salaries, wages, or compensation for personal labor or service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid or received: Provided, That there shall be excluded the compensation of the existing President of the United States during the term for which he has been elected and of the judges of the supreme and inferior courts of the United States now in office; and there shall be also excluded the salaries and compensation of all officers and employees of a State or any political subdivision thereof.

Second. Earnings in any profession, after deducting the expense actually incurred in conducting such profession.

Third. The gains or profits of any trade, vocation, or business.

Fourth. The gains or profits of all sales or dealings in property, whether real or personal, provided that the gains and profits from sales of real estate purchased more than two years prior to the close of the year for which the income is being ascertained shall not be included.

Fifth. Any other gains or profits growing out of the ownership of or interest in real or personal property, or the transaction of any lawful business carried on for gain or profit.

Sixth. The amount received as dividends upon corporate stocks, together with the proportionate share of the undivided profits of corporations issuing such stocks, except corporations paying the excise tax under exitsing law, the amount received as interest upon bonds, obligations, or other evidences of indebtedness: Provided, That interest upon the bonds or other obligations of a State or any political subdivision thereof, and interest upon the bonds or obligations of the United States, exempt by their terms from taxation, shall not be included.

SEC. 3. That incomes or parts of incomes derived from any business, trade, vocation, or profession carried on wholly within a foreign country, or derived from property situated in a foreign country, shall not be included in the return hereinafter required.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of every person of lawful age having an income of more than $5,000, computed upon the basis herein prescribed, for the year 1912 and for each year thereafter, to make and render a return on or before the first Monday of March, 1913, and on or before the first Monday of March of each year thereafter, in such form and manner as may be directed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to the collector or deputy collector of the district in which he or she resides, of the amount of his or her income computed as aforesaid; and every guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, agent, receiver, and every person or corporation acting in any fiduciary capacity shall make and render a return, as aforesaid, to the collector or deputy collector of the district in which such person or corporation acting in a fiduciary capacity resides or does business, of the amount of the income of any minor or person for whom they act whose income exceeds $5,000. The collector or deputy collector shall require every return to be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person rendering it, if it be an individual, or the proper officer or officers of a corporation, if it be a corporation. If the said collector or deputy collector has reason to believe that any return understates the income therein reported, he may increase the amount subject to the appeal hereinafter provided; and in case any such person having a dutiable income shall neglect or refuse to make and render such return, or shall render a willfully false or fraudulent return, it shall be the duty of such collector or deputy collector to make or correct such return from the best information he can obtain either by the examination of such person or by any other evidence, and to add 50 per cent as a penalty to the amount of the duty in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make or render a return, and in all cases of a willfully false or fraudulent return, to add 100 per cent as a penalty to the amount of the duty ascertained to be due; the duty and the additions thereto as a penalty to be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a return or of rendering a false and fraudulent return. Any person aggrieved by the decision of the deputy collector in either of the cases above mentioned may appeal to the collector of the district, and his decision thereon, unless reversed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall be final. If dissatisfied with the decision of the collector, originally or on appeal, such person may submit the case with all papers to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision and may furnish the testimony of witnesses to prove any relevant facts, having served notice to that effect upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as herein prescribed. Such notice shall state the time and place at which and the officer before whom the testimony will be taken, the name, age, residence, and business of the proposed witnesses, with the questions to be propounded to each witness and a brief statement of the substance of the testimony he is expected to give: Provided, That the Government may at the same time and place take testimony upon like notice to rebut the testimony of the witnesses examined by the person against whom the collector rendered decision. The notice shall be delivered or mailed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a sufficient number of days previous to the day fixed for taking the testimony to allow him after its receipt at least five days, exclusive of the period required for mail communication with the place at which the testimony is to be taken, in which to give, should he so desire, instructions as to the cross-examination of the proposed witness or witnesses. Whenever practicable the affidavit or deposition of a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue shall be taken, in which case reasonable notice shall be given to the collector or deputy collector of the time fixed for taking the deposition or affidavit. No penalty shall be assessed upon any person for such neglect or refusal or for making or rendering a willfully false or fraudulent return except after reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue so as to give the person charged an opportunity to be heard.

SEC. 5. That the duties on incomes hereby imposed shall be due and payable on the 1st day of July, 1913, for the year 1912, and on the 1st day of July of each succeeding year for the duties assessed and levied upon the incomes of the preceding year, and if the duty on any income remains unpaid after the 1st day of July as aforesaid and after 10 days' notice and demand thereof and therefor by the collector, there shall be collected as a penalty for such nonpayment the sum of 5 per cent on the amount of duty unpaid, and also interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said duty from the time it becomes due. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to relieve the estates of deceased, insane, or insolvent persons from the aforesaid penalty if the failure to pay at maturity was without fault of the person or persons in charge of said estates.

SEC. 6. That if at any time after the duty upon any income is paid, or, becoming due, is unpaid, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue ascertains that the person returning the said income for duty knowingly made a false return respecting the same, the amount of dutiable income so concealed shall be assessed for the year in which the discovery is made and there shall be collected for and on account of any such concealed income double the duty prescribed in this act.

SEC. 7. That at any time after September 1 in each year the internal-revenue collector in any district shall proceed to enforce by distraint upon any property belonging to any person upon whose income a duty has been assessed and levied and which duty or any part thereof remains unpaid, and all the property of any such person wherever situated subject to execution shall be liable to distraint for the collection of the unpaid duty.

SEC. 8. That it shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk, or other officer or employee of the United States to divulge or make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person any information obtained by him in the administration hereof concerning the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof set forth or disclosed in any income return by any person or corporation, or permit any income return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or parts thereof to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; and it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in any manner whatever not provided by law any income return or any part thereof or the amount or sources of income, profits, losses, or expenditures appearing in any income return. Any offense against the foregoing provisions shall be a misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and if the offender be an officer or employee of the United States, he shall be dismissed from office and be incapable thereafter of holding any office under the Government.

SEC. 9. That every internal-revenue collector shall, from time to time, cause his deputies to proceed through every part of his district and to inquire after and concerning all persons therein who may be in receipt of dutiable incomes hereunder, and concerning all persons or corporations having the care and management of property which may produce such income, and to make a list of such persons or corporations and to enumerate said properties.

SEC. 10. That only one deduction of $5,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family composed of one or both parents and one or more minor children or husband and wife. No penalty shall be assessed upon any person, corporation, or association for a neglect or refusal to make return or for making or rendering a willfully false or fraudulent return, except after reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing, to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, so as to give the person charged with such neglect or refusal, or charged with such false or fraudulent return, an opportunity to be heard.

SEC. 11. That in the event that any person with a dutiable income fails to make the return prescribed in section — hereof to the collector or deputy collector, and the person shall be absent from his or her residence or place of business at the time the collector or deputy collector shall call for such annual return, it shall be the duty of such collector or deputy collector to leave at such place of residence or business with some one of suitable age and discretion, if there be such person present, otherwise to deposit in the nearest post office, a note or memorandum addressed to such person requiring him or her to render to such collector or deputy collector the return required by law within 10 days from the date of such note or memorandum, verified by oath or affirmation. And if any person, on being notified or required as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to make such return within the time required as aforesaid, or delivers any return which, in the opinion of the collector, is false or fraudulent or contains any undervaluation or understatement, it shall be lawful for the collector to summon such person or any other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the business of such person or any other person he may deem proper to appear before him and produce such books at a time and place named in the summons and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath respecting any subjects which will tend to disclose the true income. The collector may summon any person residing or found within the State in which the district lies; and when the person intended to be summoned does not reside and can not be found within such State, he may enter any collection district where such person may be found and there make the examination herein authorized. And to that end he may there exercise all the authority which he might lawfully exercise in the district for which he is commissioned. This procedure shall apply to all cases of failure to make return and to all cases in which the collector shall be of opinion that the return is incorrect, false, or fraudulent.

SEC. 12. That when any person, corporation, or association refuses or neglects to render any return required by law, or renders a false or fraudulent return, the collector or any deputy collector shall make, according to the best information which he can obtain, including that derived from the evidence elicited by the examination of the collector and on his own view and information and such knowledge as he can obtain, a return according to the form prescribed of the income derived by any person under the care or management of such person, corporation, or association, and the return so made and subscribed by such collector or deputy collector shall be held prima facie good and sufficient for all the above purposes.

During the reading of Mr. BORAH's substitute,

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question about the substitute which has just been read. In what respect does it materially differ with the income-tax act which was passed in 1894 and declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court?

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will permit the amendment to be read, then I will explain its provisions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought that the Secretary had finished the reading of the substitute.

Mr. BORAH. No; he has not finished reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will continue the reading of the substitute.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho offer what has been read as an amendment at the present time?

Mr. BORAH. No; it was not my intention to offer it now. I assumed that the Senator from Georgia was going to discuss the matter. At the proper time I expect to offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will not discuss the wisdom or the justice of an income tax. The wisdom and the justice of requiring incomes to bear a fair part of the burden of Government is now almost universally recognized.

I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate some of the more important provisions of the excise bill which comes to us from the House, to call attention to the fact that this bill is entirely in line with recent decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States construing the Constitution, and to point out what we may expect as a result of the bill if it becomes a law.

I wish also, Mr. President, while earnestly and sincerely in favor of a general income tax, to give some reasons why it would seem wiser at the present time to adopt this excise bill rather than to pass a general income law.

We are all familiar with the income act passed in 1894. We are all familiar with the fact that in the spring of 1895 it went before the Supreme Court of the United States and was there attacked upon the ground that it was unconstitutional, upon the ground that it was a direct tax, and that therefore the amount should have been apportioned among the several States according to population.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the Pollock case is now a part of the history of the country. The shock that it gave to many lawyers and to the public generally, the belief on the part of many that it overturned a line of decisions which had been rendered for 100 years, that it overturned the construction of the Constitution placed upon it by men who were members of the body which framed that instrument—all this is now a matter of history. But that decision, five to four, still stands unreviewed and unreversed.

In 1909 the income-tax question was again before the Congress. There were Members of the House and Senators who urged that a general income-tax law should be passed, and that we should again take a measure of the Supreme Court and find out whether on reflection a majority of the court would not hold that the sound law had been announced in the dissenting opinions of Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice Harlan.

After full consideration of the question, with a message from the President upon the subject, Congress determined not even at that time to adopt a general income tax. On the contrary, Congress determined to submit to the States an amendment to the Constitution which should expressly provide that an income-tax law might be passed without apportionment among the States according to population.

Congress also went further and passed an excise tax upon corporations, under which all the incomes of certain corporations were to pay a tax provided the incomes exceeded $5,000. The tax was to be levied upon the corporations in respect to the carrying on or doing business.

It was declared to be an excise tax, and it was with respect to carrying on or doing business; but it provided that all of their income should be subject to tax, not only that which came from property used in carrying on or doing business, but even if they had incomes from property not required to be actively used; if the corporations were engaged in carrying on or doing business, its entire net income over and above $5,000 was to be the subject of taxation.

During the discussion of this question Senators now upon the floor took the position that it was not necessary to limit the excise tax to corporations; that it might be properly extended to all persons, firms, or copartnerships carrying on or doing business or with respect to their carrying on or doing business.

The excise tax placed upon corporations has been before the Supreme Court of the United States, carried there in an effort to attack it upon the ground that it was unconstitutional. In the Flint case, reported in the Two hundred and twentieth United States, the special excise tax which the Congress placed upon corporations has been fully considered. The Supreme Court sustained it and distinguished it from the income tax bill, held to be unconstitutional in the Pollock case, and pointed out the difference between a direct effort to subject income to taxation and a special excise tax levied with respect to the carrying on or doing business. Without reviewing the Pollock case, the Supreme Court held that the corporation tax was a special excise tax not required by the terms of the Constitution to be apportioned according to population among the States, and was therefore properly imposed by Congress.

The Supreme Court went further and held that this tax was constitutionally imposed upon all of the income of corporations subject to it, even though part of the income came from property not subject to tax. The fact that the particular corporation was carrying on or doing a business which subjected it to the special excise tax left with Congress the power to measure the amount of the tax and the manner of calculating the tax.

In another decision, that in the Minnesota case, the Supreme Court distinguished between what was carrying on or doing business and what was not under the special excise tax imposed upon corporations, and held that the corporation which had surrendered those provisions of its charter which allowed it to do business or manage its own property, and had leased its property for 130 years, giving up all of its charter powers except the mere right to receive the income under the 130-year lease and divide it or dispose of the property, was not doing business, and that, therefore, such a corporation was not subject to the income tax. So it may certainly be claimed that the tax sustained upon corporations is for carrying on or doing business, and that the carrying on or doing business is the constitutional basis for the special excise tax.

The same principle which makes the tax constitutional when applied to a corporation makes it equally constitutional when applied to a person, a firm, or a corpartnership.

The present bill, in practically the language of the act placing the special excise tax upon corporations, places a special excise tax upon persons, firms, and copartnerships with respect to their being engaged in or doing business. In the Flint case language is used which clearly indicates the opinion of the court that this tax can properly be extended to persons, firms, or copartnerships; and, as I said before, the bill before us, in the very terms of the excise-tax law which has been sustained by the Supreme Court, extends the special tax to persons, firms, or copartnerships. If we adopt this measure, we adopt a measure already practically sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States and one which is in perfect accord with the recent decisions of the court.

The measure is very far-reaching. The term "business" is defined in the proposed act as follows:

The term "business," as herein used, is and shall be held to embrace everything about which a person can be employed, and all activities which occupy the time, attention, and labor of persons for the purpose of a livelihood or profit.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether, under that definition of business, he thinks anybody could escape this tax except the idle rich?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think that the idle rich will escape it. I think there are very few idle rich who do not look after their investments and take care of their profits; and I think that the so-called idle rich who exercise sufficient supervision over their property to direct their own investments, to look after the reinvestment of their profits, and to take care of their property, under the decisions of the courts are doing business, and I think that definition was intended to reach the class to which I refer. The definition is practically taken from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Flint case. I wish to read a few additional definitions of the term "business." In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Day said:

"Business" is a very comprehensive term and embraces everything about which a person can be employed. * * * That which occupies the time and attention or labor of man for the purpose of a livelihood or profit.

The man of great wealth who looks after his investments for the profit that comes to him by giving direction to them would fall within the definition laid down by the Supreme Court. The justice then goes on to say:

We think corporations organized for the purpose of doing business and actually engaged in such activities as leasing of property, collecting rents, managing office buildings, making investments of profit, leasing oil lands, collecting royalties, managing wharves, dividing profits, and in some cases investing the surplus, are engaged in business within the meaning of this statute and in the capacity to make such organization subject to the law.

Persons, firms, or copartnerships occupied in the same way would be equally engaged in business.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have heard it said that there are some incomes that would not be taxed under the bill as it passed the House. I have listened to the definition of business as given by the Senator from Georgia, and my question is, Can the Senator from Georgia imagine any income, however derived, that would not be taxable if his interpretation or definition of business is accepted?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. First, Mr. President, I desire to say that I have been giving the interpretation of the Supreme Court of the United States. I have been reading, rather, from the Flint case than giving my own views. I will a little further on quote additional authorities, and I will say that under the definitions of business by the Supreme Court of the United States, by leading courts of the different States, and by the English courts, I think this bill will practically reach everybody.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that be true, what is the difference, then, between this bill and an income-tax bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The difference is, as described by the Supreme Court in sustaining it, that it is a special excise tax for doing business, and not a direct tax upon incomes without regard to doing business.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Georgia think that that is a substantial distinction to be maintained as against the distinction in the Pollock case?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Supreme Court of the United States in the Flint case sustains the distinction and expressly declares that there is the distinction which I have stated.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator be correct in his interpretation and construction of the Supreme Court decision, then the only difference between the excise-tax bill, which is now before the Senate, and the amendment which I have submitted would be the question of graduation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not agree that that is literally true. I do say that I am not aware of any mode of holding property, and I do not desire to suggest any mode of holding property, which would enable the person possessing it to escape the special excise tax. I hope that the court will carry the proposed excise tax just as far as possible, but it would remain a question for the courts to decide whether a particular man or a particular occupation falls within a proper definition of the word "business." It is a judicial question and not a legislative question. The Supreme Court has declared that we can legally levy a special excise tax with respect to persons carrying on or doing business, and the House has simply followed the decision of the court.

If you ask me for my own opinion you ask for something which is of no value as compared to the authority which comes from the court which has the right to construe the law. At least, I may say that I have great respect for the dissenting opinions of Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice Harlan in the Pollock case. I have never myself been able to overcome what seemed to me the irresistible logic of their opinions. But I find the decision of the majority of the court in that case not reviewed or reversed, and I find here the Flint case, which justifies this tax. While I am referring to this matter I will go just one step further. If the question had been presented for my determination or for my vote in 1909 I would have been much inclined to send at once another income-tax bill to the Supreme Court of the United States; but what did Congress do? Following the message of the President recommending that course, Congress passed a constitutional amendment relieving the Constitution from the construction placed upon it in the Pollock case and submitted it to the States. Thirty-four States have adopted it, four have rejected it, and eight have not yet acted. Would not the case go to the Supreme Court in very much weaker shape if at the present time it should be determined by Congress to send a straight income-tax bill to that court invoking a reversal of the Pollock case? How easy it would be to say, "Congress has accepted that decision; Congress has submitted to the States a constitutional amendment which only lacks the approval of two States to ratify it." Probably before the question reaches the Supreme Court those two will have ratified it. Well might the Supreme Court say, "The action of Congress and the action of the States have so far changed the status of this question that we will adhere to the majority opinion in the Pollock case."

It seems to me that the Senate and the House, by their action three years ago, have made it far more difficult to present that naked question of the constitutionality of an income tax to the Supreme Court. Frankly, I have for years hoped to see the decision in the Pollock case reversed. I would have been glad as soon as one man who belonged to the five rendering the majority decision went off the bench to put it up to the new man; but we have waited, and you have given it a different direction You have almost accomplished the constitutional amendment. How do we know that we can now pass a bill for a straight income tax? It will require approval by the President.

Three years ago Congress acted on the recommendation of the President and gave direction to the question of an income tax. If you adopt the substitute of the Senator from Idaho you take a measure, to say the least, involved in doubt; to say the least, confronted by five to four on the Supreme Bench; and you do it in preference to a measure that the Supreme Court has sustained, discriminating it from the Pollock case, and that will be almost as beneficial.

Now, this whole subject, as shown by the report of the committees in the House and by the debates there, was fully considered in that body, and they reached the conclusion embodied in this bill. Earnestly desirous as they were for a straight income tax, I yield to no one a greater desire to see such a tax than I possess. I believe it is essentially right, and I have no doubt it is coming, and coming in the near future.

Now shall we cast aside a measure which is almost as good, that has already been practically sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, to adopt an income tax that we all want, which would be confronted with an adverse decision of the Supreme Court already existing, and with the further difficulty that three years ago Congress determined that the proper way to treat this subject was to accept the decision as sound and change the Constitution; and coupled with the further fact that before the case is heard in the Supreme Court probably the amendment will have been ratified by the two additional States?

Of course, the adoption of the amendment would not cure the trouble, if any trouble now exists in the passage of the income tax. It would not be retroactive; it would apply only to legislation passed subsequent to its adoption. I wish to go a little further.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not been present during all the time the Senator from Georgia has been discussing this question, but I was greatly interested in his discussion as to what constituted "business."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was just coming back to that; and I am going to read now a number of definitions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to get the Senator's view of it. Is it the Senator's position that any person who is in receipt of an income is engaged in business?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not the mere naked receipt of an income; but if he takes care of his property, if he looks after his real estate, if he reinvests his profits, if he is looking after the preservation of his estate, he is engaged in business under the decision of the Supreme Court and other courts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is reputed—I do not know how truthfully—that Mr. Carnegie is worth some two or three hundred million dollars; that his money is invested in bonds, and that Mr. Carnegie clips the coupons or has somebody else clip the coupons from the bonds, and in that way receives an income. If that be true, would Mr. Carnegie be engaged in business?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That might depend upon how he used his income. If he is engaged in the business of handling his income, then he would be engaged in business. Before the Senator came in I had called attention to two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in which they discriminated between what is "business" and what is not—the Minneapolis case, with which the Senator, of course, is familiar, and the Flint case—the Supreme Court holding in the Minneapolis case that the corporation was not subject to the tax because it had leased all it had for 130 years, retained no control whatever over it, was not reinvesting the proceeds for profit, but was only distributing the proceeds among its stockholders, and had amended its charter to take every power away from it except to receive the rent, divide it among the stockholders, and receive the principal if the property was sold. In the Flint case the broad definition which I read and which is embodied in this act is given.

Now, I would like to read a few more definitions of "business."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to put another supposititious case to the Senator, if I may. There are in New York City a number of people who own lands of immense value. Some of them have been leased for long terms of years, some as long as 99 years, as I understand, some 50 years, and enormous sums are paid to the owners of the land in the way of rentals. Some of the gentlemen who receive these enormous sums of money, greatly exceeding what the Senator or I could earn in our profession, or what a surgeon could earn in his profession, spend their time in London or in Paris, and receive these large sums of money in the way of income from their lands. Would those gentlemen be subject to taxation under this law?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would be necessary to inquire further with reference to them what management was necessary to handle those properties, to what extent the control of those properties became a business, and to what extent as a result of that fact they were themselves engaged in business.

I will say this to the Senator, that I think the bill goes just as far as it constitutionally can, and I think the courts have gone about as far as they possibly can, and I think that in nearly every instance, if an investigation was made, some line of work, at least in the nature of reinvesting profits, in the nature of looking after buildings or having it done, or employing agents to do it, would constitute a business and bring the party within the tax.

Just before the Senator came in I read from the Flint case, and having first shown that the same rule applied to corporations, relieving them, as would apply to an individual, I called attention to the fact that in the Flint case, in the opinion of the court, it is held that managing an office building, collecting rents, dividing profits, investing surplus, would constitute being engaged in business.

Now, I wish to read a little further from some other authorities on that subject, because I confess that I was myself surprised to see what a broad definition "business" had been given and how far the courts have gone in construing what constitutes being engaged in "business."

The broad definition given to the term "business" by the Supreme Court of the United States is in entire accord with the meaning of the term recognized generally by courts and law writers. I will give several definitions from courts and law writers as to the meaning of the term "business," giving it, I have no hesitation in saying, a much broader and more comprehensive meaning than I had supposed was the legal rule.

The definitions are:

"Transaction of affairs," "something to be transacted," "something required to be done," "that which occupies the time and attention or labor of a man for the purpose of profit or improvement," "occupation for gain." So that the courts, the law writers, our own Supreme Court, justify the conclusion that a man can not have his wealth invested, even in leased real estate, if he gives supervision or direction to his agents, or assumes responsibility in any way for the management of his property, or reinvests his profits, or cares for his estate, without being engaged in business. If he does anything that a man can be employed to do for a livelihood or does anything for the purpose of reinvesting his property as a profit or directs his property in any way, it constitutes being engaged in business; and under these definitions I believe there are very few of the so-called idle rich who could not be found and proved to exercise such interest in their property as to bring them within the provisions of this statute.

But, Mr. President, it is not essential to determine accurately that question to justify the support of this measure. It follows judicial decisions and goes as far as we can go following the courts. Now, if we wish to reach incomes and subject them to taxation, we can adopt this bill, and the estimate is made by those who have studied it that it will raise a revenue of $60,000,000 a year. Others insist that it will be considerably less.

As I said before, we confidently expect in the near future that more than two additional States will ratify the constitutional amendment, providing that an income tax can constitutionally be adopted without apportionment between the States according to population.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Georgia think if there were added to the definition of "business" contained in the act passed by the House, the words—

And shall also embrace the act or acts of receiving and caring for the returns or profits of investments of capital of whatever kind—

we would still be clearly within the decision of the Supreme Court in that case?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would hesitate about expressing an opinion on that subject. I think in the House they have adopted the definition given by the Supreme Court of the United States, and perhaps that would be the safest course to pursue.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia is an accurate interpreter, and a few moments ago in describing what "business" is he used almost the identical language I have just read and which I may say is an amendment that I may offer to that section of the bill if the present amendment shall not receive the approval of the Senate.

I wanted, while the Senator was discussing that phase of it, to get his opinion as to whether or not this language "receiving and caring for the returns of investments" constitutes "business" within the meaning of the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not prepared at this moment to express an opinion on that subject. I am not sure that the legislative definition of "business" ought to have been embodied in the bill, but as that definition is exactly the definition given by the Supreme Court, there could be no objection to it. The authorities certainly go to the extent that if the party receiving the money exercises any supervision over the property, it constitutes "business"; that if he uses any portion of his income for reinvestment, taking care of his surplus to enlarge his estate, it constitutes "business." Clearly, to be engaged in supervising a building, to own an office building and collect the rents from it or employing agents to do it, constitutes being engaged in business. The exercise of supervision over their property by men of accumulated wealth constitutes doing business clearly within the interpretation of the courts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the definition of doing business can be so extended as it is thought to be, by reason of the extension being sufficiently binding to cover that class which has been referred to in the bill, I would feel very much disposed myself not to urge the amendment which I have submitted. But I want to ask the Senator from Georgia if he thinks this kind of a case would be covered. It is a concrete proposition, because I know of such a case.

The party owns a very large block of buildings in the city of New York, from which he collects a very large rental. He lives abroad most of the time, yachting in the Mediterranean and luxuriating in the European capitals, but after he has collected the rents here and paid the tax to the city and State upon it he has a very large income.

Now, this gentleman does not pay for the support of the National Government a single cent. He is taxed in no possible way for the benefit of the National Government. The charwoman who washes the dirt from his marble floors pays more tax than he does to the National Government. Would this bill or could this bill by such an amendment as has been suggested by the Senator from Iowa be made to cover that gentleman and his income?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the bill does not do it now I am not sure that the amendment would correct the defect. But I would wish to make some further inquiries about this wealthy son of New York or son of some foreign country, whichever he is. I would wish to know whether he employed his agents; whether he controlled his property through his agents; whether he exercised direction about the management of his property; whether when he had a surplus he invested it. I would wish to carry the investigation a little further, because I have no doubt that in practically every case that would confront us we could find something more than the naked facts the Senator states upon which to base the charge that the party was engaged in business.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MASSEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt that in all probability at the present time the gentleman employs agents. The Senator from Georgia will agree with me, I am sure, that if the employment of those agents would relieve him from the payment of an income tax, it would transpire 24 hours after the income-tax law was passed. He would simply require his renters to deposit their rents in bank for him, and there would be no act by which he could possibly reach it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to suggest to the Senators engaged in the colloquy that it would be absolutely impossible for a man living in Europe to receive rent from a large property in New York without either managing the business for himself or through agents, without employing and paying elevator men, custodians, and other employees about the building, and that under the decision of the Supreme Court the moment he employed an agent to collect rents and pay repairs and to pay taxes, the moment he employed an elevator boy or anybody else, or a custodian, he would be engaged in business.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I disagree with the Senator from Mississippi. The Supreme Court, or no other court, has ever laid down the rule with reference to the doing of business which covers the mere collection of income.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point that I was making, Mr. President, is that a man can not live in Europe and manage a large estate in New York with no other business except to receive rents. Tenants do not voluntarily pay rent; they do not voluntarily go to bank and get a bill of exchange and forward it to a landlord; and unless that man in the case stated by the Senator from Idaho had some agent somewhere to represent him while he was absent he would soon have to turn his property over to the city of New York or to the State of New York for taxes.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly, but, Mr. President, the unfortunate part of it is that the courts have not held that kind of transaction to be the doing of business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, if the Senator will pardon me, they have held that employing an agent to manage the property is doing business. Am I mistaken in that, I ask the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I should like to see the opinion. I want to say, before I close on that point, that if that is true, then the constitutionality of this tax is just as serious as the constitutionality of an income tax. While we call it an excise tax, and while that has some weight with the Supreme Court, yet they have said it is not controlling, that we may call it one thing, and it may in fact be another, and while they will give it weight it will not be controlling weight.

Now, if it be true that this which the Senator from Mississippi suggests as the doing of business is the doing of business within the discussion of the excise-tax cases, then there is no difficulty about making this an income-tax bill, and to cover those who are doing this, beyond question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think, Mr. President and Senators, that we can ourselves exactly determine the point at which the courts will stop and say that a particular person was not engaged in business and the exact length to which they will go to hold that he is engaged in business. I have not undertaken to give an opinion of my own that reaches an exact point. I have sought to point out how broad these judicial constructions are as to the meaning of the "business" and to what a great extent we may expect to reach by a special excise tax the incomes of the country.

I wish especially to press the fact that under the decision in the Flint case the income must not necessarily be derived from business in which the person is engaged. If we locate him as doing business or having an occupation that falls within the class of business, then all of his income is subject to the tax. He then comes into the class, the special excise tax is fixed upon him, and the measure of tax is a legislative problem, and that legislative problem we undertake to solve in this bill by saying that being subject to the special excise tax as a person doing business, all of his net income above $5,000 shall contribute 1 per cent to the National Treasury to help bear the burdens of government. The Flint case fully sustains this view.

Now, the question that confronts us is this: Here we have a bill carefully prepared, studied out with great labor, studied out by men who are just as anxious to pass an income tax of the broadest character as any Member of the Senate. Here we have it conforming to recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Here we have our constitutional amendment almost adopted. If we pass this excise-tax bill we follow the corporation excise tax and reach persons, firms, and copartnerships, and we reach all covered by the broad term "business."

After that is done, if we do not speedily get the constitutional amendment ratified by two other States, if we want to do so then we can pass another act if we find it necessary to measure the Supreme Court on the Pollock case. We can pass an act providing that the incomes of all persons who have not paid a special excise tax shall be subject. Then we can let such an act go to the Supreme Court without jeopardizing a certainty by going to an uncertainty.

It seems to me that this is a bad time to send to the Supreme Court of the United States an income tax. It is bad because three years ago, under the leadership of the President, Congress took another course. And now, when we have every right to expect that not a year must pass until the two additional States will approve the proposed constitutional amendment, we are in the poorest shape possible to send that question to the court and to seek to invoke a reversal of the decision, which stood five to four.

Now, as to the necessity for the income from this act, of course if its associate, the free-sugar bill, passes, the money would immediately be required. But if it did not pass, there are measures pending now between the two Houses that would require more than the income of the Government next year. Take the project to contribute through the States to educational work, take the project to contribute through the States to good roads, take the large increase which has been made in the pensions, and which if the House agrees to the provision offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] will add $30,000,000 additional expense in the next 12 months. Putting everybody at once upon the pension roll it would go up, I should think, to over $30,000,000 next year. I mean, of course, $30,000,000 additional, an additional demand on the Treasury which has not heretofore been made against it for pensions.

I regard the measure sent us by the House of Representatives as the wisest thing we can do under existing circumstances, insisting all the time that by voting for it I do not wish anyone to misunderstand my earnest devotion to a broad general income tax. After the constitutional amendment is ratified, then I think we should pass a broad income tax, wipe out the corporation tax, wipe out perhaps this tax, and provide an income tax pure and simple. I want to add that a graduated plan of an income tax commends itself to me most cordially.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to ask him another question in connection with this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The definition of the term "business" contained in this bill is that it—> shall be held to embrace everything about which a person can be employed, and all activities which occupy the time, attention, and labor of persons for the purpose of a livelihood or profit.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that a great deal of income-producing property in this country is held in this way. A man has accumulated an enormous fortune during his lifetime, and he makes a will constituting certain persons his trustees to take care of the property for the benefit of his heirs after his death, the will providing that the trustees shall manage the property, collect the income, and turn the proceeds over to the heirs. Does the Senator think under this bill all sums of money turned over to those heirs will be taxable?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the bill undertakes to levy the tax then on the trustee, and requires him to pay it before he turns the property over to the heirs. I think the bill undertakes to reach a guardian or trustee conducting the business for a ward.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The trustee may be a member of the family, and he may be paid nothing for his services. In that case would he be engaged in any business for a livelihood?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think a trustee would be engaged in business if managing that property.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The limited provision of the bill is that he must be engaged in it for the purpose of a livelihood or for profit.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; it would be an occupation which he could be engaged in for a livelihood. He would be doing work which somebody else could have been engaged in for the purpose of making a livelihood. It does not mean that the particular business or the particular person taxed must himself be working for a livelihood, but if he fills any occupation which some one might be performing for a livelihood. I think that is the view of the Supreme Court and other courts as to what is covered by the term "business."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the trustees themselves do not receive any income.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But they are engaged in a work or occupation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; but the persons who receive the income receive it without being engaged in any business whatsoever.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The bill undertakes to tax the trustee and guardian, as I understand it, for the management of the property.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not discovered that provision in the bill. The Senator may be right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not undertake, as I said before, to fix the point at which this tax will stop. I think that finally must be a judicial question about which there is some doubt; but I do insist that it is very far-reaching, and the excise tax bill under consideration is our safest plan at the present time to make the income of the wealthy bear a just proportion of the burden of government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the bill under consideration provides in its first section as follows:

That every person, firm, or copartnership residing in the United States, any Territory thereof, or in Alaska or the District of Columbia, shall be subject to pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such person equivalent to 1 per cent upon the entire net income over and above $5,000 received by such person from all sources during each year; or, if a nonresident, such nonresident person shall likewise be subject to pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such person equivalent to 1 per cent upon the amount of net income over and above $5,000 received by such person from business transacted and capital invested within the United States and its Territories, Alaska, and the District of Columbia during each year. The term "business," as herein used, is and shall be held to embrace everything about which a person can be employed, and all activities which occupy the time, attention, and labor of persons for the purpose of a livelihood or profit. The word "person" wherever used in this act shall be held to include natural persons or individuals and firms or copartnerships.

The first section of the amendment, which is offered in the way of a substitute, provides:

That for the calendar year 1912, and for each calendar year thereafter, duties shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid upon incomes herein specified received in such calendar year by every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad, and by every other person as to an income received from any property, business, trade, occupation, profession, or employment, situated or carried on within the United States. The dutiable incomes shall be those in excess of $5,000, and from every such dutiable income the sum of $5,000 shall be deducted in order to ascertain the amount upon which the duty shall be assessed, levied, and collected. The rate of duty upon dutiable incomes shall be as follows, to wit: Upon incomes not exceeding $10,000, 2 per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $20,000, 2½ per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $40,000, 3 per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $60,000, 3½ per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $80,000, 4 per cent; upon incomes not exceeding $100,000, 5 per cent; upon all incomes exceeding $100,000, 6 per cent.

These two sections present in convincing contrast the difference in principle between these two bills. To one who has studied the subject of taxation and is informed as to the effect of tax laws no other argument would seem to be necessary as to the respective merits of these measures.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to renew a question which I asked prematurely this morning. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho what, if any, are the essential differences in legal principle between the bill which he is proposing as a substitute and the bill which was passed and became a law under the Democratic administration of Grover Cleveland in 1894, and which was subsequently pronounced, by a sudden change over night in the opinion of one judge, to be unconstitutional?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in my opinion it would raise precisely the same legal question. I do not seek to present the question in any other way. I feel perfectly confident of being able to sustain the measure here and in the courts. I say this mindful at the same time of the Pollock case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In asking the question my object was to obtain the answer given by the Senator, because from a somewhat hurried reading of the bill I arrived at the same conclusion; in other words, that there was no new legal proposition to be presented to the Supreme Court if this bill should pass the House and stand the test at the White House.

If the Senator from Idaho has any reason to believe that the present Supreme Court would not be guided by courtesy, to put it no stronger—judicial courtesy—by the precedent established by the Supreme Court in the other case, it seems to me that would be a very important fact for the consideration of Senators, because if there was any reasonable basis upon which to base a conviction of a reversal it would appeal to the sympathy of this side of the Chamber very much.

If the Senator can give no reason of that sort, it would seem to us that even if his bill had passed the House and the White House, and had gone to the Supreme Court it would still be a mere fulmination in the air.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, so far as the question of precedent is concerned, I can cite no better instance than the Pollock case itself. As early as 1796 the Supreme Court of the United States decided by a unanimous decision of the court that a tax upon personal property was not a direct tax—decided that the only direct tax was a land tax and a capitation tax. That decision stood unchallenged and uncriticized by the Supreme Court for nearly 100 years. It was reviewed again in the case in Seventh Wallace, where the specific question was raised as to what constituted a direct tax, and it was held that income of insurance companies, or derived from the business of insurance companies, was not a direct tax.

It was again raised in the case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno, in Eighth Wallace, and the Supreme Court reviewed at large, in extenso, the question again and held that a capitation tax and a land tax were the only taxes known as direct taxes.

That was again reviewed in Twenty-third Wallace, in the Scholey case, where the question of an inheritance tax was involved. The Supreme Court again reviewed its former decisions and again announced that the only taxes known as a direct tax to the makers of the Constitution were a land and a capitation tax.

Finally, and fifthly, the Supreme Court took the matter up in the Springer case and reviewed the matter again.

Now, upon five different occassions those who challenged the power of Congress, under the Constitution, to levy a tax upon incomes or upon wealth or property carried their case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and upon five different occassions that court held that under the Constitution these different cases presented did not present a direct tax; that the only direct tax was a capitation tax or a land tax.

I am not going to stop to read these opinions now; I may do so later to some extent. I am now answering somewhat extensively the suggestion of the Senator.

In 1894 the case was passed up to the court known as the Pollock case. The Supreme Court distinguished and overruled nearly 100 years of precedent. If we should stop there alone, Mr. President, with a divided court of four to five, with a change taking place which disclosed that one of the judges changed his opinion, we have this kind of an opinion overruling the precedents of the court for a hundred years previous. It would not be unusual under such circumstances to present the case again, nor presumptuous to assume that the court would go back to its opinions of nearly a hundred years, beginning with those who helped to write the Constitution.

But that is not all. I think we would be perfectly justified now, and I have always thought that we were justified in urging the amendment in 1909 for the purpose of putting it up to the Supreme Court, to ascertain whether or not that was the final adjudication of the court, but, in addition——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. In addition to that, Mr. President, I can not interpret the decisions of the Supreme Court since that time in any other light than that of tearing away the foundation principle upon which it based the Pollock case. You can not reconcile the later decisions with the principles announced in the Pollock case; and, for whatever it is worth, I will say that I believe that the Pollock case has been in effect overruled by the Supreme Court. I do not believe it is the law of that court now and that we are perfectly justified in legislating upon that basis.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I dislike very much to destroy the continuity of the argument of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I was answering the Senator from Mississippi, so that the interruption will not destroy the continuity of my remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I am tolerably well acquainted, as is every other reasonably well-informed man, with the legal literature surrounding the income-tax decision of the Supreme Court; and I take it that the Senator from Idaho and I are one in one respect, to wit, that the decision of the Supreme Court pronouncing the income tax to be unconstitutional was itself unconstitutional, but, unluckily, there is no way of passing upon a decision of the Supreme Court. The question, however, that I had propounded to the Senator from Idaho previously remains still unanswered. That is, What reason has the Senator from Idaho to suppose that the Supreme Court of the United States, having pronounced an unconstitutional decision, will align itself with the Constitution in the future?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi perhaps did not hear my last remark in regard to that. I said that, in my opinion——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I heard the Senator say that from other decisions of the Supreme Court winking in that direction, and from other cases, where, of course, those decisions must have been obiter dictum, he had arrived at the conclusion that the Supreme Court had already virtually overruled that decision, but obiter dicta do not count, you know. I thought perhaps from what the President of the United States said a couple of years ago, and from what I have heard from the Senator from Idaho to-day and from some other things that I have heard from other people, that there was some intimation coming individually from judges of the Supreme Court upon which we might base a confident hope that the court would reverse itself, and instead of giving the country a decision which is unconstitutional might give us one which is constitutional.

Mr. BORAH. If I should have heard anything in the way of a personal communication, I should very much prefer to rely upon the opinions of the court as they are found since that time rather than upon any personal suggestion. I have never deemed it highly professional or entirely safe to take my knowledge of the law from the lips of gossip.

The fact is, Mr. President, that the Supreme Court of the United States has taken up and expressly overruled at least one of the two controlling principles in the Pollock case. For instance, in the Pollock case one of the controlling propositions on the part of the court was what is known as the economic definition of a direct tax; that is, the shiftableness of the tax. If it was shiftable to another person, if it could be transferred to another person, it was an indirect tax; and if it could not be transferred to another person it was a direct tax. That was an argument deduced from the writings of Smith and Turgot and had much to do apparently with the decision of the court.

I think it is impossible to read the Pollock case and not conclude otherwise that that was a controlling proposition in that case. We know that, so far as that proposition is concerned, the Supreme Court has expressly overruled it, and has on two different occasions, if not more, taken it up, considered it, and rejected it. I desire, although the Senator from Mississippi has left the Chamber—perhaps he will look at this in the RECORD—to call his attention to what was said by Justice White in his dissenting opinion as to the effect of this proposition upon the court at the time it was presented:

> Now, after a hundred years, after long-continued action by other departments of Government, and after repeated adjudications of this court, this interpretation is overthrown and Congress is declared not to have the power of taxation, which may at some time, as it has in the past, prove necessary to the very existence of the Government. By what process of reasoning is this to be done? By resort to theories in order to construe the word "direct" in its economic sense instead of in accordance with its meaning in the Constitution, when the very result of the history which I have thus briefly recounted is to show that the economic construction of the word was repudiated by the framers themselves and has been time and time again rejected by the court.

Again, Mr. Justice White said:

> It seems evident that the framers, who well understood the meaning of this word, have thus declared in the most positive way that it shall not be so construed in the sense of Smith and Turgot.
> The argument, then, it seems to me, reduces itself to this: That the framers well knew the meaning of the word "direct"; that so well understanding it, they practically interpreted it in such a way as to plainly indicate that it had a sense contrary to that now given to it in the view adopted by the court; although they thus comprehended the meaning of the word and interpreted it at an early date, their interpretation is now to be overthrown by resorting to the economists whose construction was repudiated by them.

Justice Brown in his opinion said:

> By resurrecting an argument that was exploded in the Hylton case, and has lain practically dormant for a hundred years, it is made to do duty in nullifying not this law alone but every similar law that is not based upon an impossible theory of apportionment.

By reference to the opinion of Mr Chief Justice Fuller, it will be found what weight he gave to that theory of an economic definition of a tax; and, as I have said, that proposition has been taken up in a case involving an inheritance tax, and it has now been definitely decided by the Supreme Court that the shiftableness of the tax is not a controlling proposition with reference to it being direct or indirect So much for that. As the Senator from Mississippi is no longer present, I shall not now further seek to answer his question. "What is truth? said jesting Pilate, and would not stay for answer."

Mr. President, I do not conceal the fact that I am opposed to this bill as it now exists, whether the amendment which I submit should be adopted or not. I do not think it will result in taxing those who ought to be taxed and that it will result in taxing more those who are already taxed too much. We are pretending to tax wealth, but we are so laying the tax that wealth may easily transfer it to those who are not able to bear it and should not in justice bear it. The Senator from Mississippi referred to the position taken as to the decision of the court as being a fulmination in the air. To propose this tax as a tax upon wealth can hardly be said to be a fulmination in the air, but it is quite as profitless if we are seeking to tax those who are now unjustly escaping taxation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. As the Senator from Idaho is now about to pass from the income tax to the bill under consideration, I want to submit for his consideration an amendment to the income tax bill. Under the income tax heretofore adopted in this country, the tax on corporate incomes is paid by the corporation, and the dividends paid to stockholders by those corporations are exempted in the hands of the stockholder. I followed that rule in the amendment which I proposed to the tariff bill of 1909, because I did not think it advisable at that time to introduce any change which might provoke a discussion over details; but I was absolutely certain then, as I am now, that the rule is not a just and wise one. I am just as certain that the wise and just method would be to levy no tax on that part of the income of corporations which they pay out in dividends, leaving the tax to fall upon the dividends in the hands of the stockholders. The soundness of that proposition will become apparent upon full reflection. Let us take a public-service corporation, a railroad company, for instance. If the railroad pays the income tax it charges the tax thus paid to its operating expenses, exactly the same as it now charges the ad valorem tax it pays to States, counties, and municipalities; and that charge becomes a part of the toll which it has the right to take from the public. The result, therefore, is that the railroad pays the tax and charges it back upon those who patronize it. If, instead of levying the tax on the income in the hands of the railroad and exempting it in the hands of the stockholder, you exempt it in the hands of the railroad and levy it upon the dividends received by the stockholder, this can not happen, because if A receives a million dollars in the shape of dividends on his railroad stock he has no power to collect his income tax from the public. Then, again, in the case of other corporations, it simplifies and makes the operation of the law more just in this respect: Suppose the Senator from Idaho had stock in an agricultural corporation or in any other corporation in his own State——

Mr. BORAH. It would seem like a dream.

Mr. BAILEY. From which he received $4,000. Assuming further that the corporation can not assess its taxes back against the public, the Senator would pay indirectly on $4,000 income, whereas a man who had his property otherwise invested would not pay a tax until his income exceeded $5,000. The Senator from Idaho will recall that it was to obviate that kind of injustice that we agreed to an amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] in the session of 1909. Whether or not the pending bill is now accepted, it is certain that an income tax is sooner or later to become a part of the fiscal policy of this Government, and I think the sooner the better; but I hope when it is made a part of our policy the Congress will show itself wise enough to levy the tax upon those best able to pay it with the least inconvenience; and the only possible way to make the men pay the income tax who really derive the benefit from the income is according to some amendment like that I have suggested. I thought once I would offer the amendment; but I think the Senator from Idaho ought to have the right to perfect his own bill, and I hope he will do so in the way I have suggested.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am in harmony with the views expressed by the Senator from Texas. While I have not very much hope that my amendment will ever become a law, if we find some evidence of its ripening into law I shall be very glad to suggest that amendment, or if the Senator from Texas will suggest it I will accept it so far as I can.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the excise tax for the reason that, in my opinion, the doing of business will never be construed by the court with that breadth necessary to cover that class of incomes which we ought to cover in this country, or that class of property which we ought to cover. If I felt at all certain that the Supreme Court would, or, rather, that it could, properly construe the doing of business to cover the mere collection of income, or the mere realization upon settled estates, I would be quite content to vote for this measure. But in my opinion the construction which will finally result will be that which will fasten upon the business activity of the country an additional tax and will relieve the idle incomes or the drones of business entirely from taxation.

I do not say this as charging upon the part of the authors of the bill a desire for that kind of an interpretation, nor, indeed, as desiring that result; but I do believe that that is what would necessarily follow. The bill has been framed not for the purpose of accomplishing that result, but because of what were considered legal restraints with reference to framing it in any other way. Believing, as I do, that it will tax those who employ labor, those who are exploiting business affairs, those who are actively engaged in developing the country, those who are really carrying on business, and that it will not tax those who have retired and who are simply living upon their incomes, who are the drones of business and of society, for that reason I am opposed to the measure as it is submitted, and unless there is some change in it I do not hesitate to say that I shall vote against it, even if my proposed amendment should not be adopted.

There is no doubt in my mind as to who will pay this tax. Whether or not that could be avoided under our present legal situation is a debatable question, but whether it can be avoided or not, the result will be that the low man, as usual, will pay this tax. It will be transferred by those engaged in business where competition no longer exists to the consumer, and the smaller business concerns operating in a competitive field are the small business men of the country anyway. So as we follow the tax in its final operation the incident of it will rest upon those who are already, in my judgment, bearing the principal portion of the burdens of the National Government. Whatever may be the good faith of its authors, which I seek in no way to impugn, the result will be as I have stated.

I do not know whether or not we, at this time, can fully reach as we should reach the large incomes which practically pay no tax. I believe that we can legally do so, and I believe, as I said a moment ago, that if that proposition ever reaches the Supreme Court again we will find that the adoption of a constitutional amendment was quite unnecessary, as was believed at the time by more than one Member of the Senate. I can not refrain from reading a statement as to the purpose which actuated the bringing in of the corporation-income-tax proposition. The then Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, said:

> I shall vote for a corporation tax as a means to defeat the income tax. * * * I am willing to accept a proposition of this kind for the purpose of avoiding what, to my mind, is a great evil and the imposition of a tax in time of peace when there is no emergency, a tax which is sure in the end to destroy the protective system.

Mr. KENYON. Was that said in a speech on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. It was said in the debate upon the Senate floor. When the income-tax amendment was suggested in the debate of 1909 it was first brought into the Senate, as I remember, by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] also offered such an amendment, and afterwards, as I recall, the two amendments became one amendment by agreement between the parties, and was finally submitted to the Senate in that form. It was ascertained at the time in that debate and during the discussion of the tariff bill that in all probability there were a sufficient number of votes in the Senate to pass that income-tax amendment. It therefore became necessary in the minds of those who were opposed to the amendment to submit some proposition which would secure a sufficient number of votes to defeat the income-tax amendment, and I do not reveal any secret when I say that the corporation tax was brought here for the purpose of defeating the income-tax amendment. If it had been believed at that time by those who were opposed to the income-tax amendment that the Supreme Court of the United States would again hold it unconstitutional there would not have been that great anxiety to defeat it here in the Senate. But for fear that it would be held constitutional, for fear that we would have a law which would tax the great idle incomes of this country and tax them probably in such a way that they could not transfer it to those who were already bearing the tax burden, the corporation-tax proposition was submitted in its stead. Of course every body who finally voted for the corporation tax was not thus controlled in purpose. But its origin was due to the fear of passing an income tax which would finally become an effective law.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator refers to the fact that it was probable that the income-tax provision would pass. The fact is that it was universally conceded that on a careful poll we actually had a substantial majority for the income-tax amendment. It was conceded by all that that was the fact.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. That the RECORD may be still more ample, as a matter of fact, at one time we had a majority of 4, not counting several uncertain votes, and the Senator will recall that when I was pressing for a vote from day to day I kept warning our friends on the other side that if we would postpone it long enough our adversaries would take that majority away from us; and the corporation tax, as the Senator has well said, was one of the devices by which they accomplished that result.

Mr. BORAH. Now, Mr. President, why was it that there was a desire to defeat the income tax with the corporation tax? If it be true that the corporation tax reached the same parties and that it is not possible to transfer that tax, but that those pay it who we assume pay it, why was it that the corporation tax was brought here in place of the income tax? It was for the reason that it was well understood that it is much easier, as has been more than once demonstrated, to transfer the corporation tax so that it will be finally paid by the consumer or those who do business with the corporations of the country. The tax is transferred to the consumer or to those who pay the ultimate price for the things purchased of the corporations doing business. That is true in all cases where the corporation is engaged in a field whence competition has been practically driven. The large corporations, the monopolistic corporations, those with the power to fix prices without hesitancy and without any difficulty add this tax to the price of the article which they are selling. The result is, assuming, as we do, that we are taxing corporations which could well afford to pay the tax by reason of their large incomes, we are, in fact, taxing the same people and the same taxpayers who pay the consumption tax to-day.

Take, for instance, the case of the express companies. In 1898, I believe, a tax was placed upon the express companies. The express companies openly and announcedly placed the tax upon the parties doing business with the express companies; added it to the cost of the expressage. There came up to the Supreme Court from the State of Michigan a case in which the question was litigated as to whether or not there was any method by which to hold this tax upon the express company upon whom it had been laid. The Supreme Court held that it was not within the power of the law to fix and establish definitely the incident of the tax. The result was that the tax which we placed upon these companies was immediately and without any effort of concealment passed on to those who were doing business with the express companies.

I call attention to the language of that decision:

> But, as we have said, though the correctness of the claim be arguendo taken for granted, such concession does not suffice to dispose of the essential issues. They are that by the statute the express company is forbidden from shifting the burden by an increase of rates, although such increased rates be in themselves reasonable As no express provisions sustaining the propositions are found in the law, they must rest solely upon the general assumption that because it is concluded that the law has cast upon the express company the duty of paying the 1-cent stamp tax, there is hence to be implied a prohibition restraining the express company from shifting the burden by means of an increase of rates within the limits of what is reasonable. In other words, the contention comes to this, that the act in question is not alone a law levying taxes and providing the means for collecting them, but is moreover a statute determining that the burden must irrevocably continue to be upon the one on whom it is primarily placed. The result follows that all contracts or acts shifting the burden, and which would be otherwise valid, become void. To add by implication such a provision to a tax law would be contrary to its intent, and be in conflict with the general object which a law levying taxes is naturally presumed to effectuate. Indeed, it seems almost impossible to suppose that a purpose of such a character could have been contemplated, as the widest conjecture would not be adequate to foreshadow the far-reaching consequences which would ensue from it. To declare upon what person or property all taxes must primarily fall is a usual purpose of a law levying taxes. To say when and how the ultimate burden of a tax shall be distributed among all the members of society would necessitate taking into view every possible contract which can be made, and would compel the weighing of the final influence of every conceivable dealing between man and man A tax rests upon real estate. Can it be said that by the law imposing such a tax it was intended to prevent the owner of real property from taking into consideration the amount of a tax thereon, in determining the rent which is to be exacted by him? A tax is imposed upon stock in trade. Must it be held that the purpose of such a law is to regulate the price at which the goods shall be sold, and restrain the merchant therefore from distributing the sum of the tax in the price charged for his merchandise? As the means by which the burdens of taxes may be shifted are as multiform and as various as is the power to contract itself, it follows that the argument relied on if adopted would control almost every conceivable form of contract and render them void if they had the result stated. Thus the price of all property, the result of all production, the sum of all wages, would be controlled irrevocably by a law levying taxes, if such a law forbade a shifting of the burden of the tax, and avoided all acts which brought about that result. It can not be doubted that to adopt, by implication, the view pressed upon us, would be to virtually destroy all freedom of contract, and in its final analyses would deny the existence of all rights of property. And this becomes more especially demonstrable when the nature of a stamp tax is taken into consideration. A stamp duty is embraced within the purview of those taxes which are denominated indirect, and one of the natural characteristics of which is, although it may not be essential, that they are susceptible of being shifted from the person upon whom in the first instance the duty of payment is laid. We are thus invoked by construction to add to the statutes a provision forbidding all attempts to shift the burden of the stamp tax when the nature of the indirect taxation which the statute creates suggests a contrary inference. And, in this connection, although we have already called attention to the consequences which must generally result from the application of the doctrine contended for, it will not be inappropriate to refer to certain of the provisions of the act now under consideration, which more aptly served to make particularly manifest the consequences indicated, thus perfumery, patent medicines, and many other articles are required by the statute to be stamped by the owner before sale. The logical result of the doctrine referred to would be that the price of the articles so made amenable to a stamp tax could not be increased, so as to shift the cost of the stamp upon the consumer. Yet it is apparent that such a construction of the statute would be both unnatural and strained.

The argument is not strengthened by the contention that as the law has imposed the stamp tax on the carrier, public policy forbids that the carrier should be allowed to escape his share of the public burdens by shifting the tax to others who are presumed to have discharged their due share of taxes This argument of public policy, if applied to a carrier, would be equally applicable to all the other stamp taxes which the law imposes. Nor is the fact that the express company is a common carrier and engaged in a business in which the public has an interest and which is subject to regulation of importance in determining the correctness of the proposition relied upon. The mere fact that the stamp duty is imposed upon a common carrier does not divest such tax of one of its usual characteristics or justly imply that the carrier is in consequence of the law deprived of its lawful right to fix reasonable rates. Unquestionably a carrier is subject to the requirement of reasonable rates; but, as we have seen, no question of the intrinsic unreasonableness of the rates charged arises on this record or is at issue in this cause. As previously pointed out, to decide as a matter of law that rates are essentially unreasonable from the mere fact that their enforcement will operate to shift the burden of a stamp tax would be in effect but to hold that the act of Congress, by the mere fact of imposing a stamp tax, forbids all attempts to shift it, and consequently that the carrier is deprived by the law of the right to fix rates, even although the limit of reasonable rates be not transcended. This reduces the contention back to the unsound proposition which we have already examined and disposed of. (American Express Co. v. Michigan, 177 U. S. Repts., p 412.)

In 1898 a tax was put upon companies engaged in the business of refining sugar, refining oil, and manufacturing and selling tobacco. It is well known—no longer disputed—that that entire tax was passed on to the consumer, and one peculiar feature of the history of that matter is that after the tax was repealed the companies omitted to take off the extra charge which they had placed there by reason of the tax. It is for that reason that I voted against the corporation tax, and it is for that reason I am opposed to that system of taxation now. It is a subterfuge. It is dealing in duplicity with the people of this country. It pretends to tax wealth, and only furnishes a means for wealth to impose more burdens upon those whose burdens are already too great. Those who are so sensitive about putting this question up to the court again ought to display more sensitiveness about misleading the people, to their increased injury.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator claim that his statement with reference to the corporation tax applies to all corporations and is universally true?

Mr. BORAH. I claim it is true, as I said a moment ago—perhaps the Senator was not present—that that is true with reference to all corporations engaged in business in a field from which competition has been practically driven. That is not true with reference to the small business concerns in competitive fields, but those are the people who are now paying too much of the taxes of this country.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, let me merely add this: I understood the Senator's first statement to be limited as he now limits it, and that his last statement was broader. I do not care to cavil about that; but, taking the last statement made by the Senator, does the Senator claim that—to cite an instance—insurance rates have been raised because of the corporation tax?

Mr. BORAH. I am not familiar with a specific case under the new law, but there were plenty under the law of 1898, and I have no doubt that they will be raised and that finally the entire subject matter of the tax will be covered by the company. Does the Senator know that they have not been? As to insurance rates, the insurance companies have nothing except what the policy holders pay in, anyway. So the incentive is not so great.

Mr. REED. I only know in a general way that life-insurance premiums have experienced no change on account of the corporation tax.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. REED. The Senator and I agree so often, I am so thoroughly in harmony with him on many things that he has said, that I only want to correct his statement to the extent of insisting that he has overstated the case. Beyond any question there are a vast number of institutions paying the corporation tax who have not increased their charges to their customers, and the truth probably lies somewhere between the statement made by the Senator and the extreme opposite.

I can see how an express company may raise its rates. I can see how many companies add all their expenses to their charges. But speaking broadly of the whole country, of all the lines of business, I think the Senator would not be prepared to say that the corporations themselves have not had their net earnings reduced in many instances by this tax. I really think the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho may in his zeal be a little strong in his statement, and he is very glad to have his ardor dampened so that he may fly at a proper height.

Mr. REED. Since I am on the floor, I will say I favor, and my party for many years has favored, an income tax. The Democratic Party placed an income-tax law on the statute books and it was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

The Senator now expresses his confidence that the Supreme Court will reverse its decision if the case is again presented. The argument I have heard, the only one I have heard from the Senator on that line—I did not have the benefit of hearing the first part of his remarks—was that Senator Aldrich and those who were associated with him were anxious to defeat the enactment of an income-tax law by Congress.

Does the Senator think that Mr. Aldrich had any inside information as to the opinion of the Supreme Court upon a case not yet before it?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho did not indicate anything of that kind.

Mr. REED. Well, then, does the Senator from Idaho think Mr. Aldrich and his associates are so much better lawyers than any other people that their fears should be made the basis for legislation?

Mr. BORAH. Not at all; not at all. The Senator from Idaho is not proceeding upon that ground at all. He had the misfortune of not having the presence of the Senator from Missouri when he stated the reasons why he thought the Supreme Court would reverse itself. I did not place it upon the declaration of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Has the Senator any better reason than that to assure us and to assure the country that if his amendment is substituted for the excise bill it will be declared constitutional?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that would require the Senator from Idaho to do what he very much dislikes to do, as he greatly fears it may not have much weight, and that is to advance his own opinion upon so important a matter. But I have no doubt in my mind, as a lawyer, that the Supreme Court has already overturned the principles of the Pollock case.

Mr. REED. I had not any doubt in my mind that they would declare the income tax constitutional in the first instance. The judges, however, held otherwise. I want to submit this to the Senator. I am with him for an income tax. It is practically certain, however, that we can levy an excise tax.

Mr. BORAH. Which we ought not to do.

Mr. REED. It has been decided that the income tax can not be levied.

In that state of the record, does the Senator think it is wise to throw away the certainty which we have for the mere opportunity of once more experimenting with a Supreme Court decision, when he knows that a decision would not ordinarily be reached for something like a year, probably, and maybe longer, and during all that time the uncertainty would continue to exist?

Mr. BORAH. Answering that fully, I will say that I would expend any amount of effort and any amount of energy to go to the Supreme Court as long as I had hope that I could establish a system of taxation which would put a proper burden upon those who are to-day, in my judgment, wholly escaping taxation so far as the National Government is concerned.

Mr. President, I do not know any more than any other man could know from studying the opinions of the court what the Supreme Court would hold. But I have an opinion about it, and I expressed that opinion three years ago during the debate upon the Payne-Aldrich bill. I have not modified my opinion since, and I have no doubt that the Supreme Court has already established the principle upon which this substitute could be sustained.

Mr. REED. Now, just one word further. I agree with the Senator that if there was no other means possible except to pass and repass bills such as he now proposes, if that was our only possible road, it would be well enough to pursue it, even though we should subject ourselves to the criticism the Democrats did suffer from in 1896, when they had the temerity to say that they would use all constitutional methods to secure the approval of an income-tax measure, and for the utterance of which we were denounced as anarchists throughout this country.

But here is the situation to-day. We have a plain and certain road upon which the feet of even blind men can walk, and that is to amend the Constitution. That proposition has been passed by Congress and it has been approved by almost enough States to give it vitality. It only requires the approval of two more States. Before this law now proposed can be tested, in all human probability the approval of those two additional States will be granted. Then the field is open for the enactment of a bill that will cover the entire subject. In the meantime legislation is contemplated and conditions exist which demand a certain revenue, and we have a certain course by which to obtain that revenue.

That is the consideration which leads many of us on this side not to vote for the income-tax amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator will pardon me. I am rather trespassing on his courtesy, but I will be rather brief. The Senator withheld his amendment as it is now proposed until this very day at high noon or thereabouts, with the absolute certainty that we must pass upon this subject before the close of this calendar day. As it is now presented it has not even been printed, and he brings forward at this time, under these circumstances, an amendment which affects the entire country, with no earthly chance for it to be scrutinized and analyzed and understood. I submit if he intended to offer this important amendment he ought to have offered it under circumstances where those who were called upon to vote could do so in the light of a full and fair discussion.

I want to vote for an income-tax amendment if it can be done constitutionally. I want when I do vote upon it to have at least the opportunity to read the measure in print. Of course if the Senator has offered this merely for the purpose of uttering a solemn protest to the country and bringing his views before the country, that is all right, but if it is offered with the expectation that it shall be passed, then it is hardly in consonance with the usual fairness of the Senator that he should offer it when debate is impossible and scrutiny out of the question. I want to ask the Senator why he did not with his usual fairness give us some chance to examine this matter?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho is uncompromisingly opposed to this bill as it rests before the Senate. I have never hesitated to oppose that kind of taxation when I have had an opportunity, but I do so for the reason, as I said a moment ago, that I believe the tax finally rests on those who are already paying the taxes of the country. That is a difference of opinion, I see, between the Senator from Missouri and myself, but nothing has been said which has modified my view in regard to it.

I did not offer this amendment with the hope of defeating the bill to which it is offered as a substitute, but I very much wish that I could do so. I should like to do anything that is possible in a legitimate and parliamentary way to defeat it, because I am opposed to it. But I offered the amendment largely, as the Senator from Missouri has said, for the purpose of submitting my views upon the question, and I should be very happy to be surprised and to have it adopted. But I know how utterly impossible it is to get an income tax through the Congress of the United States. There are a great many people who are in favor of an income tax, but there are not enough of them yet, it seems, to pass it through the Congress of the United States. There are also a great many who think they favor it whose zeal is not quite sufficient to resist the insidious methods always ready to be proposed to circumvent its passage. But I have hope and I have a strong faith that in the end so just a measure will prevail over its open and its concealed enemies After we shall have passed the constitutional amendment, if we do, I will take the chance on this prophecy, that we will not pass an income tax any more readily than we have.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am especially interested in the statement of the Senator that this excise tax, as compared with an income tax, would allow a great deal of capital to escape taxation which otherwise ought to be taxed to bear its fair share of the burdens of the Government. If the Senator is prepared, I should like for him to amplify and give us some tangible facts showing substantially what character of capital and how much would escape taxation under such conditions.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Texas will bear with me for a little time—however, I might just as well take up that subject now as later. I had intended to discuss it later, but I would just as soon do it now.

Mr. CULBERSON. I would be glad if the Senator would take his choice about it and discuss it in his own time.

Mr. BORAH. I know of no reason why I should not do so now.

In order to make my remarks sufficiently connected, I wish to go back a moment to the experience we had in 1898. In 1898 we put a tax upon the large corporations engaged in the refining of sugar, the large companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of tobacco, and upon companies engaged in refining oils. A number of those companies were taxed, and the tax was sustained in what is known as the Spreckels case.

It was argued at the time that tax was laid that it was a call upon the part of the country to these large corporations to take a portion of their large income to sustain the burdens of the war; that it was an extraordinary period; and even those who were opposed to that kind of taxation were willing to yield for a time in the emergency in which we found ourselves upon the supposition that these large corporations would pay that tax. It was conceded that the people were already taxed too much to take on these extra burdens, and that consumption should be relieved and wealth should take a portion of the weight.

Now, Mr. President, what was the fact? What is the historic evidence, uncontrovertible and undenied, that every dollar of the large sum supposed to be laid upon the corporations was paid by the common people of this country in the increased price which the corporations made on their articles to the consumer. The tobacco monopoly not only put it on the price and kept it there while the tax was there, but it put it on the price and kept it there after the tax was taken off. It decreased the size of its package. It met the situation in one way or another; and I am not misstating an uncontrovertible historic fact when I say that every dollar of this increased taxation was unquestionably paid by the consumers of this country, who were already bearing the principal part of our taxes.

The same is true with reference to the other companies, and it is not disputed now that when this tax was repealed men who favored it came forward and said that they had no doubt that the tax had not been paid by these corporations at all.

I call attention to some statements made when the law was enacted and at the time of its repeal.

Senator Platt, of Connecticut, said at the time of its enactment:

> I desire to say a word why I propose to vote against this amendment. * * * It is picking out from all the interests of the country two classes of business where it is absolutely certain that the corporations will not pay the tax, but that it will be paid by the consumer. There is no other business in the country where the corporations or the persons engaged in it can so surely and certainly evade the payment of the tax as in the case of the business of oil refining and sugar refining, and what is more, the persons engaged in the business will be very careful in raising the price of oil and sugar to raise it a little more than the tax, so that the consumer will pay not only the tax, but the additional profit to these two companies.

Mr. PAYNE, when the time came to repeal the portions of the revenue tax of 1898, said:

It is true that there were two classes of special taxation in the war-revenue bill. These were put in by an amendment offered in the Senate, and when they came to the committee of conference they were acquiesced in. I remember making a remark at that time to my associates on the conference committee that they knew and I knew that if this tax should be imposed the people who were expected to pay it would simply put up the price of sugar and petroleum enough to reimburse themselves for the tax which they paid and allow them besides a handsome profit. No doubt such has been the case. I have no doubt that those interests that have been required to pay this tax have collected from their customers more than the amount which they have paid over to the United States in the form of taxation.

In his opening speech upon the repeal of the war taxes, in December, 1900, Mr. PAYNE said:

Of course, Mr. Chairman, some may say why not put this tax directly upon the express companies and telegraph companies? Well, we did consider that, but the express companies had a right to say to their customers how much they would charge for carrying packages from place to place and could easily add the amount of the Government tax to their charges. I know sometimes gentlemen will close their eyes and proceed blindly, as was the case in dealing with the tax on the Standard Oil Co. and putting a tax on a sugar refinery, as was done. They forget to consider that these taxes might possibly not affect the companies at all, but the consumers; and a review of the history of the last two years shows that some gentlemen then anticipated when the tax went on in the Senate that the companies not only got the amount of the tax back, but that the companies got a little additional sum from their customers to enable them to swell their dividends. That was the legislation in that regard. In other words, the tax in all instances seeks the consumer, and usually, if not arrested in its progress, it finds him and forces him to pay the amount due the Government and a little additional also to help swell the dividends of the companies upon whom it was supposed the tax was levied.

Again he says:

This latter tax—

Speaking of the tax upon insurances—

is paid almost entirely by the man who receives the insurance. The man who provides for the future of his family in the event of his death by securing a life insurance or in providing an indemnity for the family—for his wife and children in case the home should burn down—was forced to pay this tax.

Mr. BORAH. Here is a historic illustration. Let me ask the Senator does he have any doubt that when you lay a tax upon the incomes of these large corporations, which are doing business in a noncompetitive field, they will pass that tax on to the consumer? Now, I admit that you may by this tax tax a certain form of wealth. You tax that wealth which is in the field of competition where they can not so successfully pass it on. You tax the small business man, the small corporations composed of those people, already the small owners, the small property holders in the community, and already paying their undue proportion of the tax. That is the class of people it is desired to exempt, whom I would relieve, and I want to reach those who have the vast incomes, who now do not pay anything whatever to the support of the Government.

If the Senator can disclose to me that as a legal proposition it will have the effect of reaching those incomes, I will not urge my amendment but vote for his bill. But so long as it is apparent to my mind, not charging that it was the purpose, not charging that it was the intent of the framers of this bill, recognizing that they were controlled by what they considered legal necessities, notwithstanding all this, so long I say as it is apparent that those who ought to pay will escape, I must insist upon the substitute.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to hear the Senator's view with reference to this matter: How will it be more difficult under an income tax for those who enjoy large incomes to pass the burden on to the consumer than it is for those who will have to pay this excise tax, if it becomes a law, to pass the burden on to the consumer. For instance, if it be an express company or a sugar-refining company, and this tax is imposed upon it as an excise tax, the Senator has shown cases, and undoubtedly there are many such cases and there will be if this becomes a law, where the corporation passes the burden on to the consumer. But suppose it were an income tax, and the man who controlled and owned a majority of the stock in a refining company and enjoyed a large income because of his ownership should be compelled to pay an income tax, why would it not be just as easy for him in that case to pass that burden on to the consumer as it is for the companies to add the burden of of the excise tax to the consumer? In other words, how does the Senator get away from that method of dodging taxes?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am frank to concede that under no system which has yet been devised is it possible to impose the tax entirely and exclusively where it ought to be. It will always be possible in some cases to pass it. But this does reach more where they can not transfer it, and that would be especially true under the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

There are many incomes from settled and trusteed estates, from interest on bonds, and so forth, where it is impossible to transfer it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I wish the Senator would give us an example to illustrate his last statement, where it is impossible for the tax to be, at least in part, transferred on down the line to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I can give you any better example than that of where you have a settled estate and where the trustees are managing the estate. The money is paid over to those who are not engaged in any kind of business, who have nothing to do with the transacting or carrying on of business, who are not in themselves in a position to manage the business and to increase prices, and so forth, but where it is a settled estate, controlled by trustees, those who receive the money having no power to pass back the taxes.

Mr. REED. Of course that is a general illustration applying to a class of people rather than to a class of investment or property. Hence it is impossible for me or anyone else to follow it out.

I want to take an illustration. I want to get the Senator's view. I refer to an illustration which has been used here of some citizen of this country who is possessed of a large amount of real estate which brings in an income, the title to that estate being vested in a corporation and the income turned over to the individual. I believe it has been conceded that that is one case where there would be difficulty in levying a tax under the excise bill now before us. But that could be reached by the bill proposed by the Senator.

Now, let us take an illustration. Here is an estate that owns a half dozen large business blocks in the city of New York, the title vested as I have said and the income tax is levied so that it reaches those rents after they have passed through the conduit of the corporation into the hands of the real owner. Therefore the profits of that real owner are decreased by the burden of taxation which has been placed, not upon the property itself, not upon the corporation holding the title, but in fact upon the income, so that in fact the burden is fixed upon the property.

Can the Senator conceive of any property, rental property, where all of the charges of every kind, including these taxes, are not in the last analysis paid by the tenant? Can you not trace back this burden, after all, in every instance, to the capital invested and from the capital to those who have to use it with as much certainty as an excise tax may be traced to the ultimate user or consumer? I confess I see difficulties. But I am interested in the Senator's argument, and that is why I am taking his time.

Mr. BORAH. I am frank to say, as I said a moment ago, that there are very many instances in which we can not prevent the transfer, but without going into detail, I have never read a thorough book upon the income tax wherein it was not stated and conclusively shown to my mind that it is the most difficult of all tax of this kind to be transferred. You can not prevent it in all instances, but there is one saving proposition about it always, and that is in a graduated tax he pays in accordance to his income and therefore if he raises his income he pays more tax and he does not get very much consolation out of that.

Mr. President, the subject of taxation must always be of deep interest to the people. Other questions come and go, but taxation we have with us always. Other problems may seem of far more importance and of a more pressing nature, and for a season they may be so. But the power of the National Government in the matter of taxation is without limit and the tendency to extravagance is without bounds—these two propositions rightly considered will bring every one to the firm realization that taxation is a subject of permanent import.

Furthermore, there is no advantage so elusive and subtle, yet so permanent and constant in its unjust and oppressive effect as that of the unfair and improperly distributed burden of Government. The citizen going about his duty, about his business, is not in a position to know what goes with the money collected by the Government, neither is he in a position to know the equities of the levy or why this tax is laid here and that tax there—so he meets the demands of his Government and the ever-increasing and inequitable burden is borne. If one class of businss is bearing its unjust proportion or if some people escape their just proportion while others pay, there must in the end be felt the weight which marks the difference between success and failure, of poverty and prosperity.

Extravagance, looseness in the expenditure of public money is a national vice. It is a twin vice to extravagance in private life. It does not matter how much individual leaders talk economy, how earnest and honest may be the efforts to bring about a reasonable curtailment of national expenditures, it matters not what platforms may declare; until the people arouse themselves to the consideration of the question, make it an issue, nothing permanent will be accomplished. I have no doubt the State and National Governments are expending from 25 to 50 per cent more than is necessary in order to secure the same amount and the same kind of government now had. I am going to discuss a little later the value of the income tax as a teacher of economy. What I want to say now is that millions of dollars are being collected from the people that ought to be left with the people to serve not only the conveniences but in many instances the actual wants and necessities of life. And the worst of it, the misery of it all, is that so far as the national burdens are concerned they are being borne in grossly unjust proportions by those not able to bear them. If these vast sums thus collected could be collected from those who would scarcely miss them it would be bad enough, for at best national extravagance is a pernicious vice; but when these sums are collected from those who can not afford to pay them it is an economic crime.

Taxes seem to seek the low man with inevitable and remorseless certainty. All efforts to equalize the burdens of taxation according to the rule of ability to pay have so far failed, and only in a slight degree are we now improving upon the experiences of the past. That form of wealth now most remunerative most easily escapes taxation or most easily passes the tax on in the way of increasing prices to those less able to pay. Wealth should not bear all the burdens of government. Every man should in some way respond to the call of the government under whose institutions he lives and whose protection he enjoys. The contention has not been and is not now to place all the burdens of government upon wealth, but only its proper proportion under the golden rule of taxation that such burdens should be based upon the ability to bear them.

There will never be a system of taxation devised, however, which will prevent the transfer of an undue proportion of taxes to those who can least afford to pay them. The income tax will not accomplish this entirely, but as a part of a system of taxation it goes far toward accomplishing it and though not wholly, yet it will to a marked extent relieve those who are paying too much and reach those who are either not paying enough or worst still nothing at all, comparatively speaking.

History reveals with unvarying monotony the effort and the success of the strong to place all taxes necessary to sustain the government upon the weak. Solon, the wisest political leader of antiquity, when called upon to write the laws for the Athenians, found those in power who were privileged by birth and transferred the control from those of such privileges to those of wealth. But while he gave wealth the power he also imposed upon it all the burdens of government. He made their obligations to the government correspond to their power in the government. But immediately after Solon's death wealth at once transferred the burdens of taxation to the poor, but sought to retain the power of government. The result is familiar to all and I shall not take time to recount it. It was Balzac, the great French novelist, I think, who said "Money never yet missed the smallest opportunity of being stupid."

It is not too much to say that the brutal system of taxation which prevailed and had prevailed for years was one of the contributing causes of the French Revolution. Practically the whole enormous burden of government was borne by the middle and the peasant classes. Fully three-fifths of the land, that part which belonged to the King or to the nobility, was exempt from taxation. Upon the balance, two-fifths, was laid almost entirely direct taxes. In addition to this every conceivable form of business was taxed—that principle which we are now extending in this country with such haste prevailed in all its logical details. The peasant starting from a Province to Paris with a cask of wine would pay toll sixteen times before he reached Paris to the feudal lords and the King. His hay, pigs, chickens, and everything paid proportionate toll before he reached the market. He could not marry or christen his child or bury his dead or pursue any kind of business without paying the excise tax. Arthur Young, who traveled extensively in France, estimated that out of every $16 earned or realized by the peasant he paid $12 in taxes of some kind. It should be remembered, too, that at this very time France was rich in her natural resources and healthy in her economic conditions. If the burdens of government had been properly distributed the people would have been prosperous and contented.

While all this was going on and the people were groaning under the weight the great estates were exempt. Wealth had succeeded in shifting the whole burden of taxation to the poor. The golden rule of taxation was to whomsoever hath shall be given more and from whomsoever hath not shall be taken what he hath.

Turgot made a heroic effort to impose a tax upon the basis of ability to pay—that is, in effect, to equalize taxation. He sought to impose a tax upon the nobility and upon the great estates. Had he been successful in his plan there would have been no French Revolution in my opinion. The well-meaning, weak King stood by his minister for a time, but finally yielded to the demands of the nobility, and the weight of the government was placed back upon the middle class and the peasantry. The French Revolution was a fearful thing, but it was the most splendid demonstration of the law of retribution ever known among men. It would have been more agreeable if its fearful executions could have taken place in a more orderly way, but it was in accord with the decree of eternal justice for them to take place. Reason and argument no longer had any effect with the nobility; nothing could move them to a sense of justice or divorce them from their selfishness and brutality except a most terrible slaughter.

The history of taxation in the United States from a national standpoint has not been dissimilar to the history of taxation in other countries. We are young yet, but we have made progress. There has been the same struggle to transfer the tax to the low man, to those least able to pay it. That struggle has been so successful in operation as to practically change the Constitution of the United States. When the fathers framed our Constitution they placed no limit, save as to exports, upon the power of the National Government to tax anything and everything, and established but two rules, apportionment as to direct taxes, and uniformity as to indirect. The more we consider the scheme of the fathers the wiser it seems. It was broad and all encompassing, and had it been carried out faithfully would have been efficient to do justice in taxation. It included as direct taxes taxes upon lands and a capitation tax. All others were indirect taxes.

Thus the National Government could lay a tax upon imports, and each would pay in proportion as he consumed. But it was far from their intention to place the whole weight of the Government upon consumption, so they provided early for a tax upon wealth, upon what was then a luxury—carriages—which tax was sustained in the Hilton case. So far as the fathers understood the Constitution, and as it was interpreted and administered for a hundred years, the National Government could secure such portion of its taxes as it saw fit from incomes—from the less active and more idle wealth of the country. There was a tax upon consumption to which they would all contribute, and by reason of which every citizen gave some support to his Government. No man should escape entirely his contribution to the Government. It is not only a duty, but it makes him a more vigilant, thoughtful, interested citizen. On the other hand, it is manifestly inequitable and unjust that consumption should bear all the taxes, for this is to compel the man of small means to pay almost, and sometimes quite, as much to the Government as the man of great income.

Thus the fathers, in addition to the power to tax consumption, left the way open to tax wealth according to the first rule of taxation, to wit, the ability to pay. It would doubtless have startled the fathers to know that they had framed a Government in which it would be possible in time to exempt wholly and entirely as a practical proposition from the burdens of Government the vast incomes now arising from our great fortunes. But after a hundred years that is the situation. More and more is the tendency to place the burden of the taxes where it can be transferred to the man of least ability to pay it. It all illustrates the persistent, resistless tendency to place the heavy weight of government upon the poor, or, at most, upon the active forces of wealth, upon industry and energy, and to exempt idle wealth.

Let me give you an illustration. In one of our large cities stands in a central position a magnificent block of fine buildings, worth millions of dollars. The income is very large. After paying State and county taxes, which are really charged up in the rent, the owner derives a vast income. Though an American, the owner lives abroad, yachting on the Mediterranean or lounging in foreign capitals. American society is apparently too crude and American soil not sufficiently sacred to retain him among us. He does not pay a farthing to the support of the National Government. The charwoman daily bending over his marble floors, the laborer who repairs his building, each pays more to the support of the National Government than this multimillionaire. The peanut vender conducting his business under the shadow of these buildings pays more to the support of the National Government than this man. When they tell me that our fathers framed or intended to frame a government which would enforce such a system I reply that it is a libel upon the fathers and is refuted by every page of history.

I might extend the illustrations. I could recall another American who collects from ten to twelve millions a year in the way of interest upon bonds. He pays but little more taxes to the National Government than a workingman in the mines upon which the bonds are raised.

The American millionaire must look this question of taxation upon the part of the National Government squarely in the face. He will not be so wise in retaining his wealth as he has been in gathering it and not so patriotic as a shrewd sense of business would suggest if he further insists upon being driven to the discharge of his duty toward the National Government. He should voluntarily assume to take on more of these expenses. If we are to build battleships he must help in accordance with his ability to pay for them; no one has so much to be protected. If we are to continue to take over more and more to the National Government the expenses and the responsibilities of the administration of affairs throughout the land he must not consider himself relieved when he shall have merely met the taxes assessed by the State.

If it were the belief of the American people that these great fortunes had been fairly and honestly gathered, still there would be in justice the claim that they should respond in accordance with their ability to pay. But added to this just principle of taxation is a feeling of profound significance, and he is a blunderer who does not weigh it when considering these matters. These people have legal title to these great fortunes, but a great majority in this country doubt if they have the moral title to them.

When one observes the indifference of wealth to this civic responsibility; when one finds a studied and selfish determination to avoid meeting the burdens of government; when one sees a great State, by reason of the shameless activity of great interests, cancel the ratification of an amendment to the Constitution providing for the levying of an income tax, and on the other hand remembers the deep-seated conviction that many of these vast fortunes have been wrongfully acquired and that in good morals they do not belong to their legal holders, it is not at all difficult to diagnose the spirit of resentment everywhere abounding even among thoughtful, sober, law-abiding, orderly people. I ask these holders of great wealth this question: Suppose the people should see fit, in a legal and orderly way, calmly but determinedly, to repeal the law of inheritance, where would your children and your children's children find themselves? It must be remembered that there is more than one way for the Anglo-Saxon love and conception of law to deal with this thirst for and dominancy of wealth. The way for men of wealth to allay discontent and silence the criticism which everyone recognizes as an element in our social and political life is to faithfully and willingly meet the responsibilities of wealth and discharge its duties and obligations both to society and to the Government.

I do not stop now to argue whether these fortunes have been justly earned. I do not seek to combat the widespread belief that through rebates, stolen franchises, favoritism, dishonest stock jobbing, unconscionable stock watering they have been acquired and built up, a belief, as I say, which is entertained by good citizens in all walks of life. I only appeal to them at this time to stop this blind, senseless determination to defeat the power of the Government to properly tax wealth, to take a just portion of these incomes to meet the expenses of government. I suggest to them in their own interest, if you please, but more particularly in the interest of honest, decent citizenship and the good order and perpetuity of our Republic, to cease from flaunting year after year their wealth, their wastefulness, their enervating luxuries in the face of the poor and less fortunate, cease those things which breed hatred and dissatisfaction, and on the other hand, mindful of their due proportion of the expenses of maintaining this Government, assume their proportion of the expenses which they year by year vote and which fall ultimately and almost entirely upon the backs and appetites of the common people of the country.

I am going to read a paragraph from one not given to loose speaking, one trained to the principles of English jurisprudence profoundly read in all her wide-reaching domain—a system, sir, which has been the pride and boast of all men who place the protection of property, and acquired wealth among the foremost duties of government. I quote from Chief Justice Coleridge, of England:

> All laws of property must stand upon the foot of the general advantage, for a country belongs to its inhabitants, and in what proportions and by what rules its inhabitants are to own its property must be settled by the law, and the moment a fragment of the people set up rights as inherent in them and not founded upon the public good, plain absurdities follow, for laws of property are like all other laws, to be changed when the public good requires it.

Will not these people bear in mind that these fortunes are gathered and transmitted under laws made by the people? Will they not bear in mind that by armies and navies our institutions are sustained to protect them? Will they not forget their selfishness and call to mind that not 1 cent of these vast fortunes go to their children to keep them in luxury and ease, but because the law which the people make so provides? Still they band themselves together to defeat all effort to place them upon a just proportion of the expenses of this beneficent Government under which they have so abundantly garnered, of this Government whose function and duty it is to maintain and enforce laws which protect their rights. It is possible to write into the statutes and laws of the land the inspired decree of 2,000 years ago, "Thy money perish with thee."

It is often said that there is growing up in this country a feeling against property, against wealth as such. If we are to judge the situation by the beneficent and favorable laws under which wealth may be gathered and held we must find the charge to be untrue. If we are to judge the feeling of the people by the tolerance they disclose in dealing with these subjects, we must know the charge to be false. There is no country in which there is so little envy upon the part of those of small means toward their more fortunate neighbor. There is no land where property is safer; more thoroughly protected. So long as our Government is worthy of the name it bears this should always be so, and industry and frugality should always find their impetus in the encouragement which the Government throws around their fruits. There are only two questions, sir, that the American ever asks of the man of great wealth: Did you get it honestly; if so, it is as safe from assault as the humblest competency in the land; second, are you in its use meeting the duties and obligations to society and the Government which its possession places upon you; if so, your standing is not only unimpeached but greatly honored. The American people unfriendly to wealth? Why, sir, this is the only Government on the face of Jehovah's footstool where there is no power upon the part of the National Government to tax the income from these great estates. This is the only land in the world where they are thus exempted. If an oriental navy were hammering at San Francisco to-day, and a hundred million dollars had to be collected to meet the emergencies of war, these vast idle incomes could not, as a practical proposition be touched, even to save the Republic from destruction.

Yet, sir, in their blind and selfish idolatry of their hoarded millions, they refuse to ratify a constitutional provision giving this Government the means of drawing upon them for self-preservation. That is the indictment, sir, against wealth. The Government under which these men have so beneficently prospered, the Government which expends millions to maintain navies and keep up its armies, pay for its courts and operate its departments, that Government is to remain shorn of its power to draw any part of its expenses from those who could pay and suffer not in anywise from the payment. No, sir; there is no prejudice against the rich. We only demand that they shall come forward and help bear, according to their ability, the ever-increasing expenditures of government. They will never miss it. They will not need to deprive themselves of a single comfort. They will not have to remit a single pleasure. They will not have to deny themselves a single luxury. They can, without inconveniencing themselves, lift from the shoulders of those whose efforts and toil bring them at best but a modest competency, and some not even so much, the unfair weight which now rests upon this class of our people.

I said in the beginning that we were extravagant in the use of public moneys—we are. The best teacher of public economy is an income tax. If the Government should call upon the men of wealth to meet these expenditures according to their ability to pay, they would soon become advocates of economy. They would be interested in our supply bills. It would become an educational force permanently and persuasively and persistently at work to keep down expenditures and hold them within economic limits. So long as the taxes can be transferred to those who can not resist their payment, so long as those of influence and power can pass them on, so long as these sums are collected wholly from consumption, we are going to suffer from indifference to public extravagance. If the Government should say to the man of great wealth, "We need this year a certain per cent of your income," the man of great wealth would say in return, "I want to know what you are going to do with it." When he gets a call for a specific, concrete proposition, and knows that the call is for taxes, he will soon become interested.

Mr. President, it has been said here that this excise tax has been held to be constitutional and that its legality is not open to question. In my opinion the legality of this excise tax is as debatable a proposition as the substitute which I offer in its stead. The Supreme Court, it is true, passed upon the corporation tax and held that, so far as that tax was concerned, it was properly laid under the Constitution, but in order that it may go into the RECORD and that we may not be in error as to just what the court held when we vote upon this matter, I desire to read, with a view to commenting upon it briefly, a paragraph or two from the decision of the court:

> It is therefore apparent, giving all the words of the statute effect, that the tax is imposed not upon the franchises of the corporation irrespective of their use in business, nor upon the property of the corporation, but upon the doing of corporate or insurance business and with respect to the carrying on thereof, in a sum equivalent to 1 per cent upon the entire net income over and above $5,000 received from all sources during the year; that is, when imposed in this manner it is a tax upon the doing of business with the advantages which inhere in the peculiarities of corporate or joint stock organizations of the character described. As the latter organizations share many benefits of corporate organization it may be described generally as a tax upon the doing of business in a corporate capacity. In the case of the insurance companies the tax is imposed upon the transaction of such business by companies organized under the laws of the United States or any State or Territory, as heretofore stated.

The Supreme Court said, in other words, that the advantages of doing business in its corporate capacity was such an advantage as that you could rest an excise tax upon it, and that it was taxing, not the franchises, not the doing of business alone, but the doing of business in its corporate capacity by reason of the advantages which arose from doing business in that way.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether he agrees with the broad construction of the term "business" given this morning by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] as including every possible means of acquiring money?

Mr. BORAH. I do not.

Mr. WORKS. It seems to me that if that construction is placed upon business we bring ourselves squarely within the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and if the bill is enacted it will be unconstitutional.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator's suggestion is a very proper one, for the reason that if the bill is unconstitutional then an income tax would be, and if an income-tax law would be unconstitutional this would be.

I think the Supreme Court, with all due respect to that tribunal, has refined upon this question to the limit, and it will no longer be able to uphold the distinction sought to be made in the income-tax decision, and I do not think, from its late decision, that it intends to do so.

The court, in the corporation-tax case, further says:

> The act now under consideration does not impose direct taxation upon property solely because of its ownership, but the tax is within the class which Congress is authorized to lay and collect under Article I, section 8, clause 1 of the Constitution, and described generally as taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, upon which the limitation is that they shall be uniform throughout the United States.
> Within the category of indirect taxation, as we shall have further occasion to show, is embraced a tax upon business done in a corporate capacity, which is the subject matter of the tax imposed in the act under consideration. The Pollock case construed the tax there levied as direct, because it was imposed upon property simply because of its ownership. In the present case the tax is not payable unless there be a carrying on or doing of business in the designated capacity, and this is made the occasion for the tax, measured by the standard prescribed. The difference between the acts is not merely nominal, but rests upon substantial differences between the mere ownership of property and the actual doing of business in a certain way.

The State grants a franchise to the corporation. There is an advantage in doing business in that way. There is a relief from certain financial responsibility or obligation by reason of being a stockholder rather than a copartner or an individual in business; and the advantage which arises by reason of that franchise to do business in a corporate capacity was sufficient to justify the court, as it believed, in holding this excise tax to be not a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution. But if you lay a tax upon me because I am collecting rents from my property, will that be said to be an indirect tax when if you lay a tax upon the same income realized by reason of the collection it is a direct tax?

Again the court says:

> The tax under consideration, as we have construed the statute, may be described as an excise upon the particular privilege of doing business in a corporate capacity.

Has the Supreme Court decided anything other than that?

The learned counsel who represented the parties contesting this tax urged that it was in effect a tax upon property; that when you tax a man for doing business in his individual capacity it was necessarily a tax upon his property, because out of his property he pays his taxes. That is precisely this bill here. If I happen to be running a farm and my income is over $5,000, you tax me for the business of carrying on farming, and out of my real estate on the farm I pay my tax. Is that to be said to be an indirect tax, and if you turn around and tax that income after I put it in the bank that it is a direct tax?

But the Supreme Court in answer to the contention of the counsel said: We are not taxing the income, we are not taxing the doing of business, we are not taxing the property, but we are taxing the right to do business in a certain way, which is a peculiarly exceptional advantage; and that is the extent of the Flint case. There is not a line or an intimation anywhere to be found that I have been able to discover which holds that you can lay an excise tax upon an individual for the mere right of engaging in his natural right to carry on some kind of business. He has no advantage over his neighbor. He stands in no peculiar relation to the business world. He has nothing exceptional upon which to place a tax. He is one of the members of a community, and therefore he passes entirely outside of that class who occupy a peculiarly and singularly advantageous position as does a corporate entity.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Did the Senator from Idaho read this sentence? I can not recall whether he did or not. It is very pertinent to the argument he is now making and emphasizes what he has just said. It is from the opinion in the Flint case. The court say:

> It is this distinctive privilege which is the subject of taxation, not the mere buying or selling or handling of goods which may be the same, whether done by corporations or individuals.

There is rather an inference there that the excise tax could hardly be sustained if it were levied upon the privilege of handling or buying goods by individuals.

Mr. BORAH. I have not read that, although I have it marked here. Undoubtedly it leaves a construction, or rather an inference, that the court in logical or practical effect held that, unless that special method of doing business was engaged in, there was nothing upon which to rest the excise tax as distinguished from a direct tax.

Now, that is brought home to us more conclusively when we read the briefs of the attorneys who presented this cause on the part of those resisting the tax, because the only answer the Supreme Court was able to find, if I may use the expression in that way, or rather the only answer which could be found, from a legal standpoint, to the contention made by those attorneys was that they were taxing a special advantage or a corporate capacity, and it was by reason of that that they sustained the tax. There is one more sentence that I should like to call attention to—

> with the advantages which arise from corporate or quasi-corporate organization; or, when applied to insurance companies, for doing the business of such companies. As was said in the Thomas case (192 U. S., 363 supra), the requirement to pay such taxes involves the exercise of privileges, and the element of absolute and unavoidable demand is lacking.

Let us discuss for a moment that single sentence. Properly analyzed, it would result in establishing a proposition that this tax would not be sustained, taken in connection with the sentence which was read by the Senator from Iowa and this sentence:

> The requirement to pay such taxes involve the exercise of privileges, and the element of absolute and unavoidable demand is lacking.

That is to say, if the people do not want to pay the tax they are not compelled to do so, because they can waive the privilege of doing business in a corporate capacity. But would the court say that the element of unavoidable demand is lacking if you should lay a tax upon every business about which the human mind could be engaged? Would it not be certain, definite, and unavoidable that the people would have to pay it and that they would have to pay it out of their property?

When you take into consideration the fact that you could have no precedent for this tax; that the Supreme Court has never gone further than to sustain an excise tax upon the capacity or upon the privilege of doing business as a corporation, and place against it the proposition that the Supreme Court in five different cases has sustained a tax upon the same principle as this substitute, and that the only citation to be cited against it is the Pollock case, where a majority of one established a different principle, and that there are no less than three decisions of the Supreme Court in the inheritance-tax cases which challenge, if they do not destroy, the principles upon which that case was decided, which one of these bills rests in the greatest legal security? The one which rests upon the precedent of a hundred years, with a divided court against it, with some three subsequent decisions seeming to overrule, or the case which has no legal foundation upon which to rest at all? Is it any more discourteous to the Supreme Court or any more a question of proper policy and decorum to put this case up to the Supreme Court again than to put up to them a case which is taxing all kinds of business in the country and ask them to hold that it is not a direct tax in the face of the decision of the Pollock case? In my opinion, the Supreme Court, as I have said, have overruled that case, but certainly it is a new doctrine in this country if we can not submit to that court as often as seems desirable so profound and far-reaching a question as to how you shall lay the taxes of 90,000,000 people.

I never did believe, I do not now believe, that there is any necessity for submitting the constitutional amendment, and it would not have been submitted had not a crisis arisen which either impelled the submitting of the constitutional amendment or the adoption of an income tax at that hour.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Idaho finishes his argument upon the phase of the case which he now has in hand. I desire to call his attention to page 10 of the House bill, upon which I believe that the House adopted without any qualification whatever the income-tax principle. I will read the paragraph I have in mind. I call the attention of those who are supporting, without amendment, the House bill to what I am about to read:

> Every person, firm, or corporation who pays to any officer, employee, or other person a salary or compensation, interest, or other accrued profits, exceeding $5,000 for a taxable year, every lessee or mortgagor of real or personal property who pays to the lessor or mortgagee interest or compensation exceeding $5,000 for a taxable year, and every trustee, executor, administrator, conservator, agent, or receiver, employing any person or paying any person business earnings, within the meaning of this act, exceeding $5,000 for any taxable year, computed on the basis herein prescribed, shall make and render a return as provided herein to the collector or a deputy collector of his district, and shall deduct and withhold the tax herein imposed, and shall pay on said return the tax or 1 per cent per annum as required by this act.

This paragraph, if I understand it, requires the partnership or firm or corporation and the lessee or mortgagee, executor, and so forth, paying to any person more than $5,000 a year to pay the tax. Of course, that is a tax upon the person who receives the money; it is to be paid without any regard whatsoever to the business or the employment of the person who receives the money; and to the extent that I have just suggested it is a plain, simple, income tax, dissociated from any attempt to fasten the excise tax upon it. If it can be done in that instance and under those circumstances, it can be done under all circumstances and apply to all people.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. As I understand, this bill was introduced and is being pressed for consideration upon the theory that it is a tax upon business. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the peculiar language of the first section of the bill with respect to that claim. It provides:

> That every person, firm, or copartnership residing in the United States, any Territory thereof, or in Alaska or the District of Columbia, shall be subject to pay annually a special excise tax with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such person equivalent to 1 per cent upon the entire net income over and above $5,000 received by such person—

Mark this language following now—

> From all sources during each year.

Not from the particular business, but the tax is imposed upon money realized "from all sources." Then, going a little further down in the bill, it provides, in determining what shall be taxed, that it shall be the money "received by such person from business transacted and capital invested."

The definition of business does not cover capital invested, because a man may contribute to the capital of the business by subscribing for stock or the like without being connected directly or actively with the business. The term "business" is defined as follows:

> The term "business," as herein used, is and shall be held to embrace everything about which a person can be employed, and all activities which occupy the time, attention, and labor of persons for the purpose of a livelihood or profit.

Certainly this definition only includes such income as is derived from active participation in the business or labor performed, while the previous portion of the bill, as I have pointed out, is evidently intended to reach something else.

Mr. BORAH. I think the bill has all the vices of an income tax without any of its virtues, both legally and as a practical proposition. That expression might be misunderstood if I did not say that I have no doubt that those who drew it felt constrained to draw it in the way they did by reason of the decisions of the courts.

Mr. President, it has not always been considered anarchistic or characteristic of irresponsibility to advocate an income tax. That has grown up to some extent in the last few years with the growth and influence of those powers which more and more dominate and control the politics and the public thought of this country. It never occurred to those who organized the Republican Party and put it upon its feet, who took care of it for the first 10 or 15 years of its existence, that an income tax was what has been called here in the Senate Chamber a conspiracy against property. That idea has only arisen of late years as that influence has more and more permeated the popular mind, which finally resulted in the overthrow, consciously or unconsciously, of the precedents of our Supreme Court which had been established for nearly a century. It is that subtle, silent, elusive, indescribable influence created and sustained by wealth and which finally results in established institutions and crystallized statutes which has resulted in placing upon those in this country who insist upon an income tax the appellation of being enemies of frugality and of wealth.

I want to read from John Sherman statements uttered at a time when he was opposing the repeal of the income tax of 1870. We may well reflect upon the difference in public thought between that day and this when we find the leader of this great organization speaking in this language to his party and to the American people when he was contending, with all the power that he possessed against a disestablishment of a system of taxation which he believed to be a just one and the establishment of one which he characterized as cruel and unjust. We may well hark back in these days to those men who laid broad and deep the fundamental principles which insured the success of our party for 40 years, and withhold some of the anathema which is constantly being heaped upon those who would take a part of the burdens from those who are now paying more than their share and place it upon those who are paying practically no part of their just share. We may well invoke, too, a purpose to carry out in practice what we are constantly announcing in our platforms. We have advocated the income tax in certain portions of the country on the part of both parties for a number of years, but both parties have hesitated at the critical hour to lay the taxing hand upon those who hold in their control to such a remarkable extent the destiny of the political forces of this country. Fortunately, this is no political or a party question, because those who oppose it recognize no party lines. Mr. Sherman said:

> The public mind is not yet prepared to apply the code of a genuine revenue reform. But years of further experience will convince the whole body of our people that a system of national taxes which rests the whole burden of taxation upon consumption and not one cent on property or income is intrinsically unjust. While the expenses of National Government are largely caused by the protection of property, it is but right to require property to contribute to their payment. It will not do to say that each person consumes in proportion to his means. That is not true. Everyone can see that the consumption of the rich does not bear the same relation to the consumption of the poor that the income of the one does to the wages of the other. * * * As wealth accumulates, this injustice in the fundamental basis of our system will be felt and forced upon the attention of Congress.

Another distinguished Senator of that time said:

> There is not a tax on the books so little felt, so absolutely unfelt in the payment of it as this income tax by the possessors of great fortunes upon whom it falls. There is not a poor man in this country, not a laborer in this country but who contributes more than 3, more than 10, more than 20 per cent of all his earnings to the Treasury of the United States, under those very laws against which I am objecting, and now we are invited to increase their contributions and to release those trifling contributions which we have been receiving from incomes heretofore.

Quoting from Sherman again in one of his greatest speeches, delivered January 25, 1871:

> The income tax is now only levied upon those whose good fortune it is to enjoy large property or whose salary or profits lift them far above the pressing wants that rest upon the great mass of our people. The possession of large property and the ability to earn large incomes necessarily give to those enjoying this income great influence over public opinion. They speak through the daily press, from high official stations, from great corporations, from cities where wealth accumulates and with the advantage of social and personal and delegated influence. I know the power of this influence. * * * It is the only tax levied by the United States that falls upon property or office or on brains that yield property, and in this respect is distinguished from other taxes levied by the United States, all of which are upon consumption, the consumption of the rich and of the poor, the old and the young. * * * My own conviction is so clear that its repeal now is wrong both in policy and justice, that it becomes my imperative duty to state the facts and reasons fully and clearly upon which this opinion is founded.

And these facts he proceeded to state in a way which has never been answered and never will be, because they were facts founded in justice. It is as true now as it was then, that as said by Mr. Sherman:

If you leave your system of taxation to rest solely upon consumption without any tax upon property or income you make an unequal and unjust system.

Adams Smith once said:

The subjects of every State ought to contribute toward the support of its government as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities.

John Stuart Mill, the great English economist, has said:

Equality of taxation as a maxim of politics means equality of sacrifice. It means the apportioning, the contribution of each person toward the expenses of the Government so that he shall feel neither more nor less inconvenience from his share or payment than every other person experiences from his.

Wayne MacVeagh, a man who has given great consideration to this subject, said sometime ago:

Capitalists exhibit a singular stupidity in resisting every attempt to impose upon them their proper share of the public burdens.

I quote also from Senator Morton:

We have had the argument by epithet in this case. This has been called an inquisitorial and infamous and iniquitous tax. I will meet the argument by epithet with the argument of opinion, and I will give my opinion on the other side that it is the most equitable and just of all taxes. * * * The income tax is of all others the most just and equitable, because it is the truest measure that has yet been found of the productive property of the country.

I make this general statement and I defy successful contradiction that consumption is apportioned among the people far more nearly according to population than it is according to their wealth. Will it be denied by anybody that the consumption of articles which are taxed in any form falls more nearly upon the people according to population than according to their wealth? If that is so, then a tax upon consumption is an unequal and unjust tax. * * * A tax upon consumption is not a just tax, because it falls upon labor, it falls upon population, and does not fall in proper ratio and proportion upon the people according to their wealth who are able to pay it.

Mr. President, if this substitute should pass and should go to the other House, and finally be accepted and should be approved by the Supreme Court, we would have accomplished more for the equalizing of the burdens of taxation than we could possibly do at this time by any other act of which I know.

Why should not we try? Where the happiness and well-being of countless thousands are at stake; why not try? I can not appreciate that statesmanship which, because we can not get what the people ought to have, we should give the people that which they do not want and ought not in justice be compelled to take.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	du Pont	Massey	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Fall	Myers	Smoot
Bourne	Fletcher	Nelson	Stone
Brandegee	Foster	Newlands	Sutherland
Briggs	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Swanson
Bristow	Gronna	Oliver	Thornton
Bryan	Guggenheim	Overman	Townsend
Burnham	Heyburn	Page	Warren
Catron	Hitchcock	Perkins	Watson

Clapp	Jones	Root	Williams
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Sanders	Works
Crane	La Follette	Shively
Crawford	Lodge	Simmons
Culberson	McLean	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before that is put I understand that the original measure is open for amendment in order that it may be perfected before the substitute is acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BACON. I have an amendment that I propose to offer to the bill in order to perfect it, and then, of course, the substitute offered by the Senator from Idaho will be first in order to be voted on as between the two.

I want to say, Mr. President, just one word in regard to this matter. We have all listened with very great interest and instruction to the very able address of the Senator from Idaho, and there is very little, if anything, that has been said by the Senator that is not fully agreed to by all of us who, with him, believe in the imposition of an income tax through the enactment of a law for that purpose. The Senator's portrayal of the great injustice in the inequality of burdens in the absence of a general income-tax law appeals to all of us by reason of its force and its unanswerable logic. I am a little at a loss, however, Mr. President, to see in what way one thinking as the Senator does on that subject, and as I do upon the same subject, and, I presume, as almost all of us do, from the fact that almost by a unanimous vote there was passed a resolution which proposed an income-tax amendment to the Constitution—I do not see how those thinking in that way have anything to gain by following the suggestion of the learned Senator in this case.

The thing greatly to be desired by the Senator and by those of us who agree with him in this general proposition is that there shall be from all persons in this country a payment upon their incomes by such equal imposition that the burden will be in a large measure lifted from the consumers, who now almost solely bear it, and that it shall be distributed equally among the people according to their means as measured by their incomes in excess of $5,000. We have upon the statute books now the corporation excise tax, which in a large measure meets that requirement. It meets the requirement so far as the corporate interests of the country are concerned if the law is carefully and properly and effectively enforced.

Mr. President, this bill proposes to supplement that law and to add to it that which will in a measure—not perfectly, but in a measure—complete that which we so much desire in requiring others besides the corporations, through the payment of an excise tax, to contribute in the measure that their incomes shall be the gauge of the exaction imposed by the Government, that which is not now contributed under the present corporation excise law. When individuals pay their part of the excise tax and the corporations pay their part of the excise tax, then we will very nearly accomplish all that a general income tax could accomplish in the collection of taxes.

If the evil is so great as the Senator from Idaho portrays and represents it to be, if the evil is so great as we all recognize it to be, if the desire to correct that evil is proportionate to the magnitude of it, shall the fact that the proposed excise law does not meet the case as fully as we wish and does not as fully eradicate the evil as a general income-tax law would, shall that fact deter us from taking advantage of the opportunity in part to do so by the enactment of this law?

I am not now speaking about the constitutional question, but I am speaking about the policy of the enactment of this bill into law; I am speaking of the question as to whether those who agree upon this great issue of the desirability of a general income-tax law should or should not now contribute what we can by this method as far as practicable to accomplish the great end which we all have in view.

It must be manifest, Mr. President, I think, as very forcefully set forth by my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] in his argument this morning, that to abandon the pending measure, to set it aside and to now enact a general income-tax law in the place of it before the income-tax amendment to the Constitution has been adopted by the States, does not promise in practical results what the enactment of the pending bill promises. After the income-tax amendment to the Constitution has been adopted, it will be different. If this bill should be enacted and become a law, and should be approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, we would in the operation of this personal excise law, in connection with the corporation excise law, come very near having all that would be accomplished by a general income-tax law.

Is it better, Mr. President, to try to do that, or is it better to put it aside from us and behind us and say that we will stand upon our original proposition that there should be a general income-tax law; that we will have that or nothing? It is manifest, as pointed out by my colleague this morning, that if we enact the income-tax law at the present time, the road is beset with difficulties and uncertainties; that great delays are undoubtedly involved; and that besides that the enactment of an income-tax law at this present time involves as a consequence the repeal of the present corporation excise law.

The Senator from Idaho shakes his head and indicates his dissent from that proposition. I do not mean to say that the enactment of an income-tax law would repeal the corporation-tax law eo nomine, but I suppose the Senator from Idaho would not for a moment contend that there ought to be a general income-tax law which would subject all corporations to the payment of that income tax and at the same time lay upon the corporations of the country the additional burden of the present excise-tax law. That would be a gross injustice; it would be an injustice, Mr. President, which would be recognized by everybody; so that while it is true, as indicated by the dissent of the Senator from Idaho, given silently but still unmistakably, that the enactment of an income-tax law does not ipso facto involve the repeal directly of the corporation excise-tax law, it is a consequence that can not be escaped that it must involve it if we do justice as we would do it. No one can doubt that.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Idaho——

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from Georgia if, in order to repeal the corporation-tax law, it should be necessary to pass a constitutional income tax, would he not be willing to do that?

Mr. BACON. Of course, if the time comes, as I have no doubt it will come after the adoption of the amendment now before the States, and we have an opportunity to pass a law for the imposition of a general income-tax law, I should very much prefer it to the excise-tax law, and I would be willing to pass the general income-tax law and repeal the other.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the Senator was arguing against the substitution of the income tax because that would repeal the corporation tax.

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I misunderstood him.

Mr. BACON. That may be, but I had not finished the application of what I was saying. I was going to make it, and I was in the midst——

Mr. CULBERSON. Of course we could not repeal the corporation-tax law unless we passed a constitutional income tax.

Mr. BACON. Yes, I know; but when we pass a law, we assume it is constitutional, otherwise we would not pass it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly. I think most of the Senate believe an income-tax law is constitutional.

Mr. BACON. Yes; and I think so. But what I was about to say is this, that believing the income-tax law to be constitutional, if we pass it it is immediately our duty, by repealing the corporation-excise law, to relieve the corporations of the double tax which would be involved in the income-tax law and the corporate excise-tax law, if both were at the same time enforced against the corporations. We could not wait to see whether or not the general income-tax law was declared to be constitutional by the Supreme Court. We would have to assume that the general income-tax law passed by us was constitutional. We would have to act upon the assumption that it was constitutional and at once repeal the corporation excise-tax law. Every consideration of justice and propriety would require us, when we pass the general income-tax law, to assume that it was a constitutional law, and at the same time put the whole country under it and also at once relieve any part of the people from a double tax of this kind by repealing the corporation excise tax.

Now, the application I wish to make of that is this: We stand here now, if we pass a general income-tax law, to arrest the operation of the corporation excise tax upon the uncertainty as to the constitutionality of the income-tax law. It is much better to let the corporation excise tax remain in operation and then attempt to engraft upon, as it were, or add to it, by this additional legislation, the tax as to the excise upon persons, firms, and copartnerships having incomes in excess of $5,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to ask the Senator from Georgia his opinion with regard to the meaning of a part of this law.

I put him this case: Suppose that Mr. A is engaged in the dry goods business and has an income from that business of $1,000 per year. Suppose, further, that Mr. A is the owner of a large amount of real property and derives as rents from that property $20,000 per year. Does this law assess a tax upon the entire amount of the income, or would he be relieved from the tax because he was not receiving more than a thousand dollars from the business in which he was engaged?

Mr. BACON. If the definition of "business" is as broad as my colleague indicated in his argument this morning, I think he would be assessed on all of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am assuming now that as to his real estate he is simply collecting those rents, and that therefore as to the rents he is not doing business.

Mr. BACON. I think he would be.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under those circumstances would he be amenable to the tax?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Unquestionably.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that be true——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the Supreme Court so ruled, I think, in the Flint case.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that be true——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They held——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. If that be true, is the tax upon the $19,000 assessed with respect to the business which he is carrying on?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Supreme Court held, as I understand, in the Flint case that the special excise tax was levied by reason of the fact that the business was done; that the measure of that tax was for Congress; and having fixed a special excise tax, the measure of the tax could be derived not alone from the business done, but from property disconnected with the business; and in that case they went so far as to hold that it could reach the income from nontaxable property. This bill is specifically drawn with a view to covering the entire net income, whether it is drawn from the business or from some other source.

Mr. CUMMINS. I assumed that that was the view taken.

Then the tax is not a tax upon the profits or income derived from the business, but it is a tax upon a person who may be engaged in business in some way or other, and upon his entire income, without regard to the source of that income, whether as to that income he is in business.

Now, does the Senator from Georgia recognize any difference in principle between that and levying a tax upon the income itself? Does he believe that the intervention of an insignificant or negligible business transaction can make any difference in principle in the power of the Government to take the money?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I believe that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States settle it. I believe they have so decided, and I think that this proposed bill is constitutional under those decisions.

Mr. CUMMINS. Allow me to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia now to another part of the bill, which I mentioned a few moments ago, for I am anxious to understand the interpretation of those who have studied and who are defending the measure. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia, as I did of the Senator from Idaho, while he was speaking, the junior Senator from Georgia then being absent from the Chamber, to the provision on page 10. I trust I am not interrupting or unduly interrupting the senior Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I might perhaps suggest to the Senator from Iowa that we had better let the senior Senator from Georgia proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was just apologizing to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I am more than happy to have the burden taken off me for the present.

Mr. CUMMINS. These questions are very interesting to me, and will determine more or less my action in the matter.

This provision provides:

> Every person, firm, or corporation who pays to any officer, employee, or other person a salary or compensation, interest, or other accrued profits, exceeding $5,000 for a taxable year, every lessee or mortgagor of real or personal property who pays to the lessor or mortgagee interest or compensation exceeding $5,000 for a taxable year, and every trustee, executor, administrator, conservator, agent, or receiver, employing any person or paying any person business earnings, within the meaning of this act, exceeding $5,000 for any taxable year, computed on the basis herein prescribed, shall make and render a return as provided herein to the collector or a deputy collector of his district, and shall deduct and withhold the tax herein imposed.

I assume that the Senator from Georgia will agree with me that the tax here withheld and paid is a tax upon the income of the person who receives the compensation or pay, because he pays it.

Now, suppose a firm or corporation were to pay to Mr. A for salary or compensation more than $5,000 per year. Suppose that Mr. A was not engaged in any business whatever, within any meaning which the Senator from Georgia attaches to that word. Would not the tax be still levied and still paid, and would not that be true if it were paid as interest to a person not engaged in business, or would it not be true if it were paid as rent to a person not engaged in business; and if these things are true, does not the bill, in this respect at least, embody the precise doctrine of an income-tax law separated and dissociated entirely from any business in which the person who pays the tax may be engaged?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My understanding of this provision of the bill is that it is a mode of collection; that it does not propose to levy the tax except where the person whose money is withheld falls within the taxable provisions of the bill, and the party whose money is so temporarily withheld, returns having been made according to the provisions read by the Senator from Iowa, can present his view of the case before the internal-revenue collector, and if he sustains his claim that he is not subject to the tax, then the tax would not be levied.

Mr. CUMMINS. But as I read this provision there is no such limitation in it; that is to say, every employee who receives a compensation of more than $5,000 per year from any corporation or copartnership or firm must pay this tax, and there are not in the bill words, so far as I can discover, that prescribe that the person who receives the money and pays the tax must be engaged in business.

I only call it to your attention because it seems to me that, driven by the inexorable force of logic, the distinguished lawyer who prepared this bill and the House which passed it saw that there was no difference whatever between the attempt to levy a tax and call it an excise tax of this kind and the attempt to levy an income tax. If we are in any danger in again seeking a decision from the Supreme Court with regard to the income tax, I think we are in quite as much danger, if not greater danger, in seeking an opinion upon a tax levied in the way I have read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My view of the construction of this part of the bill, taken together with the balance of the bill, is that it does not intend to levy the tax except where the party whose money is temporarily withheld falls within the taxable provisions of the bill, and that this is only a portion of the bill dealing with procedure for the purpose of collecting the taxes, and that the general provision of the bill authorizing a party who is taxed to present his case before the internal-revenue collector would apply to this portion of the bill also, and that the tax would only be applicable if the party whose money was temporarily withheld falls within the provisions stated on the first page of the bill.

That is my construction of the bill; that I know is the construction of those who drew the bill, and after examining it as a whole quite carefully I reached the conclusion that the construction was a logical one.

Mr. CLAPP. Right on this subject——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not the floor.

Mr. BACON. Certainly. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am going to suggest to the Senator from Georgia if it is not true that the limitation as to the persons subject to the tax would be read in connection with the provision on page 10, just as the exemption in the bill would be read with reference to the provision on page 10.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is my view of the matter exactly.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have but a few words to say before offering an amendment which I really rose to offer. I did not rise with the expectation of addressing the Senate on this subject.

I am very sorry that the Senator from Idaho has offered this amendment, the substitute, the general income tax law, in place of the pending bill. It is bringing discord and disagreement among the friends of measures looking to the imposition of taxes which shall more equally distribute the burden of taxation among the people of this country. We all agree on that fundamental proposition and in the desire to make it effectual, and the introduction of this income-tax amendment at this time, as I say, necessarily brings more or less discord among those who are at one in that purpose and that desire. We are simply traveling different roads to reach the same goal, and each one of us is as impatient to reach that goal as is the other.

I do not yield to the Senator from Idaho in his desire for a general income-tax law. There never has been a time since I have had the honor to serve in this body when I have not, by my vote at least and in part by my speech, endeavored to contribute to the consummation of this end which we so much desire. There has never been an opportunity when I have not voted for it. There never has been an opportunity when I have not voted for all measures that would advance the consideration of this question and bring it to a conclusion.

I recollect, Mr. President, that when the corporation excise tax was before the Senate three years ago I rose in my place and said that I refused to vote for it because of the fact that it was introduced and interjected for the purpose of preventing a vote upon the income-tax law, and I declined to vote for it until I had an opportunity to vote for the income-tax law, and gave that as my reason why I declined to vote for the corporation excise tax.

Afterwards, after we had an opportunity to vote on the income-tax measure, I did vote for it, but when it was first presented and when I thought it was presented for the purpose of defeating action on the income-tax proposition I declined to vote for it, and I gave that as my reason in the open Senate for so doing. So, Mr. President, I am not second to the Senator in my desire for the enactment of such a law, and I regret extremely to be put in a position where it should even appear that I am not in favor of it.

I am in favor of it now, and I am in favor of it at all times. I believe there can never be an equal distribution of the burdens of taxation in this country so long as we do not have the opportunity to apply the principle of the income-tax law in the collection of taxes to be paid by the people of the country for the support of the Government; and, believing that, of course I must be in favor of it; and yet my honest judgment is that looking to practical results we will come nearer to it by now voting for this bill. As I said before, we have now upon the statute books the corporate tax excise law, which covers a large part of what would be covered by an income-tax law, and by the enactment of this personal excise law we will approximately secure what is left undone in that direction by the corporate excise laws.

Believing so, Mr. President, although it is embarrassing to me, and I regret extremely to be put in that position, while I do not wish to be put in a position where it can be by the most superficial of persons construed into an unfriendliness to that legislation, nevertheless, believing as I do that the end to be accomplished will be best accomplished in that way, I shall vote against the substitute if the Senator insists upon its presentation.

Now, take the House. It is not improper for me to refer to it as the bill comes from there. The body which sends us the bill is as much in favor of an income tax as is the Senator from Idaho. Why is it that the House of Representatives did not pass that law? Why is it that the House of Representatives passed this excise law instead of a general income-tax law? Manifestly and undoubtedly because they believed that this was the most direct way to reach the most practical result and the most practicable of results.

Mr. President, they are not to be put in the position of being unfriendly to the income tax because they did not send us a general income-tax bill, because everyone knows what is their attitude. Everybody knows that the dominant party in the House favors the enactment of a general income-tax law.

Are those of us on this side, and I presume it is true of some Senators on the other side who may feel it their duty and in accordance with their best judgment to vote for this excise-tax bill, to be put in a position of being unfriendly to the income-tax law? I do not know how long my service here may be extended, Mr. President, but I trust and hope that unless it should be very suddenly and abruptly cut off I may be here long enough to vote for a general income-tax law, and when it is done, when an income-tax law is passed, it will be one of the greatest acts of justice to the American people that has ever been enacted into law.

You can not reach by property tax under our conditions a result which will so equally distribute the burdens of taxation as you can by an income-tax law, and no argument is needed to show that the most unequal of all burdens and the most unjust of all burdens is one which lays exclusively upon the consumer through an excessive tariff the burden of taxation, because the limit of consumption of every man is small, and the maximum of the smallest is very nearly equal to the consumption of the largest. When I say the "smallest" and the "largest" I am referring to differing conditions of wealth.

Now, Mr. President, with that statement I want one other word. I think myself there is a very narrow difference between the corporation excise-tax law as construed by the Supreme Court and an income tax. It is so narrow a difference that I have never been able to entirely satisfy myself that it is one that is well founded, but still believing as I do, not only in the policy of the income-tax law, but in its constitutionality, I am glad of the opportunity to take advantage of the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States that an excise-tax law is not unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court of the United States has rested the constitutionality of the corporation tax law upon the power and authority of the Federal Government to tax the right to do business, and if the right to do business is taxable in a corporation, it is also, in my judgment, taxable in the individual.

Now, there being the difficulty in regard to the imposition of an income-tax law presented by the adverse decision of the Supreme Court, and there being the difficulty of so adjusting an excise tax as to reach everyone that we would reach by an income-tax law, I have thought, Mr. President, that an amendment to this bill, such as I am about to offer, might advance the accomplishment of that end; that an amendment might be suggested which would make for the more complete accomplishment of that which we would seek and expect to accomplish by a general income tax.

I had the same thought in my mind when we had before us three years ago the corporation excise-tax law, and I then offered an amendment, the purpose of which was to reach that class of men whom the Senator from Idaho so graphically portrayed here to-day—men who have great possessions and large incomes, and who bear no equal or appreciable part of the burden of this Government. I was fearful then, as I am now, that possibly the general language might not cover and reach some of these parties that, I think, more than all others ought to be required to bear their part of these burdens.

I introduced an amendment then, and I introduce now an amendment which is copied almost literally from that, simply the verbiage changed to adjust it to the bill which is now before us, and I will send it to the desk and ask that it be read. I am sorry that I did not have the opportunity to present it in order that it might be printed, but under the rule I was not permitted to interrupt the Senator from Idaho to make the request while he was on his feet, and so I could not ask that it be sent out to be printed.

Mr. MASSEY. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BACON. With very great pleasure.

Mr. MASSEY. Referring to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Flint case, I desire to inquire of the Senator whether the right involved in that particular case was a natural right, such as each citizen has, to engage in or transact business, or was it a right dependent upon law, artificially created, and whether he believes that the Supreme Court of the United States took that fact into consideration in determining the Flint case?

Mr. BACON. The inquiry of the learned Senator is a very pertinent one, and one that has not been overlooked in the reflections of those who have given any attention to this subject. I know that the suggestion has been made and it has been earnestly contended by some that the theory upon which the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the constitutionality of the corporation-tax law was that, as stated by the learned Senator, it was a tax upon a franchise, the right to do business.

That would be a most strong argument if the tax were laid upon corporations which derive their right of franchise from the Federal Government, because in that case it could be said with great strength of argument that the Government, having granted a franchise, having granted that which was not a natural right, having clothed the incorporated entity with powers which it could only have by reason of the grant of the Government, it had a right to tax the powers exercised in that way by the grant of the Government.

But it is not the case, Mr. President, and can not be, because I suppose nine hundred and ninety-nine thousandths, if not a very much greater proportion, of the corporations which are subjected to the payment of this corporation excise tax do not derive any corporate powers from the Federal Government, but derive them from the States in which they are situated and by which they are created.

For that reason I think the suggestion is not well founded that it is because it is an artificial person, for that artificial person has not been created by the Federal Government. That artificial person has received no powers from the Federal Government. That artificial person does not exist in any manner, draws no breath of life from the Federal Government. It is simply the power the Federal Government has, an exceedingly broad power, to tax anything—property, rights, avocations, enjoyments—anything except those things which are inconsistent with the Federal Constitution or which are inconsistent, as held by the courts, with the life of a State, which can only live when it can exercise itself the taxing power, either by the issue of bonds or otherwise, without itself being taxed out of existence.

I do not know whether I have answered the Senator or not.

Mr. MASSEY. Will the Senator yield again to a suggestion?

Mr. BACON. Most undoubtedly.

Mr. MASSEY. I know what the traditions and customs of the Senate are. I know it is expected that I should remain in my seat and vote right.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is mistaken about that. That is a misrepresentation as to the Senate, which reached the Senator before he came here.

Mr. MASSEY. Upon this question, as suggested by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, I believe that the act now pending before the Senate, as reported to the Senate by the committee, originating in the House, is unconstitutional. I believe that Congress has not the power to extend its excise tax over natural persons exercising a natural right under the Constitution, and that the Supreme Court of the United States in the determination of the Flint case, as evidenced by the extract read therefrom by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], confines, and intended to confine, its decision of that right, so far as it does exist under the Constitution, to levying a tax of this kind on artificial creatures who have no existence except by virtue of law and have no rights except by virtue of the law.

I believe—and in the exercise of this belief I am simply exercising the right of a Senator—I believe that the law now proposed, coming from the House, is unconstitutional. I believe that the more strongly, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I believe that an income tax graduated is unconstitutional, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I believe also, as a matter of expediency, without embarrassment the Senate can better afford to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho and let the Supreme Court again have an opportunity to determine whether or not an income tax is unconstitutional. Let them again have an opportunity to pass upon that question, because, as is stated well and strongly by Senators upon both sides of the Chamber, a tax of that character and that kind takes the burden from the poor man and places it where it belongs.

For that reason I shall vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Idaho and against the House bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to congratulate the learned Senator upon the promptness and facility with which he adapts himself to the customs and practices of the Senate. He has followed this afternoon very distinguished leads by other Senators.

I am not here, Mr. President, for the purpose of now discussing the constitutionality of this question, certainly not at large. I am not, however, ready to agree with the learned Senator in the proposition that the excise tax can only be upheld upon the ground that it is a tax upon an artificial person, and that a natural right exercised by a natural person can not be taxed by the United States Government. Every excise tax now enforced against the citizen is a tax upon a natural right. What is there in a man's brewing beer that is not a natural right which he exercises as a natural person? What is the difference between a man's brewing beer and doing any other legitimate business so far as natural right goes? Each one of them is a natural right. It is not because the beer is brewed by a corporation and it is not limited to the beer being brewed by a corporation. The same is true of the distillation of whisky. That is a natural right. Every man has as much right to distill whisky as he has to engage in any other business unless prohibited by law. The same thing is true of the refining of sugar, or the making and sale of cigars, or the making or selling of any other form of tobacco. They are all natural rights. And yet the exercise of these natural rights by natural persons are the subject of excise taxation by the Government. Besides these, many other illustrations could be given.

The Government of the United States has as broad a power for taxation as it is possible for a government to have outside of the direct limitations proposed by the Constitution. It can tax any avocation. It can tax any revenue. It can tax property. Of course, when it comes to taxing revenue or incomes or property the limitations of the Constitution are to be considered as to how and when that can be done and to what extent.

But I lay it down, Mr. President, as a proposition that outside of such limitations the Government of the United States has the right to tax any avocation; that it has as much right to tax one as it has another; and that any legitimate taxation on the exercise of a personal right is not dependent upon the fact, so far as the power of taxation goes, that it is a right exercised by an artificial person. It can be with equal authority imposed upon the exercise of a right by a natural person.

I want to say, Mr. President, as to the amendment which I have offered to-day, I regret it was not printed, but I think it is sufficiently comprehensive and short to be readily understood by Senators from the reading at the desk. It was offered by me formerly to the corporation excise-tax act and received very liberal support in the Senate on both sides of the Chamber. Upon a motion which was made by the then Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, to lay it upon the table, it was supported, that is, not the motion, but the measure itself was supported by opposing the motion, by every Democrat and by the following Republicans who were then Members of this body: Messrs. BORAH, BRISTOW, CLAPP, CRAWFORD, CUMMINS, GAMBLE, JONES, LA FOLLETTE, and Piles. This amendment, except so far as the first part of it is changed so that it may be engrafted upon this bill and except the provisos which are intended to prevent double taxation, is copied from the amendment I then offered and is identical with it. I trust it may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. That the term "business," as herein used is, and shall also be, held to embrace the act or acts of holding, receiving, caring for, and disbursing, either personally or through agents, the returns or profits of investments of capital of whatever kind; and every person, firm, or copartnership, residing as aforesaid, holding the bonds, debentures, or other evidence of indebtedness of any corporation or association organized under the laws of either the United States or of any State, Territory, or District of the United States, or doing business therein, shall, upon the carrying on or doing business by such person, either personally or by agent, in respect to the income therefrom as aforesaid, and upon the right to hold, possess, manage, and control the principal and to collect the interest or other income of said bonds or other evidence of indebtedness, be subject to pay annually a special excise tax equivalent to 1 per cent upon the annual interest or income payable upon said bonds or other evidence of indebtedness: Provided, That said tax shall not be paid upon the interest of income derived from said bonds or other evidences of indebtedness when the same is otherwise paid under the provisions of this act by the person holding or owning the same: And provided further, That said tax shall not be paid by the holder or owner of said bonds or other evidence of indebtedness except to the extent that the said interest or income from the same shall, when added to the other net income of said holder or owner for the year, exceed the net income of $5,000 received by such person from all sources during each year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish just two minutes to reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MASSEY].

In the Spreckels case the excise tax applied not only to corporations, but to persons as individuals and to partnerships. It was sustained equally as to all three. In the Flint case the Supreme Court clearly recognized——

Mr. MASSEY. Will the Senator permit me just at this time to propound a question to him?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. MASSEY. Was that question presented to the Supreme Court in the Spreckels case for decision?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not sure whether the case before the Supreme Court was only the case of a corporation, but in discussing it they treated the entire act as being equally valid.

Mr. MASSEY. If the Senator will pardon me, I assume that the discussion of a question by the Supreme Court that was not before it was mere obiter in so far as that discussion was concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That would be true, but in the Flint case in discussing it again they clearly recognized the fact that the excise tax could be applied to individuals or partnerships. The Supreme Court used the following language:

Let is be supposed that a group of individuals, as partners, were carrying on a business upon which Congress concluded to lay an excise tax. If it be true that the forming of a State corporation would defeat this purpose, by taking the necessary steps required by the State law to create a corporation and carrying on the business under rights granted by a State statute, the Federal tax would become invalid and that source of national revenue be destroyed, except as to the business in the hands of individuals or partnerships. It can not be supposed that it was intended that it should be within the power of individuals acting under State authority to thus impair and limit the exertion of authority which may be essential to national existence.

So the Supreme Court in the clearest terms when discussing the Flint case pointed out that the corporation should not be exempt from the special excise tax, because if by incorporating under a State law the excise tax could be avoided, then by incorporation the tax could be escaped by all but individuals.

Mr. MASSEY. That I assume would extend this law to the American rancher engaged in ranching in the Mississippi Valley, whose property is all visible and all will be taxed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment to the House bill, and had intended to do so after the vote upon the substitute offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Under the ruling of the Chair, however, I think it proper to make my offer at this time of an amendment to the House bill. I understand it is proper to perfect that bill first.

Before I send it to the Secretary's desk to have it read, I want to say in explanation that this amendment is not intended particularly to raise revenue. I have designed it in an attempt to see whether by the use of the great power of taxation the Government may be able to crush a great trust which it has not been able to crush through legislation or other judicial proceedings. I refer to the Tobacco Trust.

I propose in this amendment to levy an additional excise tax on tobacco in all forms and on snuff. I propose to have the tax begin at a certain point of manufacture; that is to say, I exempt any production of 20,000,000 pounds a year of tobacco, or 400,000,000 cigars a year or 400,000,000 cigarettes a year or 4,000,000 pounds of snuff a year. After those exemptions in the amendment I propose to levy a progressive or graduated tax upon the tobacco, cigars, snuff, or cigarettes manufactured in the United States. As the production increases the rate of the tax rises, the purpose being to reach a prohibitive point, so that the three great snuff concerns and the four great tobacco manufacturing concerns that are a part of the trust now existing under the sanction of a judicial decree shall find it impossible to continue business.

This is the same power of taxation which we applied to State-bank notes, whereby we have driven them out of existence. It is the same power of taxation which we applied to oleomargarine, for the purpose of protecting the dairy interests from its disastrous competition. It is the same power which we exerted during the present Congress to put a stop to the manufacture of poisonous matches.

I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following additional sections:

SEC. 10. That manufacturers of tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, and snuff shall after the 31st day of December, 1912, be subject to pay a special excise tax in addition to the taxes now provided by law, which special additional excise tax shall be payable quarterly and be graduated and levied as follows:

SEC. 11. On all tobacco, whether smoking tobacco, plug tobacco, twist, or fine cut, manufactured during the quarter over and in excess of 20,000,000 pounds, 1 cent a pound for the first million pounds excess or part thereof, 2 cents a pound for the second million pounds excess or part thereof, 3 cents a pound for the third million pounds excess or part thereof, 4 cents a pound for the fourth million pounds excess or part thereof, 5 cents a pound for the fifth million pounds excess or part thereof, 6 cents a pound for all above the fifth million pounds excess.

SEC. 12. On all cigarettes and cigars weighing less than 3 pounds per thousand manufactured during the quarter over and in excess of 400,000,000, 25 cents per 1,000 on the first 50,000,000 cigarettes and cigars excess or part thereof, 60 cents per 1,000 on the second 50,000,000 cigarettes and cigars excess or part thereof, $1 per 1,000 on the third 50,000,000 cigarettes and cigars excess or part thereof, $1.50 per 1,000 on the fourth 50,000,000 cigarettes and cigars excess or part thereof, $2 per 1,000 on the fifth 50,000,000 cigarettes and cigars excess or part thereof, $2.60 per 1,000 on the sixth 50,000,000 cigarettes and cigars excess or part thereof, $3.25 per 1,000 on all over 300,000,000 cigarettes in excess of 100,000,000 for the quarter.

SEC. 13. On all cigars and cigarettes weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand manufactured during the quarter over and in excess of 400,000,000, $1 per 1,000 on the first 100,000,000 cigars and cigarettes excess or part thereof, $2 per 1,000 on the second 100,000,000 cigars and cigarettes excess or part thereof, $3 per 1,000 on all above that amount.

SEC. 14. On all snuff manufactured during the quarter over and in excess of 4,000,000 pounds, 1 cent a pound for the first 1,000,000 pounds or part thereof in excess, 3 cents a pound for the second 1,000,000 pounds or part thereof in excess, 5 cents a pound for the third 1,000,000 pounds or part thereof in excess, 10 cents a pound for all over 3,000,000 pounds in excess.

SEC. 15. In computing the product of any manufacturer there shall be included the products, as above specified, made directly by said manufacturer and by any company controlled by said manufacturer in whole or in part through stock ownership, contract, lease, or otherwise, and any company having directors or stockholders in common to the extent of 25 per cent of the stock, or one-third of the directors, shall be considered and held to be a part of the same manufacturing organization, and the rate of tax shall be based on their combined output, each company to pay upon its proper proportion thereof.

SEC. 16. It shall be the duty of every manufacturer of tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, or snuff, on demand of any officer of internal revenue, to render such officer a true and correct statement, under oath, of the quantity and amount of all tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, or snuff manufactured by him during the quarter, and this statement shall be made on or before the 10th day of the month following the close of the quarter. It shall also be the duty of every manufacturer on demand of any officer of internal revenue to render to such officer a true and correct statement, under oath, showing in detail the ownership, management, and organization of the business, whether it is an individual, partnership, corporation, or association, who the officers and directors or trustees of the same are, what, if any, contract, lease, or other arrangement exists with another manufacturer of tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, or snuff.

In case of refusal or neglect to render any such statement as herein provided, or if there is cause to believe such statement to be incorrect or fraudulent, the collector shall make an examination of persons, books, and papers in the manner provided by law in relation to frauds and evasions of internal-revenue taxes.

SEC. 17. The special additional excise tax on tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, and snuff shall be paid on or before the 10th of April, July, October, and January for the previous calendar quarter, and, in enforcing this act and in the collection of this tax, all existing provisions of law relating to the collection of internal revenue are hereby made applicable, and the commissioner is hereby authorized to make and enforce proper regulations to carry these provisions into effect.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I want to say briefly in explanation that I feel justified in offering this amendment to this bill for the reason that it is not competent in this body to offer a measure to raise revenue. The only possibility is to attach such a proposition to some measure which comes from the House of Representatives.

As to the existence of the so-called Tobacco Trust there is no doubt. The Supreme Court, something over a year ago, I think, declared the existence of a Tobacco Trust and decreed its dissolution. It has been evident since that time that, through mistake or lack of judgment or connivance or in some other way, the dissolution, as agreed upon before the court by the representatives of the Government, was a practical evasion of the law. The great American Tobacco Co., which was ordered dissolved, was divided by agreement and under the sanction of the court into certain parts. Those parts exist to-day; but their business, instead of being injured, has apparently been improved.

Their stock, which had had a value largely due to monopolistic control of the market, not only has that value to-day, but has an increased value in the various companies which have grown out of that dissolution. We find the greatest of these new companies—the American Tobacco Co.—now controls 37 per cent of the cigarette business of the country; the next in size—the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.—controls 28 per cent of the cigarette business of the country; the third in size—the Lorillard Co.—controls 15 per cent of the cigarette business of the country. In smoking tobacco, plug and fine cut, the control is almost equally absolute.

The stock of the American Tobacco Co. is listed upon the stock exchange at 302 and has been rising in value; the stock of Liggett & Myers is listed at 205 and has been rising in value; the stock of the Lorillard Co. is listed at 191 and has been rising in value, notwithstanding the fact that before these companies were formed stock dividends were declared in the subsidiary companies and the stocks of those subsidiary companies were distributed.

In the report of the Commissioner of Corporations it is shown with some particularity that a large portion of the value of the stock of the original Tobacco Trust and of the present tobacco companies is due to monopolistic control; it is shown that the Tobacco Trust earns a profit two and one-half times larger than the profit of the independent companies; it is shown that the business of the independent companies is so small and so insignificant by comparison as hardly to cut a figure in the great tobacco business of the United States.

While the American Tobacco Co. produces over three thousand million cigarettes a year and does an annual business in smoking, plug, and twist, and fine-cut tobacco amounting to 119,000,000 pounds a year, the largest independent concern does a business of less than 10,000,000 pounds a year, and 48 of the largest independent tobacco manufacturers do a business altogether of only 48,000,000 pounds of tobacco a year.

It seems to me if we could pick out an instance of a trust controlling and dominating the market this is the one. We have here a trust already subject to the payment of taxes; we have a trust whose business is thoroughly known to the Government; we have a trust which is already under the supervision of Government officials, and simply by empowering those officials to collect from this trust or from the four companies which make up the trust in the tobacco business a graduated tax in proportion to their business, on a rate which rises as the product increases, we shall put into the hands of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the power to render that business unprofitable and impossible. In the beginning the tax of 1 cent a pound additional will assist the weaker companies in competition, but as the production rises a point will be reached where the trusts will find it just as unprofitable to do business as the State banks found it unprofitable to issue notes and pay an annual tax of 10 per cent upon them.

If we are in earnest, if we want to put in motion a force which will destroy this trust and restore competition to this one branch of manufacture in the United States, here is our chance. Here is a power which has been thoroughly recognized and often exerted, a power which has been established by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. We may legislate for years on the trust question; we may keep the courts busy in the prosecution of trusts, but we know by experience that a large part of our efforts go for naught.

I recognize the fact that some may consider this experimental. It is not experimental, however, because it is analogous to other instances in which we have exercised the taxing power in a similar manner.

Some one said to me that this will have a tendency to increase the price of tobacco to the consumer. I deny it. The price of tobacco to the consumer during the last 20 years has largely increased and the quality has deteriorated. As we all know, through the domination of this trust the tobacco growers have suffered because they have had only one market in which to sell their tobacco product. If we can free the market from the domination of this trust, if we can restore competition in the manufacture of cigars and tobacco, we can make a free market for the growers of tobacco and the independents will increase and develop their business up to the point of the 20,000,000 pounds a year which I have mentioned in the amendment and become prosperous concerns.

What is the history of the growth of the Tobacco Trust? When the Tobacco Trust was first conceived in 1890 and developed through the nineties up to 1904, the industry of manufacturing tobacco existed in many States in the Union; but as the trust secured control of various factories it closed them, closing as many as 30 in a short period of time; as we know, it invested something like $50,000,000 in buying them up and closing them. The result is that instead of having tobacco manufacturing establishments located in different parts of the country where the tobacco is raised, factories appropriate to the neighborhood, factories calculated to use the product of the neighborhood and market it effectually, we have had a great concentration of that business, and there is no longer that diffused manufacture of tobacco.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to go into the further history of the development of this trust, nor shall I take the time of the Senate to argue the wisdom of doing something which will really affect the trust, but I want to say to those who come from States where tobacco is raised that they can confer no greater benefit on their constituents than to restore to the tobacco market a competitive condition and not permit these four behemoths to monopolize the field as they do now.

Let me state something of what the present condition is. The American Tobacco Co. produced in 1910, the last year for which I have the statistics, 3,250,310,000 cigarettes. On them it paid a tax to the Government under the present law of $4,006,637. Under my bill, if it continues to manufacture as many cigarettes, it would pay $6,807,257 additional.

I have no idea that it would continue to pay such a tax or that it could pay it and exist. It would be compelled to enter into a real dissolution, it would be compelled to sell its factories and divide its properties into competing bodies.

During the same year the American Tobacco Co. manufactured 119,000,000 pounds of tobacco in various forms, on which the tax paid was $9,532,320. Under my amendment it would have $5,349,240 additional to pay. Altogether that company paid to the Government $13,664,732 internal revenue taxation, while under my amendment they would have something like $12,000,000 taxes additional to pay if they continued to do this huge business.

The figures for Liggett & Myers, the Lorillard Co. and the R. J. Reynolds Co. are similar, although somewhat smaller.

The condition in the snuff market is even more extreme. The total manufacture of snuff is something over 31,000,000 pounds a year. Three companies manufacture 29,000,000 pounds, absolutely monopolizing and controlling the market. These three great tobacco companies have identical stockholders, whether their directors are identical or not. I have provided in my amendment that where a company has control of another company, through lease or contract or in any other way, the product of the two companies shall be added to compute the rate, and where the stockholders are identical in two companies to the extent of 25 per cent the rate shall also be fixed in the same way, that is they shall be considered for the purpose of this law as belonging to the same manufacturing corporation.

I am sorry that I have not had the opportunity to have my amendment printed and submitted to Senators, but I believe that the power to tax being the power to destroy is a power that ought to be used in connection with those trusts that we are not able to reach in any other way.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, when the Supreme Court of the United States used the expression with which the Senator from Nebraska concluded his remarks, it held the tax invalid for the very reason that it was an attempt to destroy. I think, however, that if the Senate should choose to levy the tax proposed the court would sustain it, although I venture that opinion with some hesitation, because I have not carefully examined the amendment of the Senator. But I rose to say that if the Senate intends to make an experiment of that kind, why does it not select some of the great corporations which are dealing in the necessaries of life or industry? So far as I am concerned, although I am in a small way a victim of it on account of my smoking habit, I care less about the Tobacco Trust than I do about any other trust in existence, because whatever a man pays to it or whatever a man pays to the Government in the way of taxation on tobacco is a voluntary payment. We are not compelled to patronize it, though the habit of using tobacco has become so general that a tax upon it is a tax of almost universal application. If the Senate desires to make an experiment of this kind it ought to select some enterprise in whose prices the people have a deeper interest.

Of course, every Senator knows that I am bound by my rules against using the taxing power to accomplish what the Senate has no power to accomplish directly. The Senate would have no power to say that no tobacco company should manufacture beyond a certain quantity of tobacco, cigars, or cigarettes, and I think it dangerous to assume that power by indirection, because I think it will be extended just as the Senator now proposes to extend it.

I resisted the tax on oleomargarine. I contended what the Senator now says, that the whole purpose of it was to give the dairies an advantage in competition with the manufacturers of oleomargarine. I resisted the tax obviously levied for the purpose of preventing the manufacture of matches by a certain process. And so I will resist this tax.

If the Democratic Party has any principle left and well settled, it is that the Government ought to do directly whatever it does, so that whatever it does can have a fair scrutiny and a fair determination in the courts of the land. But if we have this power and are to exercise it, I am very much inclined to make the tax on cigarettes absolutely prohibitory. If we are going into this business, let us destroy all commerce in that injurious article.

But I am one of those old-fashioned Democrats who believe that the best way to correct a bad habit is to leave it to a wholesome public sentiment, and if we must invoke any law I am inclined to invoke the police power of the State. But if we are to concede it to the Federal Government, why not dig up the cigarette industry by the root and throw it away? I want to admonish my friend from Nebraska and all my other friends here that as soon as they establish this principle our prohibitionists will be clamoring at the doors of the Senate Chamber for a tax on the manufacture of liquor, on the sale of it, and on the transportation of it that will be in effect a national prohibition law; and you will not be able to place any limit to this kind of legislation.

I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska, besides, that to levy a tax of this kind is simply to give one dealer an advantage over another dealer. Now, if the Senator answers that statement with the reply that it is giving an advantage to a lawful dealer as against an unlawful dealer, I say that the way to end unlawful business transactions in this country is not through the taxing power, but it is through criminal prosecutions under the antitrust law itself.

I have about reached the point where I am willing to take out of the antitrust law its fines and compel the men who organize and operate the trusts of this country to face prosecution in the criminal courts, and, in my opinion, that is the only way to finally and effectively establish the policy of that law. As long as men are permitted to form and operate these trusts and to pay a fine to the Government they will continue to organize and operate them, because when the Government fines them they simply fine the people; and the very purpose of a trust being to obtain such a control over the market that it can limit supply and fix prices, of course whenever the Government punishes a corporation or a combination of that kind by a mere fine, that combination possesses the power to take that fine out of the pockets of the people, and it will always take it out with a usurious interest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call the Senator's attention to the fact, however, that the method which I propose here is one which the trust can not use in that way. It can not pass the tax on to the consumer.

Mr. BAILEY. That will depend on whether the independents, having the price of their chief competitors' articles raised, will follow that rise in the price. Now, unless human nature has changed it will do it, because we know what has happened. For instance, in the steel industry all the independents say that they follow the prices fixed by the great corporation. We know what has happened in the oil industry. All independents follow its prices.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me stop the Senator right here.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That happened for the reason that the Steel Trust and the Oil Trust are able to manufacture much cheaper, as we have demonstrated, than the smaller independent companies. But by this tax we propose to make the manufacture so much more expensive that that will now be impossible. It will not be possible for the Tobacco Trust to hold an umbrella over those small companies, as the expression goes, for the reason that the tax is so high as to make the manufacture so inviting that the field will undoubtedly be filled, and these independent companies, now numbering even less than a hundred, certainly only 48 of any size, will increase and multiply and restore the condition which existed prior to 1890, when, as we all know, the conflict between them was fierce and broad.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator will find himself mistaken in the assertion that the Steel Corporation, which is commonly called the Steel Trust, manufactures all of its commodities more cheaply than do some of the independents.

I think it will be found upon an investigation that this enormous organization has not economized the cost of production to anything like the extent it was prophesied; and whether it has or not, it is still true, as I said a moment ago, that the smallest concerns follow its price list, and the testimony is abundant in the hearings before the committees of the two Houses of Congress that there is no substantial competition, some of the smaller concerns going so far as to say that if they attempted to undersell the greater concern the greater concern would undersell them and take their trade away from them.

I do not believe we can safely calculate that the independent or smaller concerns, when the price of tobacco is raised by their larger competitor, will necessarily stop where they are now and suffer their competitors to be destroyed by the tax.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator possibly has misunderstood the effect of this amendment. I had intended to make it so high as to become prohibitory and force a dissolution of the trust.

Mr. BAILEY. In other words, the Senator is trying by a tax to control the manufacture of an article in a State. I think Congress has no power to do that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is now highly profitable to manufacture on an enormous scale, and it will, by operation of this tax, become unprofitable to do it. It will become more profitable to the smaller companies to manufacture in smaller amounts.

Mr. BAILEY. That is simply a confiscation of property. If the companies against which this amendment is aimed are guilty of a crime, I would not only confiscate their property in fines and penalties, but I would put the men who have organized and who are operating those combinations in the penitentiary. That is the way to do that—not misuse the taxing power of the Government. If these tobacco companies are still in an unlawful combination, the antitrust law can be enforced against them, and it ought to be enforced against them with the greatest severity; but if they are now conducting their business in obedience to the law, this discriminating tax upon them is indefensible from every point of view.

Mr. HITCHCOCK rose.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me just to finish——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have heard much about the necessity of amendments to the antitrust law. I am one of the men who believe that it needs thorough enforcement rather than amendment. If the men who are engaged in violating it were properly admonished—and there is but one admonition that is sufficient to them, and that is to put every one of them in the penitentiary as fast as you can get to them—if they are properly admonished that it is just as dangerous to the liberty of a man to organize and operate a trust in this country as it is to steal a horse, I think they will desist. I believe it is worse, morally and legally, because the theft of a horse inflicts an injury only upon the man whose horse is stolen, while a violation of the antitrust law in this country, assuming that that law is founded upon a just and wise policy, not only inflicts an injury upon the thousands and millions of men and children from whom it exacts unlawful tribute, but it works an injury to the Government itself in a hundred ways; and in no way is that injury more impressively illustrated than by the proposition now presented to the Senate by the Senator from Nebraska. We are tempted to wrest the law from its true course and make it serve a purpose outside of its true function and its constitutional authority.

The one amendment to the antitrust law that I would make would be this: I would provide—and it would be merely a short additional section to the bill—that whenever any firm, corporation, or person should be found guilty of violating that law the court should forthwith appoint a receiver, and that the receiver should proceed without undue delay to dispose of the property at public sale and distribute the proceeds among the stockholders, after the expenses of the proceeding has been satisfied. If we adopt that amendment, and if we will enforce the criminal provisions of that law, trusts will disappear from our commercial life. Just as now the managers and owners of those trusts go as far beyond the law as they dare to go without compelling the Government to take notice of their transgressions, so under a system such as I have suggested they will keep as far inside the law as is necesary to insure their safety against prosecution by a reasonable officer and insure their requittal if they happen to be prosecuted by some man who is unreasonable.

These men for the sake of enormous profits promised by these combinations will not take the chance of individual imprisonment, nor will they take the chance of the destruction of their property values. If we will adopt that simple amendment and set our faces resolutely to the enforcement of the law, we can destroy the trusts.

If we do not do that, the trusts will destroy this Government. The injustice which they practice upon their customers and the destruction wrought among their competitors are all stupendous and awful in their consequences; but, sir, to see a great government like this confess before the world its impotency to deal with any crime, admitting that it can not enforce its statutes, to confess publicly to the world that it is so deficient in its wisdom that it can not devise a law to destroy these commercial outlaws without devising one that will likewise destroy this Government, is the tragedy of this century.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to submit an amendment which I presented yesterday. It is printed, and is a reproduction of section 38 of the tariff law of 1909. I do not believe it will be objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 13, insert the following:

And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall apply to labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, or to fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating under the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members of such societies, orders, and associations and dependents of such members, nor to domestic building and loan associations organized and operated exclusively for the mutual benefit of their members, nor to any corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, or educational purposes no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think this amendment is substantially the same as that in the present excise law applying to corporations. It extends that provision to these associations when not organized into corporations.

On the part of the minority members of the committee I am authorized to say we have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, when the Payne-Aldrich bill was passed the so-called corporate tax came in with an exemption of holding companies from the payment of the tax for the privilege of doing business as a corporation.

On the floor of the Senate we struck out the exemption. It was put back in conference without any authority, in excess of the authority of the conferees. I gave notice the other day that I would offer an amendment to the House bill now under consideration, repealing the exemption in the tariff law on the holding company, but I find upon examining the House bill that that not only repeals it, but, I think, very much improves it, as it passes the tax, which under the law sought to be repealed would be paid by the holding company, over to be paid by the stockholders in the trust or holding company, and can not as easily be passed back upon the consumer.

Therefore I will not offer my amendment, and I commend the House bill in that particular respect.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer an amendment to the House bill. It is the measure offered yesterday in connection with the wool bill, creating a tariff commission. I do not believe it is necessary to have it read to the Senate. It was read twice yesterday, I think. Every Senator is familiar with it. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept it, so that we may avoid any more discussion about it.

The amendment of Mr. CUMMINS was to insert at the end of the bill the following additional sections:

That a board is hereby created, to be known as the Tariff Board, which shall be composed of five members, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The members first appointed under this act shall continue in office from the date of qualification for the terms of two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1911, the term of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed. The President shall designate a member of the board to be the chairman thereof during the term for which he is appointed. Any member may, after due hearing, be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Not more than three members of said board shall be members of the same political party. Three members of said board shall constitute a quorum. The chairman of said board shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum and the other members each a salary of $7,000 per annum. The board shall have authority to appoint a secretary and fix his compensation, and to appoint and fix the compensation of such other employees as it may find necessary to the performance of its duties.

SEC. —. That the principal office of said board shall be in the city of Washington. The board, however, shall have full authority, as a body, by one or more of its members, or through its employees, to conduct investigations at any other place or places, either in the United States or foreign countries, as the board may determine. All the expenses of the board, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the members or by their employees under their orders, in making any investigations, or upon official business in any other places than in Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the chairman of the board. Should said board require the attendance of any witness, either in Washington or any place not the home of said witness, said witness shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of said board to investigate the cost of production of all articles which by any act of Congress now in force or hereafter enacted are made the subject of tariff legislation, with special reference to the prices paid domestic and foreign labor and the prices paid for raw materials, whether domestic or imported, entering into manufactured articles, producers' prices and retail prices of commodities, whether domestic or imported, the cost of transportation from the place or places of production to the principal areas of consumption, the condition of domestic and foreign markets affecting the American products, including detailed information with respect thereto, together with all other facts which may be necessary or convenient in fixing import duties or in aiding the President and other officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, and said board shall also make investigations of any such subject whenever directed by either House of Congress.

SEC. —. That to enable the President to secure information as to the effect of tariff rates, restrictions, exactions, or any regulations imposed at any time by any foreign country upon the importation into or sale in any such foreign country of any products of the United States, and as to any export bounty paid or export duty imposed or prohibition made by any country upon the exportation of any article to the United States which discriminates against the United States or the products thereof, and to assist the President in the application of the maximum and minimum tariffs and other administrative provisions of the customs laws, the board shall, from time to time, make report, as the President shall direct.

SEC. —. That for the purposes of this act said board shall have power to subpœna witnesses, to take testimony, administer oaths, and to require any person, firm, copartnership, corporation, or association engaged in the production, importation, or distribution of any article under investigation to produce books and papers relating to any matter pertaining to such investigation. In case of failure to comply with the requirements of this section, the board may report to Congress such failure, specifying the names of such persons, the individual names of such firm or copartnership, and the names of the officers and directors of each such corporation or association so failing, which report shall also specify the article or articles produced, imported, or distributed by such person, firm, copartnership, corporation, or association, and the tariff schedule which applies to said article.

SEC. —. That in any investigation authorized by this act the board may obtain such evidence or information as it may deem advisable, but said board shall not be required to divulge the names of persons furnishing such evidence or information; and no evidence or information so secured under the provisions of this section from any person, firm, copartnership, corporation, or association shall be made public by said board in such manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival.

SEC. —. That said board shall submit the results of its investigations, as hereinbefore provided, including all testimony, together with any explanatory report of the facts so ascertained, to the President or to either House of Congress, from time to time, when called upon by the President or either House of Congress.

SEC. —. That upon the taking effect of this act the body now known as the Tariff Board shall transfer to the Tariff Board hereby created all such property and equipment, books, and papers as are now possessed or used by said first-mentioned board in connection with the subjects for which the Tariff Board is hereby created, and thereupon the said first-mentioned board shall cease to exist.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I regret that I am not able to accept that amendment. I have no authority to accept the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to submit the matter at any length at all. The subject has been debated here very often. I believe there is a great necessity for the tribunal that is created by this measure, and therefore upon my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and withhold my vote. I would vote "yea" if I could.

Mr. WATSON (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHILTON] on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and therefore withhold my vote. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (when Mr. DAVIS's name was called). I desire again to announce the pair of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. He notified me that he would be absent from the Senate this evening on public business. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when Mr. GAMBLE's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I will allow this announcement to stand for further roll calls.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. MCCUMBER's name was called). The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent to-day from the Senate Chamber. He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when Mr. OWEN's name was called). The senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. If the senior Senator from Oklahoma were here, he would vote "nay." I desire to make this announcement for the day.

Mr. DU PONT (when Mr. RICHARDSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Were my colleague present and free to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and therefore withhold my vote. I would vote "yea" if I were at liberty to vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER], and vote. I vote "nay." I will allow this announcement to stand for the balance of the day.

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. LIPPITT] is unavoidably detained from the Senate, and that he is paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 38, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Borah	Crawford	La Follette	Pomerene
Bourne	Cummins	Lodge	Root
Brandegee	Dillingham	McLean	Smith, Mich.
Briggs	Du Pont	Massey	Smoot
Bristow	Fall	Nelson	Stephenson
Burton	Gallinger	Oliver	Sutherland
Catron	Gronna	Page	Townsend
Clapp	Guggenheim	Penrose	Works
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Perkins
Crane	Kenyon	Poindexter

NAYS—29.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Paynter	Swanson
Bankhead	Johnson, Me.	Reed	Thornton
Bacon	Johnston, Ala.	Shively	Tillman
Bryan	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Watson
Chamberlain	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Culberson	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Heyburn	Overman	Stone

NOT VOTING—27.

Bailey	Curtis	Kern	Rayner
Bradley	Davis	Lea	Richardson
Brown	Dixon	Lippitt	Sanders
Burnham	Foster	McCumber	Smith, Md.
Chilton	Gamble	Newlands	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Gardner	Owen	Wetmore
Cullom	Gore	Percy

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I offer the following amendment, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill, after the amendment just agreed to, insert:

SEC. 10. That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and is hereby, repealed: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the duty on chemical wood pulp shall be one-twelfth of 1 cent per pound, dry weight, if unbleached, and one-eighth of 1 cent per pound if bleached; and the duty on printing paper, as described in paragraph 409 of the act approved August 5, 1909, shall be one-tenth of 1 cent per pound if valued at not above 3 cents per pound, two-tenths of 1 cent per pound if valued above 3 cents and not above 5 cents per pound, and 7½ per cent ad valorem if valued above 5 cents per pound.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am not going into a discussion of this question, but I wish to say that it is one in which the people of the entire West are much interested and I trust the Senator in charge of the bill will accept the amendment. I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will be kind enough to accept the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from North Carolina has no authority from the minority members of the committee to accept the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. I then ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment. It is to strike out the proviso and insert in lieu thereof the words I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the proviso and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Except so far as the same concerns the provisions of said act relating to wood, wood pulp, and printing paper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. BACON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply want to say that of course the amendment is very hastily drawn, but I think it is in language which covers the point. I have not the act before me, and I do not know that I correctly designate the several subjects, but it is according to my recollection of the provisions in that act so far as they relate to the importation of wood, wood pulp, and print paper. I am not sure whether there is any other subject which should be designated in order to cover the design of the exception.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to know just what the Senator from Georgia intends by this amendment? Does he intend to establish free print paper?

Mr. BACON. I intend that the act known as the reciprocity act shall remain unchanged so far as its present terms relate to those subjects. In other words, if we repeal the act generally, I propose that that much of it shall be retained.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I remember it, the act provides that from certain parts of Canada and under certain conditions paper may come in free, but from all other parts of Canada and in the greater part of Canada the paper does not come in free, but comes in under a duty of $3.75 a hundred, or $6 a hundred.

Mr. BACON. I have not the act before me, but I will state as plainly as I can that the purpose is to retain so much of the act as relates to those subjects. If hereafter——

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator desires a low duty on paper, does he not believe that the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota, which makes a low duty upon all paper coming either from Canada or anywhere else, without regard to conditions, will be better for those who use paper than though the free entry of paper from a small part of Canada were to continue and the high duty remain as to all other parts of the world?

Mr. BACON. My idea is this: So far as the repeal of the reciprocity agreement with Canada is concerned, I care nothing for it; I am perfectly willing to vote to repeal that part of the act. But the other part is a part which really belongs to a revenue bill. In fact, it does not belong here. It does not affect the question of the repeal of the reciprocity features of the act, so far as they are limited to the questions of reciprocity. Therefore I am ready to join the Senators who desire to repeal so much of the act as proposes to establish reciprocal relations in matters of imports and exports between the two countries. I am ready to join with them on that; but this is a separate and independent matter, and we can very well leave all the questions as to duties on wood pulp and wood and print paper to be dealt with in connection with the tariff bills.

Why should we force the question now as to what customs duties shall or shall not be imposed on any particular articles, when the purpose of this proposed legislation is simply to get rid of the matter of reciprocity? I am ready to join with Senators and vote for a repeal of the reciprocity act as to everything which properly and exclusively belongs to reciprocity.

But here is a matter which does not belong exclusively to that. It is a matter in which very large industries in this country are very closely concerned. Even if it is not now in the shape the Senator from Iowa and others might desire it should ultimately be, let us confine ourselves to the question of the repeal of the reciprocity law, so far as it proposes to establish reciprocity in the matter of customs duties, and save all these other things for future consideration.

I am not prepared to discuss the question which the Senator now suggests to me as to whether there should be a change in that particular part of the law which relates to wood, wood pulp, and free paper, but it does not properly belong to what is the actuating motive of Senators. Senators are opposed to the provision under which reciprocity is made possible whenever Canada shall agree to it, if she should ever do so. I want to exclude the possibility that by Canada's action we may be hurried into that.

I will say that I speak only for myself, because I have never had an opportunity to confer with Senators on my side of the Chamber. I did not know that this matter was to be now brought up; but it does strike me, Mr. President, if the purpose of Senators who propose this amendment and who desire to support it is that reciprocity shall be repealed, they can do it by adopting my amendment; and then hereafter let us meet the question as to what duty shall be imposed upon wood and wood pulp and print paper and not destroy the whole of it when it is not within the contemplation and purpose of Senators to do that, when their main purpose is simply to get rid of reciprocity. For myself, I am ready to join them on that, but I do not think we ought now to go further than that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am in favor of keeping this free-print-paper provision as passed in the Canadian reciprocity act upon the statute books as an everlasting demonstration of the falsity of Republican pretenses. While the matter was up for consideration in the Committee on Finance and in the Senate we were told every day that if that provision were passed all the paper manufacturers in the United States would have to go out of business. The provision was passed. It has been in existence now for a long time—just exactly how long I do not remember; I believe a year or more—and so far as I know no paper-manufacturing concern has gone out of business or has been in anywise disturbed except, perhaps, as to some undue profits; it has not been in anywise unduly disturbed, to use the proper language.

Whenever it is proposed to reduce a tariff tax some so-called witness comes up before the Finance Committee and bears so-called testimony to the effect that if taxes upon the people at large are reduced some particular business or industry will have to cease to exist. That is exactly what took place in this particular case, and here is the everlasting demonstration of the falsity of the pretense. I want it to stay upon the statute book as a demonstration for all time of the falsity of at least one of these hothouse-industry pretenses.

Moreover, Mr. President, the tax upon print paper is a tax upon knowledge, upon the spread and dissemination of information. It is a tax upon the newspaper business. I know that whenever a man seeks to be relieved of a tax he stands, in the minds of those on the other side of the Chamber at any rate, suspected of lack of patriotism; suspected of selfishness or something else; but whenever he seeks to have a tax increased in order that his business may be hothoused into a degree of prosperity which without law it could not enjoy, he is a patriot, taking care of American industries. When he comes forward seeking to have a tax removed in order that his business may be improved, he is suspected of all sorts of incivicism. I hope that the law removing this tax will be kept upon the statute books for all time, in order to prove how absolutely false were the pretenses of those who opposed the Canadian reciprocity bill in the only respect in which the Canadian reciprocity bill has taken effect.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the details or the provisions contained in the reciprocity act as a consequence of which the price of paper has been somewhat lowered. I understand, however, that there is a provision lessening the tax upon wood pulp or some element used in paper manufacture which has caused the reduction in the price of paper. So I have been advised by men who purchase large quantities of paper.

I am opposed, as is the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], to the repeal of any portion of the reciprocity act that in specific terms lowered the tariff tax and has gone into effect. I am perfectly willing to join the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to repeal the remainder of the reciprocity act, and I will vote to do so.

It seems to me that the provision affecting wood pulp and paper could properly be eliminated from the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. It also seems to me that this is a mighty good place to put on the other portion of his amendment, with a view of getting it through and having it approved. I do not believe that Senators on this side of the Chamber, or Democrats generally, can agree to a repeal of the reciprocity act carrying with it certain reductions in wood pulp and print paper. I understand that is the objection to repealing the reciprocity act; but modified in the manner indicated, I think the Senator can get all he is really desirous of accomplishing.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that in the amendment I have offered there is a great reduction in the rates on wood pulp—a reduction from $3.75 to $2 a ton—and a reduction on print paper in proportion. So far as I am personally concerned I would have no objection to accepting the proposition made by the Senator from Georgia, but the question is whether or not it would be treating this industry right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The reduction has gone into effect, but the industry is prospering; contracts have been made in consequence of it; there is no financial loss anywhere, and I know there is serious objection in certain quarters to a modification of that part of the reciprocity act.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that the law has not been on the statute books long enough to have any effect. I know that under the favored-nation clause in certain treaties foreign countries are demanding the same right that Canada has under the reciprocity law. If their demands are granted, it will be shown whether the law will have a bad effect or not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not believe it is going to be possible, or, at least, I am afraid it is not possible to get through the amendment of the Senator in the form it now is. I do think he can get through all of that portion in which he is especially interested. I think he can get through a provision which will repeal the features of the reciprocity act which concern the farmers of his State.

Mr. GRONNA. I can say to the Senator that, personally, I should have no objection to that, but I only have one vote, and I take it that other Senators would object.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment if he wishes to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will modify his amendment along the lines suggested by the senior Senator from Georgia in the manner referred to by me, I will vote for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia demands the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I wish to define my position on this matter. The Canadian reciprocity bill as passed provides that paper and wood pulp shall be admitted into the United States from Canada free of duty, while Canada still retains her tax against identically the same products going from the United States into Canada. For that reason I voted for the Root amendment, which would have removed that feature of the bill, stating when I did so that, in my opinion, the reciprocity agreement gave so many more advantages to Canada than it did to the United States I did not wish it to give any more than could possibly be helped. The Root amendment provided that the section of the bill relating to print paper and wood pulp should be operative only when Canada removed her restrictions against importations of the same products into her territory from the United States.

I am not willing to allow the free importation of anything from Canada into this country when Canada puts a tax on identically that same product imported from this country into Canada. For that reason, I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment offered by Mr. GRONNA by striking out the proviso in that amendment and inserting the words:

Except so far as the same concerns the provisions of said act relating to wood, wood pulp, and printing paper.

So that if amended it will read:

SEC. 10. That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and is hereby, repealed except so far as the same concerns the provisions of said act relating to wood, wood pulp, and printing paper.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that the word "pulp" ought to go in before the word "wood."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was going to suggest that instead of the language used by the senior Senator from Georgia. I would say "with the exception of the provisions of section 2," which is the section on that subject and the only section which the amendment to the amendment affects.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will read the second section of the act, if the Senate desires, to see whether that would be more desirable than the language proposed by me. The second section reads:

SEC. 2. Pulp of wood mechanically ground; pulp of wood, chemical, bleached, or unbleached; news print paper, and other paper, and paper board, manufactured from mechanical wood pulp or from chemical wood pulp, or of which such pulp is the component material of chief value, colored in the pulp, or not colored—

And so on.

I think, Mr. President, it is necessary to have the language which I have employed in the amendment, because of the fact that this section is not complete in itself. It necessarily relates to other parts of the act.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggests that the words should be "pulp wood, wood pulp, and print paper." I will change it in that respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. As modified, the amendment to the amendment reads:

Except so far as the same concern the provisions of said act relating to pulp wood, wood pulp, and print paper.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I want the newspapers and periodicals of this country to be able to acquire their paper and the paper mills to acquire wood pulp as cheaply as possible. A trial of this feature of the law has wrought no devastation such as was prophesied. But, further than that, I believe that the people of the United States are entitled to buy foodstuffs as cheaply as they can; and if Canada shall hereafter accept the reciprocity proposition, and if it shall in some measure reduce the cost of living to the people of the United States, then, in my judgment, we ought to have that advantage. I do not believe that any nation ever enriched or blessed its population by making the food of the people higher than it ought to be.

I represent in part a great agricultural State, and I can say for the people of that State that they do not fear the competition of Canada. They do not fear the competition of any country; and if it be true that reciprocity with Canada would afford a wider market in which our people could buy the necessities of life, I am willing that they shall have that advantage, and I am not willing to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand to some extent, not fully, the feeling that actuates a man when he has done a right thing and it is proposed to reverse it because some other party interested in the transaction has refused to join him in doing it. There is an imaginary line between the United States and Canada; conditions of labor are pretty much the same in both countries; social conditions are pretty much the same, especially after you leave the Province of Quebec toward the West. So far as I am concerned—and I wish to put the opinion upon record—I am perfectly willing to hold out the glad hand to Canada throughout all our national history. I am perfectly willing to allow an invitation to stay upon the statute books, to be accepted by her whenever she pleases, for free trade between the two countries, and, as next to that, a provision allowing opportunity for the kind of reciprocity to which we have agreed. I am myself a farmer.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word and I will yield to the Senator. I am myself a farmer. All of my income outside of my salary depends upon the production of textile stuff and foodstuffs. I am handicapped by the necessity of producing them with remarkably inefficient labor, a very cheap labor in the sense of being a low-cost labor per week, per month, and per year, but a very high-priced labor in the sense of being inferior; but, notwithstanding that handicap, I have never been able to see how any Canadian could hurt me in the production of any foodstuffs that I raise.

Moreover, I want to add this, Mr. President, whether any Canadian could or could not injuriously affect me, humanity speaks always in favor of cheap foodstuffs to the poor in every country. No man has a right by law to make the price of meat and bread higher than nature has made it for the poor who inhabit the great cities and work in the great factories. There are no great cities in my State; there are no great factories there; there is no labor vote there; so that I can not be suspected of knuckling to any demand from that class of people; but it is a demand of humanity, it is the demand of ordinary fellow-feeling between one man and another that men, women, and children shall have bread and meat just as cheaply as they can get it by the joint production of the entire world engaged in producing bread and meat. Now I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Mississippi to say that he was perfectly willing to have free trade between Canada and the United States. Am I right?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perfectly.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, does not the Senator from Mississippi think that we ought to repeal the reciprocity law in order to get free trade?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I thought——

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Mississippi knows, if he will allow me, that the present reciprocity law proposed to tax the American farmer on the manufactured article and to grant free trade only in agricultural products.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I thought that by repealing the reciprocity law I could procure free trade across the great imaginary boundary between the United States and Canada, between two great English-speaking peoples, two great pioneer civilizations in the New World, I would be perfectly willing to repeal it.

The Senator adds that the reciprocity act proposed to tax the American farmer. When that act was passed nobody proposed to tax the American farmer. If the provisions of that act would have any effect at all it would be to untax the American consumer of meat and bread and other products affected by the Canadian reciprocity bill.

Mr. President, if anyone contends that because by operation of a tax law any man engaged in any species of production having received a legally conferred special privilege, is taxed by withdrawing in whole or in part that legally conferred special privilege, then the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota is well taken; but if that be not true, it is not well taken at all.

One more word in that connection. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] a moment ago said—and in effect the Senator from North Dakota has followed it up—that since the Canadians would not agree to remove some duties existing there, we ought not to remove the duties existing here. In other words, if the Canadians are unwilling to relieve themselves as consumers of a tax burden, we therefore ought not to relieve ourselves as consumers of a tax burden.

I do not see any sense in that. I never have seen any sense in it. So far as I am concerned, I would have voted, without any reciprocity feature at all, for the reduction of every duty contained in the reciprocity bill if Canada had not been concerned in it. I would have done it, because it was a relief to the American people, and I do not conceive that this great Government was organized for the purpose of enabling a few people along the border to make undue profit in the industries in which they are engaged by aid of operation of law.

Gentlemen talk as if we were depriving them of some natural privilege. We are not. They talk as if we were depriving them of some vested right. We are not. We are merely putting them upon a footing of equality with their neighbors across the border. Equality, did I say? Yes; so far as law is concerned. Equality in any other way? No. You have the advantage of climate; you have an equally good soil; you have equally efficient and equally intelligent labor; you have equally efficient and intelligent operators of capital. So far as nature is concerned you have the advantage which God has given you in sunlight, in heat, and in climate—in every way.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Mississippi believe it is fair to the American farmer to compel him to buy his machinery in a protected market and to sell his products in a free-trade market?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I do not.

Mr. GRONNA. Is not that true in this particular case?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To a certain extent the Senator from North Dakota is now right, but the remedy for the evil is not by keeping upon the statute books a tax law which enables the farmer to enjoy an unnatural, artificial, law-conferred privilege, but the remedy consists in reducing to the revenue point the duty upon the articles which he must buy; and for that this side of the Chamber stands. After the 4th of March next we will give the Senator from North Dakota the relief which he is seeking. We will not give it to him in the way in which he is seeking it, but we will give it to him by reducing the duties upon the things which the farmer must buy.

It is absolutely unfair, it is absolutely inequitable, it is absolutely unequal, to make the farmer sell in a free market and buy in a protected market. But the remedy is not the remedy suggested by the Senator from North Dakota. The remedy is to keep upon the statute books what we have now in the interest of freer trade, and to follow it up with more statutes still more in the interest of freer trade upon certain articles, to wit, the articles which the farmer must buy.

Mr. GRONNA. May I further interrupt the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My friend the Senator from North Dakota may always interrupt me.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not think that the Senator and I differ upon the real fundamental principle. I am a protectionist and he is a free trader, and I will say this to the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would be a free trader if I had any other way of getting national revenue, but I have not.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that if I can not have the protection of agricultural products as well as of the manufactured articles, then I want to be a free trader.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now I am in still greater agreement with the Senator from North Dakota, and I hope that he can not have the protection upon agricultural products, because if he does not have it then he will join the right school of politics later on and will become a free trader to the full extent under the construction which the Supreme Court has placed upon the Constitution.

The Senator asked me if I was in favor of free trade. There are a whole lot of people now who pretend to be afraid of the word "free." I am in favor of a free press; I am in favor of free speech; I am in favor of freedom of religion; I am in favor of free ships, as some one says, to the utmost extent which can be had under existing conditions. Nobody but a fool now would be in favor of free trade, with the decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax and other decisions of the Supreme Court staring them in the face. Nobody anywhere, not even in England, is in favor of absolute free trade, because you must have taxes upon imports at least sufficient to countervail internal taxes upon articles which are subject to internal taxation.

I am in favor of a tax for revenue, and I will not say in this connection that I am right now in favor of a tax for revenue only even, because I realize that a man has very little practical constructive statesmanship sense who would proceed to a tariff for revenue only to-morrow morning, if he could, because due regard must be paid to existing conditions.

If a man wants to build a new house upon the site of an old house, he will not set fire to the old house, with the inhabitants in it, for the purpose of getting a free place upon which to build a new house. He will take his time, give notice sufficient for the inhabitants to move, at any rate, before he builds his new house.

But I have no sort of fear, as many seem to have, to answer the question of the Senator from North Dakota. I am in favor of as near free trade as I can go consistently with existing conditions, and consistently with the common-sense limitation of not creating an absolute revolution—a bouleversement of all existing industries. My ultimate aim under existing Supreme Court decisions is tariff for revenue only overnight, and I would not go even to that extent overnight—ueber nacht, as the Germans say, as my friend will understand. I am glad to know and to have known for a long time my friend from North Dakota. We are not very far apart about a great many things. He calls himself a Progressive Republican and I call myself a Democrat, but fundamentally, in principle, I find myself very much more nearly related politically to him than to a great many men on that side of the Chamber, than I do to some men on this side of the Chamber who, in my opinion, are unduly retroactive in many ways. I hope, Mr. President, that the motion of the Senator from Georgia will be defeated. I think it is a good deal better than the motion first presented, before it was modified, but I want to hold out a hand to all nations of the earth that mean peace and fellowship and amicable and friendly relations and mutual interchange of products. I do not want either physical war or commercial war with any nation on the surface of this earth, unless it be some nation not belonging to the white race, outside of the sphere of the white man's civilization, whose conditions are so absolutely dissimilar to ours that any sort of reciprocity between us commercially or otherwise is impossible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], on which the Senator from Georgia demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIVELY (when Mr. KERN's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] and transfer it to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRADLEY. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

Mr. WATSON. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CHILTON] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce again the pair of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], necessarily detained from the Senate, with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Johnston, Ala.	Paynter	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Martin, Va.	Poindexter	Swanson

So Mr. BACON's amendment to Mr. GRONNA's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the yeas and nays, too.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. If that Senator were present I would vote "yea."

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before of my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I desire this announcement to stand for all subsequent votes.

Mr. WATSON (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHILTON] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (when Mr. DAVIS's name was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the transfer of my pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER]. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT. My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. If present, the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 26, as follows:

So Mr. GRONNA's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That the revenue derived from the special excise tax imposed by this act shall constitute a special fund in the Treasury to be applied to making up any deficit in existing revenue caused by a reduction of customs duties, and any surplus derived from such excise tax above the amount necessary to make up such deficit shall be reserved and applied to the regulation of the navigable rivers, including the prevention of and protection against floods, and the improvement of post and interstate roads in cooperation with the States.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in connection with the excise tax, which I propose to support, arises the question as to whether any additional taxation is necessary to meet the expenses of the Government. The total revenue is about a billion dollars, of which about one-quarter is derived from postal receipts and expended in the postal service. About one-third is collected from internal-revenue taxes, about one-third from customs duties, and the balance from the corporation tax and other miscellaneous receipts.

It is clear that to-day there is no deficit in revenue. There is a surplus of revenue. To what purpose then will this additional tax, involving a burden of $60,000,000, be applied? The answer is that we expect to reduce the customs duties to such an extent as will necessitate the imposition of this tax. The reduction in duties already effected by the action of the House aggregates about seventy million dollars. The increase of duties accomplished by the House bills amount to about $4,000,000. The revenue to be derived from this tax will equal about $60,000,000. So we will have nearly enough derived from this tax and derived from an increase of duties to take the place of the diminished revenue caused by a reduction in duties. That diminished revenue involves a loss of over $50,000,000 on sugar and $16,000,000 on other articles.

Mr. President, it is probable that this tax bill will pass, but I am not sure that the reduction in duties called for by the House action will take place. The legislation in that direction may fail in Congress and legislation in that direction may be vetoed by the President. Yet it is a wise thing in advance to provide additional revenues so that we can accomplish a reduction in the customs duties.

The purpose of this amendment, therefore, is to prevent this additional revenue, in case there should be no reduction in customs duties, from being expended in current administration, in perhaps wasteful administration, and to impound this money in the Treasury of the United States in such a way as that it shall be applied in the future to any deficit in revenue caused by a reduction of customs duties, and that any surplus may be applied to the constructive work of the Nation instead of to mere administration.

The constructive work which the Nation has in view involves the regulation of our rivers, the prevention of floods and protection against floods, and also the improvement of post roads and interstate roads in cooperation with the States. At least $75,000,000 will be required for those two purposes annually if we enter upon that work. So the $60,000,000 can be applied to that work if it is applicable to the deficit in revenue.

I will ask the Senator who has charge of the bill, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], whether he can accept this amendment?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as I stated before, except where the minority members of the Finance Committee have considered an amendment, I do not feel that I have any authority to accept or to decline to accept an amendment. They have not considered this amendment, and therefore I can not comply with the request of the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In view of the Senator's statement, I shall not press this amendment now, but I would suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that this amendment can be put upon subsequent revenue bills. It can be put upon the bill that will be before us to-morrow and, perhaps, upon the cotton bill if it comes from the House; and I will ask the serious consideration by the Finance Committee of this amendment as a means of preventing a wasteful use of this revenue in case it should be secured and if, at the same time, our legislation for a reduction of customs duties should temporarily fail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada withdraws his amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I move to strike out sections 1 to 9, inclusive, of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the amendment which is at the desk.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Idaho withhold his amendment just a moment while I offer a verbal amendment to the House bill, to make the meaning clear?

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert, after the word "paid," in line 12, page 4, the words "upon such amounts."

Mr. CUMMINS. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that makes the language clearer, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall vote for the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho wishes to modify his amendment?

Mr. BORAH. I move to strike out of the original bill sections 1 to 9 and to insert what is at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is within the Senator's right to modify his amendment as he chooses.

Mr. BORAH. I offer the amendment in lieu of sections 1 to 9 of the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of the House text down to section 9 of the bill, on page 12, line 24, and insert the following——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The "following" is substantially the substitute that the Senator before offered.

Mr. BORAH. It is precisely the substitute which I offered, and I wish to do it in a different way for the reason that I do not desire that it shall take the place of some of the amendments which have been agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So, really, the vote now is upon the Senator's substitute to the original bill.

Mr. BORAH. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator what the nature of the substitute is. Is it the Senator's income-tax amendment?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire that my position may be known on the proposition that is now before the Senate, the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I want to state primarily that I am a Democrat and proud of it. I want to be with my party; I love it, and I have made sacrifices for it equal to those of any other Member of this body; but, beyond and above all, I want to be right. I desire that the burdens of government shall be shared by all. I realize that under our present system such is not the case. That is provoking more discontent throughout the length and breadth of this land than any other one thing; and I insist that those who love their country should endeavor to secure legislation that shall contemplate the sharing of the burdens of government equally by all. I believe an income tax is a step in that direction.

I am aware that my fellow Senators on this side of the Chamber will not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. I should love to be with them, but I can not follow them. For 25 years I have declared for an income tax; I have written over my own signature articles urging an income tax which have gone throughout the length and breadth of my little Commonwealth; I have spoken for it on a hundred platforms. Every national convention of our party for the past 25 years has peremptorily and positively declared for it. In my campaign for Senator recently, in a platform of principles which I published and declared for, I pledged myself to it. I believe in it; I believe it is right; I believe it is just; and at this stage of the proceedings I should be a coward if I should vote against it because it happens to come from a Republican source.

I know scores of men in my own home town and many within our Commonwealth who roll in wealth, and yet who contribute scarce a pittance to the needs of the Government. I insist that it is my duty not only as a Democrat, but that it is my duty as a patriotic citizen to sustain this method of taxation, and I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Idaho. I understand the Senator proposes to strike out all of the original House bill and to substitute his amendment for it.

Mr. BORAH. I propose to strike out all of the original House bill and to insert in lieu of it the amendment which was read from the desk earlier to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator also include section 9? Does he propose to strike out the whole House bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho include section 9 in his motion?

Mr. BORAH. I think I do; because the provisions of the amendment that I have submitted, in my judgment, cover that feature of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the amendment which he has offered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, is not that a mistake? The bill has been amended, as I understand, and this is a substitute only for that part of the bill which came from the other House—the excise-tax portion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MASSEY. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, like the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], I favor an income tax, but I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], because, if successful, it will accomplish the defeat of a measure which will impose upon wealth a considerable proportion of the burdens of government. The position which I have taken is that stated in a resolution adopted in a conference of the Democratic Senators to-day, to the following effect:

> That, while favoring an income tax, they realize that, with the pending amendment to the Constitution authorizing an income tax now requiring the favorable vote of only two States, it is preferable to support the pending bill for an excise tax, which, with the existing corporation excise tax, will raise approximately an equivalent amount of revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in the nature of a substitute, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). I desire to announce that if my colleague [Mr. CHILTON] were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. MCCUMBER's name was called). The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], as I have already announced, is absent. He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY].

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is absent from the Chamber. If he were present he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair for to-day with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], but upon this particular amendment I have his authority to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has been called from the Chamber. I am requested to say that if he were present he would vote "nay" on this amendment. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the transfer of that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER]. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FOSTER. I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I notice that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has left the Chamber. I desire to announce my pair with him and to say that if he were present I would vote "nay" on this amendment. I make this announcement for the evening and to hold good on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and, therefore, withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] is recorded as having voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed he is not.

Mr. MYERS. During his temporary absence from the Chamber I have a pair with that Senator, and I ask leave, therefore, to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 33, as follows:

So Mr. BORAH's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, just a moment, before the closing scene in regard to this bill. There are some anomalous conditions to which I desire briefly to call attention. I looked in the dictionary to ascertain the accurate technical definition of the words "excise tax," and I find this:

> An excise tax is an inland duty or impost operating as an indirect tax on the consumer.

I merely read that for the comfort of those who have been talking about the consumer. Now, they propose to reduce duties, and thus reduce prosperity, and then tax on their income the people whose prosperity they have reduced.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] confessed that the probabilities were that we would have no use for this money, and he suggested by an amendment that we should use it, in the event it transpires that we have no occasion for it in paying the expense of the Government, for the improvement of waterways. Why not loan it to the farmers, according to the proposition of about 15 years ago, or devote it to any other useless purpose?

Mr. President, just a few thoughts that occur to me. It is proposed by this legislation to tax our people directly and to relieve foreigners of the taxes, or that which they call taxes, through the customs duties; in other words, to transfer the taxation from the foreigner to our own people directly. We have the power, perhaps; but it is not necessary to exercise it.

I believe in an income tax levied by the State at any time that in its judgment it is wise or necessary. I do not believe in an income tax levied by the General Government in time of peace. I believe in having the power and reserving its exercise for times of stress and necessity only.

Mr. President, this measure proposes merely a slowing down process of prosperity. It is proposed to put a direct tax upon those whose incomes exceed $5,000, with the power remaining in those people, who are admittedly the business people of the country, to charge it up through additional profits to be paid by the down-trodden and oppressed people. It does not appeal to me. I feel no patriotic impulses to support such a measure, and there is no necessity for it. It emanates from two sources; first, those who have an unreasoning dislike to other people's prosperity. I do not know that I ever knew a prosperous man to hate another man because he was prosperous; if I have, it is a rare exception; but there is a class of people in this country who are always trying to drag down the man who is in front of them. They would not stand on their own solid ground if they could; they want to stand on the wreck of somebody else. It is an instinct that I can not account for. They are only comfortable when they are dragging somebody down and posting themselves on top of the wreck of their fellow men. That is one source from which it emanates. The other is the desire upon the part of those who have no other political issue, except that of free trade and enmity toward the protective-tariff policy, to find or create an excuse for destroying the system of taxation upon the foreigner who enters our market in competition with the American producer. It is used to make a political issue. It is an old cry upon an old horn that has been out of order so often and tinkered up so often that to-day it is scarcely recognizable; but it is the same old horn upon which they are sounding this note.

They will call it any name to accommodate you; they will call it free trade; they will call it tariff for revenue; and when they get among those who like to dally between the lines of responsibility, they will then call it tariff reform. It has no baptismal name, but it is the name that means destruction to the industries of the American people.

Now, out of the very necessity for creating a political cry or issue they will destroy the income of the Government from the legitimate and natural resources in order that they may substitute an income derived from direct taxation upon our own people. They would rather tax our people than tax the foreigner who seeks to enter and take advantage of our market. They are the two classes of people from whom this demand emanates, and from nowhere else. The opposition to-day would not dare to put in force the doctrine they preach here and elsewhere, but they would like to ride into power upon it, upon high-sounding phrases, upon stern denunciation of the successful party of this country, upon a condemnation of the principles that have been tried and tested and found to be sound, conservative, and sufficient for the maintenance of a Government such as ours.

I will support no measure that has no other or better principle than that.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and others demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair. If I were allowed to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. If he were present and I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). My colleague if present would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. GARDNER (when the name of Mr. Johnson of Maine was called). My colleague is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair on this vote with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Colorado voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Colorado has not voted.

Mr. PAYNTER. I have a general pair with him, and for that reason withhold my vote. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Upon this vote I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea," and if the Senator from Michigan were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when Mr. RICHARDSON's name was called). My colleague is absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If my colleague were present and free to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. As stated by that Senator, my colleague if present would vote "nay" on this proposition.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer it to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURNHAM. I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I again announce the pair existing between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. BAILEY. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I again announce my pair. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. I again announce the pair of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 18, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24450) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. DU PONT, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama conferees on the part of the Senate.

EIGHTH INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS (H. DOC. NO. 890).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress a report of the proceedings of the Eighth International Prison Congress, held at Washington in October, 1910, in pursuance of the invitation extended by the President in virtue of the joint resolution approved March 3, 1905.

The attention of Congress is invited to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State concerning the printing of the report of the proceedings of the Prison Congress.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 26, 1912.

[The report of the proceedings accompanies the message to the House of Representatives.]

IMPORTATION OF ADULTERATED SEEDS.

Mr. GRONNA, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was recommitted the bill (H. R. 22340) to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated seeds and seeds unfit for seeding purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 985) thereon.

THE SUGAR SCHEDULE.

Mr. NEWLANDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 27, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 26, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art the beginning and the end, the alpha and omega; our God and our Father, whose patience is without end, whose mercy is from everlasting to everlasting, who beareth our burdens, comforteth our sorrows, chastiseth us when we do wrong, maketh the heart rejoice with gladness when we do right; Thy laws are inexorable. To keep them is heaven; to break them is hell. Continue, we beseech Thee, Thy ministrations unto us and bring us at last in harmony with Thee. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever, amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Military Academy appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 24450) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAY, Mr. SLAYDEN, and Mr. PRINCE.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will withhold that request until to-morrow morning, perhaps I will not object to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well, Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from New York I will withdraw my request.

STANDARD APPLE BARRELS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 21480) to establish a standard barrel and standard grade for apples when packed in barrels, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. MADDEN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. RODDENBERY, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. TURNBULL, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

MRS. LOUISA J. ROSE—LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. LAFFERTY obtained unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, without leaving copies, the papers relating to H. R. 3629, granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa J. Rose.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—HOUSE DOCUMENT 613.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of House Document No. 613, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copies of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting estimates of appropriations required to meet certain claims against the United States in connection with the Engineer Department, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 340. Joint resolution making appropriation to be used in exterminating the army worm.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 22195. An act to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7337. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at the city of West Point, State of Virginia.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 7337. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at the city of West Point, State of Virginia; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 24699. An act extending the time for the repayment of certain war-revenue taxes erroneously collected;

H. R. 24598. An act for the relief of Jesus Silva, jr.;

H. R. 20873. An act for the relief of J. M. H. Mellon, administrator, et al., all of Allegheny County, Pa.;

H. R. 18033. An act to modify and amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13938. An act for the relief of Theodore Salus;

H. R. 12375. An act authorizing Daniel W. Abbot to make homestead entry;

H. R. 1739. An act to amend section 4875 of the Revised Statutes to provide a compensation for superintendents of national cemeteries;

H. R. 644. An act for the relief of Mary E. Quinn;

H. R. 22111. An act for the relief of the Delaware Transportation Co., owner of the American steamer Dorothy;

H. R. 22043. An act to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 20347. An act to authorize the Dixie Power Co. to construct a dam across White River, at or near Cotter, Ark.; and

H. J. Res. 340. Joint resolution making appropriation to be used in exterminating the army worm.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

House resolution 635 (H. Rept. 1066).

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint two additional clerks of said committee, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day from and after the time they entered upon their duties, which shall be evidenced by the certification of said chairman.

Mr. MANN. How many clerks does this authorize the employment of?

Mr. LLOYD. Two.

Mr. MANN. When did they enter upon their duties?

Mr. LLOYD. They have not begun yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this intended simply to provide for their employment during the remainder of the present session?

Mr. LLOYD. Just the remainder of the present session.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it says so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. After the word "committee" the words "for the remainder of this session" should be inserted.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting after the words "duties," in line 6, the words "until the end of the present session."

Mr. MANN. That is not where it belongs.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It should be after the word "committee."

Mr. LLOYD. In line 3, after the word "committee," insert the words "for the remainder of the present session."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, in line 3, after the word "committee," the words "for the remainder of the present session."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25970) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1912, and for prior years, and for other purposes; and pending that motion I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if we can fix the time for general debate?

Mr. CANNON. I have had requests for one hour and a half from two Members, one for an hour and the other for 30 minutes. So far as I myself am concerned, I do not think I shall desire more than 5 or 10 minutes in general debate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we can easily conclude the general debate inside of three hours.

Mr. CANNON. If I desire 5 or 10 minutes of the gentleman's time——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we can accommodate the gentleman in that way. I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the gentleman asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask whether it is the gentleman's intention to endeavor to keep the House in session and finish the bill to-day, or whether he will be satisfied if we finish it to-morrow?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we can at least finish it by to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. There is no intention to endeavor to force us to stay here to finish it to-day?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we proceed with such speed that it is evident that it will not prolong the session beyond the usual time, I shall be glad to finish it to-day.

Mr. MANN. If it does not prolong the session beyond the usual time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman understands very well that we will be here until doomsday unless somebody forces something.

Mr. MANN. It looks to me very much as though we would be here until doomsday, anyhow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be a beneficial thing for the country if the other House were Democratic. Just at present it is merely obstructing public business.

Mr. MANN. The other House is the only place where they are doing business now.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, three hours of general debate would place us pretty well up to 4 o'clock. So far as the consideration of this bill is concerned, upon the bill itself, I see no reason why it should not be passed to-day, but, as matters go, I should say probably it would be fortunate if we get through by 3 o'clock to-morrow. There is no disposition on my part to consume any time except upon the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois understands that the peculiar conditions existing heretofore which required the presence of many Members elsewhere on account of important business after 3 o'clock in the afternoon no longer exist, and there will be less difficulty in keeping Members in the House. They will have no longer to go to other places where their presence has seemed to be imperative.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is satisfied that we can depend upon the bulletins for the news that we desire to get? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 25970, the general deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I shall take a very brief time to state generally what this bill contains. The estimates submitted to the committee in connection with appropriations to supply deficiencies for the past fiscal year and for other years aggregated $11,723,874.56. The bill as reported recommends appropriations aggregating $6,182,838.24, or a reduction under the estimates of $5,541,036.32. Of these reductions, $3,300,000 was an estimate to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of certain Ute Indians. After the investigation made by the committee there was very grave doubt as to the advisability of making the appropriation in the manner recommended by the department. It appeared that the item had been placed on the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate, and the Committee on Appropriations of the House dismissed further consideration of the appropriation.

This is the smallest general deficiency appropriation bill that has been reported to the House or enacted into law since 1886. Outside of certain items in the nature of audited settlements for the Post Office Department, deficiencies for the House of Representatives, largely consisting of gratuities to the widows of deceased Members, certified judgments of courts and of the Court of Claims, and $170,000 appropriated for a specific purpose for the next fiscal year, because of the emergency character of the item, and $150,000 appropriated for the proper commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, in all aggregating the sum of $1,652,241, there remains carried by the bill $4,530,597 as the amount reported to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the various services during the past and prior fiscal years. Of these $4,530,000, $2,300,000 is to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the support of the Military Establishment.

These deficiencies are occasioned by the fact that in submitting the estimates required for the subsistence of the Army and for the pay of the Army for the fiscal year 1912 the Secretary of War arbitrarily reduced the estimates submitted by the Commissary General and the Paymaster General by $2,534,000, and there was transmitted to Congress for the support of the Army and for the pay of the Army estimates which it was known in the War Department would be inadequate. If those estimates were to be eliminated from the amount carried in the bill, the amount carried to supply deficiencies, not accounted for in the manner already indicated, would aggregate $2,196,597.

In some instances, Mr. Chairman, the committee in its investigations ascertained that some of the departments or some of the bureaus had deliberately ignored the antideficiency act, and in those instances the committee declined to make the appropriations to supply deficiencies. The law clearly points out the penalty for such violations, and until those penalties are enforced by the administration the committee will not supply moneys for which obligations have been incurred in violation of law.

It is a very commendable situation that with appropriations for the maintenance of the Federal service, aggregating more than $1,000,000,000 in a year, that outside of the matters set forth as indicated, the actual deficiencies, about which there might be some differences of opinion, amount to only $2,196,000. That is not due to any peculiar change in the administration. It is not due to any different disposition upon the part of those in the departments to expend money according to their will rather than in accordance with the judgment of the Congress. In my opinion, based on investigations which I have made, it is due entirely to the fact that this is a Democratic House of Representatives, and the knowledge has sunk into the heads of those charged with responsibility for expending the public moneys that there is now a place and a body and a power which proposes to insist that the laws be obeyed, and that the servants of the people obey the law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, as is well known, the work of preparing bills carrying appropriations to maintain the various services of the Government is not a very easy nor a pleasant task. There had been for many years a disposition on the part of the departments to ignore not only the law, but to ignore the determination of Congress in fixing limitations upon the amounts that might be expended for various purposes. I believe that this bill indicates that there is a change in the attitude of the officials in the departments toward these matters. Realizing that the Congress will not tolerate longer the ignoring or the open violation of the law, a marked change has taken place in their attitude, and if it were possible in some way to prevent what was done regarding the Army estimates, to arbitrarily reduce them and furnish the Congress over the protest of the Commissary General and the Paymaster General of the Army estimates for the maintenance of the Military Establishment, known to be inadequate, and upon which appropriations were to be based, a much greater reform would be effected in our financial system. When the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1912 was before the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] called attention to the fact that the appropriations were grossly and knowingly inadequate and would result in large deficiencies being requested by the departments. He endeavored to have appropriated sums that it was apparent the strength of the Army and the cost of rations would require.

But the Republican Congress refused to make the appropriations and turned over to a Democratic House the necessity of supplying at this time the funds necessary to pay the bills for the feeding and for the pay of the Army. There are some other matters in the bill that, during the course of its consideration, I shall be pleased to go into at greater length. The committee included in this bill, however, the item of $150,000 as a contribution toward certain expenses in connection with the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg. A number of the States in the Union, both in the North and in the South, have appropriated money to pay the transportation of Union and Confederate soldiers to the battle field of Gettysburg. The State of New York appropriated $275,000 for this purpose. For the purpose of supplying adequate accommodations, water, and other things for the large numbers that will gather on the battle field of Gettysburg, the Congress was requested to appropriate $150,000. It is not in order upon this bill. In view of the unanimity of the sentiment throughout the country that this celebration take place as an evidence of the union that has really taken place between all sections of the country, the committee believed it desirable and proper to include it in this bill.

Mr. HOBSON. May I ask the gentleman if the whole amount of $150,000 is in the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The entire amount. The committee inserted in the bill the Senate joint resolution, which was prepared along the lines desired by the officials in control of the celebration. Mr. Chairman, I shall reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire to ask if it is the custom on a general deficiency bill to provide an appropriation to pay for the judgments entered in the Court of Claims, or whether they have been placed on the sundry civil bill or some other bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the general deficiency bill certain classes of certified judgments are included.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if his attention has been called to the fact that there is a judgment existing against the United States in favor of the Ute Indians and that an amendment has been added to the Indian appropriation bill at the other end of the Capitol to pay that judgment? I wish to ask the gentleman if it is not a matter that the Appropriations Committee should have taken jurisdiction of instead of having it incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It probably would have applied to this bill, but it is on the Indian appropriation bill already and the Committee on Appropriations did not desire to have it appear that it was overanxious to have the judgment paid in the way it was presented to the committee. The department not only asked for what it was entitled to under the law and under the judgment, which would have been an appropriation equivalent to 4 per cent upon the amount fixed in the judgment, the judgment being three million three hundred and odd thousand dollars, but it also desired authority to expend such part of the principal of the judgment as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable for the benefit of the Indians. There were some features about it that so long as it was pending in another place the Committee on Appropriations was perfectly willing to be relieved of the burden of determining what should be done. The Court of Claims decreed that certain attorneys should be paid $210,000 or $211,000 for services consisting, according to the report, almost entirely of work before the committee of Congress in obtaining the resolution upon which the judgment was obtained. Having some knowledge of the Committee on Indian Affairs from six years' service upon it I know of no service that could be rendered by any attorney before that committee that would be worth $100,000 or $200,000 or any other such indefensible sum.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact that the amount allowed by the court to the attorneys, which amount I believe was $211,000, has already been paid?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe it has been paid because there is no appropriation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman, in the jurisdictional act the attorneys were shrewd enough to include a provision in the matter of the payment of their fee, so that it would be paid regardless of whether the judgment was paid or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I read the jurisdictional act which provided for the payment of these fees either out of the proceeds of the judgment or out of the proceeds of the sale of land; but under a statute passed a few years back by Congress, that no act of Congress should be construed as making an appropriation unless in specific terms the appropriation was made in the act, I know of no feature of the jurisdictional act under which anybody was authorized to pay these attorneys $211,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say, for the information of the gentleman and for the information of the committee, that there has been paid $211,000 to attorneys who represented the Indians in presenting the Ute Indian claim to Congress and carrying it through the Court of Claims.

Mr. FITZGERALD. From what fund was it paid?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am not informed as to that, but I do know it was paid, because I had occasion to look it up. I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Evidently the attorneys were more alert than the department. The supplemental judgment was entered some time early in 1911. If the attorneys got their money, they did very much better than the starving Indians who owned it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to ask the gentleman if this item ought to be incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill, which is a bill providing for current expenses of the Indian Department, or whether it ought not to be incorporated in this pending bill or some other bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it is to be incorporated in any, I think it should be in this bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The first question I asked the gentleman was this: If it has not been the policy of the Committee on Appropriations in either the deficiency or some other bill to make provisions for judgments that have been entered in the Court of Claims?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it has always done so and would have been done so in this instance in accordance with the law.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question in that connection? Does the Committee on Appropriations feel obligated to pay a large judgment without any examination of the matter at all?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; and it would not have incorporated in this bill the provision submitted by the Department of the Interior in connection with the estimates for the payment of the judgment. The Court of Claims finds distinctly that the amount of the judgment is the sum upon which the interest is to be computed which is to be paid annually to the Indians. And if a paper account is to be opened up in the Treasury so as to make possible the computation of interest available for the Indians and under the proposal of the Department of the Interior we spend the principal, three million and odd dollars, for the benefit of the Indians, I am convinced that inside of 20 or 30 years somebody else will have the irrigated land and the property of the Indians, and we will have the Indians as the dependents of the Nation, with their moneys dissipated, they existing through the generosity of the people.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit me a brief statement? Owing to the fact that the Ute Indian lands and reservation were in Colorado——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I just wish to make this one statement for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if I may have his attention. In examining the findings of fact of the Court of Claims it appears that certain payments by the United States, aggregating more than $3,000,000, had been made for the benefit of the Ute Indians under certain treaties. It is very difficult to tell the attitude of the court toward those payments. It did not give the United States credit for them. I am not so certain that the United States was not entitled to the credit of the $3,000,000, and, if it had been, there would not have been the sum of $3,500,000 found due to the Indians in this proceeding. There was no appeal taken.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman a further question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If I am not mistaken, the Ute Indians had a fund from which they received annually an annuity; the amount I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The fund was a little over a million dollars. I think it was $1,200,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And that fund has been merged in the judgment, and the income that has been annually going to these Indians has ceased. Is not that the case?

Mr. FITZGERALD. So I am informed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. At the present time the judgment is not paid, and the interest has ceased upon this fund which has been merged into the judgment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the Committee on Indian Affairs could have appropriated money to be reimbursed hereafter from the Indian funds. The history of how this fund was created is very interesting. These Indians owned certain lands in Colorado; they were set aside as national forests.

The Indians have a judgment for the value of these lands so set aside as national forests at $1.25 an acre, amounting to over 2,000,000 acres. They still have undisposed of and to their credit over 7,000,000 acres of land to be disposed of. I have examined somewhat hastily the judgment of the court, and I am not certain at all that the United States should not have been credited with more than $3,000,000 additional paid to the Indians under the treaty.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say to the gentleman—

Mr. FITZGERALD. And if it is necessary to make some provision for these Indians, it will be easy to make an appropriation reimbursable hereafter out of funds to be placed to their credit. But I do not agree with the Secretary of the Interior that this judgment money which should be placed to the credit of the Indians and upon which the interest charge should be calculated shall be treated as a cash item and he be given authority not only to spend the interest but to spend next year $500,000, as he asks.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say, in justification of the fact that there was no provision made in the Indian appropriation bill for the Ute Indians, that it was not brought to the attention of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and that committee knew nothing about it and only knows of it now because an amendment was adopted by the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill providing for the payment of the judgments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows the fault of that condition is not with the Congress, but it is with the department, that had all this information and never submitted it to the House.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I presume an estimate was submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in the usual way as a judgment of the Court of Claims and that the estimate went to the Committee on Appropriations. It certainly did not go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have now before me the estimates submitted, in which there is a demand that there shall be appropriated $3,305,257.19 as the net amount of this judgment, for expenditure for the benefit of these Indians in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

It was contended at first that he would have that power under some general statute, but upon request being made to the officials before the committee for a reference to the statute it was quickly determined there was no authority whatever to spend any part of that principal, but covered up ingeniously was this provision giving the authority not now possessed by the department to expend the principal.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Unless there was some legislation in connection with it the Indian Committee would have no jurisdiction over this matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is $3,322,305.34 found by the Court of Claims to have been paid these Indians under certain conditions, let me add, for which the United States have no credit. If it had been credited on that judgment of $3,500,000, the only thing that would have been left would have been the sum paid to the attorneys as their fee. An examination of the supplemental judgment did not satisfy me or the other members of the committee that it was a matter upon which they were sufficiently well advised to recommend the legislation in question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope the body at the other end of the Capitol will add an item to pay this judgment as an amendment to this bill and let the committee that has jurisdiction of the subject dispose of it, and that it may be eliminated from the Indian appropriation bill, where it does not properly belong.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say this to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE]. I do not know what the committee at the other end of the Capitol will do on the Indian bill, but I know it will not add anything on the appropriation bill from the Committee on Appropriations that does not belong there, meritorious or otherwise; or rather, I mean it will not stay there if it be added.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand the gentleman to say that this item properly belongs on the general deficiency appropriation bill if it is going to be appropriated for at all?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it does.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like two minutes' time in which to make a brief statement, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I wanted to make a statement in the nature of an interruption of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I wish to say to the gentleman that I have no personal interest, and very little of any other kind, in this appropriation; but owing to the fact that the Ute Indian Reservations and lands were located in the State of Colorado and in the district which I have the honor to represent I introduced the bill carrying the appropriation to pay the Court of Claims judgment in favor of the Confederated Band of Ute Indians.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is mistaken in saying that these lands were taken for forest reserves. The Ute Indians were forcibly dispossessed—of course, under treaty agreement—but they were forcibly dispossessed some 25 years ago, and were removed to the State of Utah. Now, these lands have been largely sold by the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A very large portion of them were put in forest reserves, and the Court of Claims in its decision says that the extraordinary services rendered by the attorneys were rendered in convincing Congress that the lands appropriated for forest reserves should be considered as sold.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will say this to the gentleman: That some of those lands have been in forest reserves, and a great part of them have been sold to settlers, and the selling price received by the Government. I have a bill pending to make a full further allowance in favor of the Ute Indians for the lands that have been disposed of since the rendition of this judgment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the opinion of the court it is stated that in view of the law and the facts, as stated, the court has found the lands thus set apart in forest reserves paid for at the rate of $1.25 per acre, amounted to $3,825,325.75; and as a set-off to these and other matters, it brings the judgment down to $3,500,000. From that opinion of the court the gentleman can readily see that this judgment is almost entirely for land set apart for forest reserves.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Now, the attorney's fees have been paid. That is no part of the amounts carried in the bill, which is $3,305,257.19. This is the net amount of the judgment, and, as expressly stated in the bill, it is exclusive of the amount awarded for attorney's fees, which I understand to be, as stated by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], already paid.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman please state to what committee the gentleman's bill has been referred for the payment of these claims?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes. My bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I have mentioned it several times to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

This is what I object to, I will say to the gentleman from Texas: This appropriation has been hung onto the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate. In my individual judgment it was hung onto the bill there for the purpose of anticipating action by the Committee on Appropriations in the House on the general deficiency bill. Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] assures me that he does not propose to stand for that amendment at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman believe that the House should not insist upon this going to the proper committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will say that the House did so insist on this when it sent it to the committee having jurisdiction of the general deficiency bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was done, instead of its going on the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate, when the Indian Committee of the House has had no chance to investigate the grounds of the matter and determine what should be done with the fund, if we should determine it is due at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What will result is not fair to a Member of the House. This is what will result: This general deficiency bill will go to the Senate and it will go into conference, just the same as the Indian appropriation bill. The Indian Affairs Committee of the House will not stand for this item on the Indian appropriation bill, and at the other end the item will be shifted to this bill, the general deficiency bill, so that it will be safe to predict right now that when the general deficiency bill becomes a law this item will be in it and not in the Indian appropriation bill.

This is a just debt and it ought to be paid. I am not relying simply on the statements of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but I am relying also on statements of people in Durango to the effect that these Indians are in need and unable to pay their debts. Their funds are exhausted. There are no funds now available for the Ute Indians, so even if the whole of this judgment is not appropriated for at least a substantial part of it ought to be appropriated for. This is a condition which ought to be met.

It is conceded that this general deficiency bill is the proper bill on which to provide for judgments of the Court of Claims. It could not very well be denied when the bill actually carries appropriations to pay judgments of the Court of Claims, and I think the bill will in the end carry this judgment before it becomes a law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can the gentleman state how it was that the attorneys' fees were paid before this judgment was collected?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman that I can not explain that. I do not know a thing on earth about the relations of the attorneys to this claim. I do not know who they were; I do not know what they got, and I do not care. I simply introduced this bill by request, as a matter of duty, to get this judgment paid, because the Indians who owned the lands lived in the district I have the honor to represent. The judgment was obtained before I had any knowledge that the case was pending.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman said he wanted two or three minutes in which to make a statement. I do not want him to use up all my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have now made the statement I desired to make. My position is this: This appropriation will finally be paid, and through this maneuvering it will finally be paid as the result of the efforts of gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol where our appropriations are usually secured.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me say this to the gentleman: That this appropriation, if I can prevent it, will not be made in such a way as to permit this money being dissipated instead of being conserved for the benefit of the Indians.

The Indians have been looted now to the extent of $200,000 for alleged services of attorneys. I do not propose, if I can prevent it, that the balance shall be appropriated with the understanding that it shall be invested in improvements on their lands and then taken by another sort of alleged friends of the Indians and the Indians themselves left in the same beggarly condition as they would be in if they had never had anything at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I shall do what I can to get the appropriation through regardless of the bill on which it is placed, who gets the credit for it, or who will be entitled to the benefit of it after it is passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe the Indians should get what they are justly entitled to, but I do not believe in enriching a lot of grafters who have been living on these dependent Indians for years under the pretense of giving them that to which they are entitled.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This appropriation was indorsed to the gentleman's committee by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and the gentleman could have brought them before his committee and ascertained these facts, if they are facts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have ascertained that they wished to do something which, in my opinion, was absolutely indefensible.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman is going behind the judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not going behind the judgment of the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims did not find that the department should have the right to expend any part of the principal of this money. It distinctly states that it is the measure of the interest to which the Indians are entitled; but the officials in the department, assuming that they know better than Congress and that they are above the law, calmly propose to spend $500,000 at once of this $3,300,000, because they say these Indians are in such a deplorable condition, and they make the admission that they are among the most backward Indians in the United States. To give these allotments of land and spend $3,000,000 in improvements means that they are preparing to hand over to some very astute white gentlemen in the Western States some very desirable lands at very unremunerative prices, and to leave the Indians upon the hands of the Government and the Federal Treasury for many years to come.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr Chairman, just a further very brief statement. It is true that the bill as drafted authorizes the Secretary to make payments and expenditures in his discretion, and I do not know what amount he may have asked the committee for authority to expend——

Mr. FITZGERALD. He wants authority to expend it all, but he said he would expend about $500,000 this year.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But, as I understand it, it is up to the committee to fix the limitations and say in what amounts or at what times payments may be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not. There is a change in the law. That is not controlled by the Committee on Appropriations.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me 10 minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] touching the amount covered by this bill, and I congratulate the House and the administration as well on the fact that this is the smallest deficiency bill that has been reported for many, many years.

This is due to several causes. I agree with the gentleman from New York in his statement that the estimates referred to by him, transmitted last year by the Secretary of War under the law, were too small. This bill would have been still less in amount if that estimate had been as large as it ought to have been.

The smallness of the bill is due to another fact. For many years Congress has been attempting to compel the Executive to cut the garment according to the cloth. Legislation has been enacted from time to time, and in both the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses legislation was enacted, which is largely to be credited with the small deficiencies carried by this bill. Notwithstanding there is a penalty against the official who expends more than is appropriated, yet from the necessities of the public service here and there expenditures have been made which are technically made in violation of the law. Just to illustrate as one instance: The Mississippi River overflowed; people were starving; the waters were rising; there was no money to relieve them. Estimates were sent for a considerable amount to relieve the flood sufferers. The appropriation was not made, and, in my judgment, wisely not made, because the President agreed to meet the existing conditions by furnishing Army rations and other service. The gentleman from New York stated that in his opinion it was the duty of the President to meet the emergency and furnish these supplies, and I concurred in that statement, and the gentleman from New York assured the President that, in his judgment, Congress would make the deficiency appropriation.

That condition was repeated again at the time of the earthquake disturbances in Alaska. A technical violation of law? Yes. But, after all, conditions must be met with intelligence and patriotism.

I am not criticizing the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. It is all very proper for us to flap our wings and rejoice when there is a desirable condition, as there is in this deficiency bill, in that it is the smallest deficiency bill of many years. It is all well enough for the gentleman to say that this is due to the Democratic majority, a statement which is received with great applause upon the other side. Well, this appropriation for the public service for the year just expired was made when the Republicans were in the majority in the House. I just state that by way of a set-off to the political part of my friend's statement. I take great pleasure in saying that substantially this bill is well made.

Another thing, the bill would have been larger if it had been passed earlier, because under the provision of law that expenditures shall not be made unless appropriated for, if this deficiency bill had been passed in March, April, or May, the public service for the remainder of the fiscal year would have been cared for in some instances where it ought to have been cared for, but was not cared for, because the law prevented it in the absence of appropriations. The fiscal year having now expired, of course that diminishes the amount of the bill.

Reference has been made to the $3,300,000 judgment of the Court of Claims. I quite agree with the gentleman from New York that the committee did right in not including that $3,300,000 in this deficiency bill, because it was ascertained that the Senate had put this appropriation upon the Indian appropriation bill.

The estimate was resting before the Committee on Appropriations. There were two strings to the bow, and if it was not obtained according to the will of perhaps some legislators or some people interested in the same, under conditions in one bill, they would then have another string and see if they could not do it better on another bill, and there you are. It is simply ridiculous to have two of the great money bills carrying the same appropriation and the body which amends appropriation bills putting the amendment on the Indian appropriation bill.

I have some views about this judgment in one particular which I shall not at this time discuss. I am not entirely satisfied that there ought not to be at least $2,000,000 deducted from the amount of the judgment. I am examining and shall continue to examine that question, either as a member of the committee or as a Member of the House, or both, in order that I may act intelligently when I vote in the premises. I quite agree with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has stated, that whatever is done when this appropriation is made to satisfy this judgment, we should not make a law placing the whole amount of the judgment at the discretion of the Interior Department or the administration to expend it in its discretion for any purpose it may desire.

I shall not talk about the attorney fees at this time. There are 2,000 of these Indians. There are 7,000,000 acres of this land, forest and mineral and agricultural in its nature, that have not yet been sold. A large sum is yet coming to these 2,000 Indians. I trust that in the future, where suits are brought before the Court of Claims and dismissed for want of jurisdiction, there will not be legislation enacted without sufficient consideration which would give jurisdiction to the Court of Claims which will be an instruction to take jurisdiction and adjudicate the claims along certain lines. The $211,000 of attorney fees I shall not say was a fraud upon the Indians and the Government, but I am satisfied that both Indians and Government would be far better off if these attorney fees had never been authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

[Mr. GILLET addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FITZGERALD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On July 20, 1912:

H. R. 17239. An act to authorize Arkansas and Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River; and

H. R. 20501. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the site heretofore acquired for a United States immigration station at Baltimore, Md., for another suitable site and to pay, if necessary, out of the appropriation heretofore made for said immigration station, an additional sum in accomplishing such exchange, or to sell the present site, the money procured from such sale to revert to the appropriation made for said immigration station, and to purchase another site in lieu thereof.

On July 22, 1912:

H. R. 19403. An act authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton.

On July 25, 1912:

H. R. 21477. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply to some of the statements that were made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] yesterday. I hardly think it is necessary for me to state to this House, and I know it is not necessary for me to state to the gentleman from Nebraska, that anything I shall say in no way reflects upon the honesty or integrity of his purpose. He is one of the first gentleman with whom I became acquainted as a Member of this body. I formed a high regard for him then, and that regard has remained with me ever since. I shall merely attempt to criticize his judgment in some of the statements he made in his speech of yesterday and the day before.

It is not my intention to discuss the facts in relation to the selection of delegates from the State of Washington to the Republican national convention. I am not fully conversant with the facts. I was not at home at the time these delegates were named and took no part in the contest whatever. I had friends upon each side of this question. Whatever the facts are, I want them made public in fullest detail that the public may know the truth and pass judgment.

But I do resent the attempt of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to reflect upon the honesty and integrity of a large number of the citizens of my State by quoting the opinion of some man whose name he is not willing to give. The gentleman in his speech said, in substance, that a certain gentleman of wide acquaintance and of high standing, whose statements would have great weight with the Members of this House and of the country, and who was conversant with all the facts, had stated to him that the delegates from the State of Washington to the Republican national convention "were absolutely stolen." I listened to this statement with much anticipation and waited for him to give the name of the gentleman. When it seemed apparent that he did not wish to do this or had forgotten it, uncertain as to his intent, I asked him who the gentleman was. He refused to give his name, but did state later, in reply to a question from me, that the gentleman was a supporter of President Taft and a candidate for office on the Republican ticket. For this reason he had refused to permit the use of his name.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken when he says that I stated this man was a candidate for office on the Republican ticket. I made no such statement. I would like to state that I did give the name of a man who prepared the statements.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman, as I understand it, then, stated that the gentleman to whom he referred was a supporter of President Taft and had political ambitions.

Mr. NORRIS. I judged that he did have.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman judged that he did have political ambitions.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, that is one of the men whose name I did not give.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understood him to say that he was a candidate for office. If he had political ambitions I know no other inference to draw from it.

His reasons for not giving this name may be and doubtless is entirely satisfactory to himself, but his failure to either do so or to withdraw such statement I do not think was satisfactory to this House, nor do I think that the position in which the gentleman finds himself in trying to justify his use of such evidence is entirely satisfactory to himself.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield for a question

Mr. NORRIS. I stated frankly that it was true that I admitted that would detract from my statement; but I stated that I knew the man and his opinion had great weight so far as my opinion was concerned. I did not offer that to influence the gentleman. I offered that as one of the reasons why I am convinced of the truth of it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am much obliged to the gentleman for interrupting me and saying that such evidence as that has great weight in his judgment. That is the very question that I am going to discuss—the condition of the gentleman's mind when such evidence as that does have great weight with him. As these statements were directly concerning the State of Washington and a number of her citizens, I can not permit it to go unchallenged. The gentleman from Nebraska once occupied with distinguished ability a high judicial position, though I admit that no one would have ever suspected that he had been a judge from that portion of his speech to which I have referred. Think of a judge permitting a witness to testify and permitting such testimony to go into the record and be received as evidence that a certain man of high standing, well known in the community, had said that he had investigated facts and that the defendant at bar was a thief, but as he was a friend of the thief he would not permit his name to be told. It was exactly upon such evidence as this that the gentleman wanted the country to believe that the State of Washington had been stolen and a great crime against honest government had been committed.

Suppose I should rise in my place in this House and name some fellow Member and then declare that I had been told by a man of national reputation, a man whose truth and veracity the Members of this House would not doubt, that he had carefully investigated the record of the Member I had named and that he was satisfied that such Member was a scoundrel and a criminal, and then, when the name was demanded of me, I would refuse to give it because the man whom I had quoted was a friend of the Member and was a candidate for public office. What a monstrous proposition that is! Is there a man on this floor whose innate sense of honesty, fairness, and justness would not arouse his hot indignation? I would deservedly be expelled from this body and carry with me the contempt of all my former associates. Is it any less monstrous, any less dastardly to utter such statements about a large number of reputable citizens to discredit them, and for political purposes to assassinate the reputation of a great political party? I know that the gentleman from Nebraska does not approve any such method. I am still utterly unable to account for his using such methods, or having used them to fail, upon reflection, to ask to have this portion of his speech stricken from the RECORD. This is the method of the anonymous letter writer, held in scorn and contempt by all decent men. This is the method of the blackmailer, the most cruel and cowardly of criminals, to extort blood money from his terrified and helpless victim while shielding himself. This is the method of the pitiless poisoner of the domestic peace in his neighbor's family. This is the method of the lowest and slimiest of all God's creations, the vile monster that by anonymous whispers assassinates the reputation of virtuous women.

As I have said, I do not believe that the gentleman from Nebraska intended to be unfair. It must be that in the zeal of his cause or in the enthusiasm of hysteria he for the moment lost control of his better judgment. Had such a statement as this been made by another no man in the House would have seen it more quickly or condemned it more strongly than the gentleman from Nebraska. Not only did the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska regarding this witness give the impression that his opinion of the case was of great weight, but it further carried with it the expression that this gentleman had unusual opportunities to know the facts, and, by implication at least, the impression was also given that he was much better informed than the general public, the national committee, or the gentleman from Wyoming in regard to the matter. I submit that the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska is a gross injustice to a large number of good men in my State, to himself, and to the great party with which he has long been identified.

But the gentleman discredits his own methods and impeaches this high-minded, far-famed, and nameless witness of his. He informs us that this great and good man, whose name we do not know, believed that the delegates from the State of Washington were stolen. If the delegates from Washington were stolen, if the unknown witness told the truth, and the contention of the gentleman from Nebraska is correct, then the convention at Chicago was fraudulent; then President Taft has stolen his nomination. Such was asserted again and again by the gentleman from Nebraska to be true. But this anonymous paragon of honor, of wde reputation, quoted to discredit honest men, is supporting Taft knowing that his nomination is stolen. This witness of high standing, of splendid character, that the gentleman from Nebraska uses without giving his name, is supporting the Republican party in its attempt to profit by this great outrage.

And, says the gentleman from Nebraska, this unknown witness of his is not only supporting Taft, the man who has received the stolen goods, but he is himself a candidate for office, or, as the gentleman now says, to quote him correctly, has political ambitions, and, therefore, does not want it known that he thinks that the delegates from the State of Washington were stolen. It is almost inconceivable that the gentleman from Nebraska should make such statement. Is it a justification for a man to support another for office when he knows that that man has stolen his nomination because he is himself a candidate? Is a man justified in refusing to expose political thefts because he is himself a candidate of the party that practiced such corrupt and dishonest methods? What becomes of the high standing, the unimpeachable character of this unknown witness which the gentleman from Nebraska has introduced? If the gentleman states the facts about his own witness he is guilty of everything that the gentleman in other portions of his speech condemns. May I ask the gentleman from Nebraska what rule he uses in measuring the honesty and the credibility of candidates for office when called as witnesses to prove political crookedness?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will not yield at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. But the gentleman has asked me a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman can answer it in his own time a little later, when I shall yield. He vouches in highest terms for the character, the standing, and the integrity of his nameless witness and then in almost the same sentence admits that this same witness is now supporting a candidate for President that he knows was dishonestly nominated.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not at this time. I will yield a little later. Does the gentleman believe under his own statements that his own witness is entitled to credit? If he does, then what estimate are we to place upon the judgment of the gentleman from Nebraska upon any question of this character? The excuse of the gentleman from Nebraska for the nameless one is that he has political ambitions. If that is a sufficient excuse for supporting Taft, knowing that he was not honestly nominated, if that is a sufficient excuse for refusing to give to the country the truth about the Chicago convention, in the estimation of the gentlemen who are opposed to President Taft and to the action of the Chicago convention would it not also be a sufficient excuse for these same gentlemen to support other candidates regardless of the way that they were nominated? Would it not be sufficient excuse for these same gentlemen to keep from the public the truth about their own candidates and about their own party?

The gentleman from Nebraska is himself a candidate for high office, and if he is to subscribe to the doctrine that he has advanced in behalf of his unknown witness, that when he is a candidate for office he is excusable for acting with a party that he knows is corrupt, that he is excusable for supporting a candidate dishonestly nominated for the highest office in the civilized world, that he is excusable for not giving facts in regard to dishonesty and graft in his own party, does not the gentleman impeach himself and place himself in a position where his own motives may be justly questioned?

Are we to conclude that it is upon this theory that we hear so much to-day about stolen delegates, about dishonesty, about corruption, about political robbery, that each candidate because he is a candidate is justified in denouncing and condemning in most unmeasured and vicious terms his opponent, and is equally justified in concealing the truth about his own party and his own candidates? This seems to be the logic of the position of the gentleman from Nebraska. I regret to say that this does seem to-day to be the approved method of a large class of professional reformers who are seeking by the volume of their vocabulary to make the public believe that with them rests the salvation of the Republic and that with them virtue will perish from the earth.

If an honest man, a man of highest character, of unquestioned truth and veracity, worthy of every confidence, can and does support President Taft, knowing he secured his nomination by stealing, knowing that the Chicago convention was controlled by bosses, jobbers, thieves, highwaymen, scoundrels, robbers, thugs, grafters, thimbleriggers, porch climbers, and pirates, freebooters, buccaneers, and bandits—I believe I call a majority of the names in common use by the gentleman from Nebraska and his followers—if any honest man can support the work of that convention—and this man is honest, for the gentleman from Nebraska has so declared—then to what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska continue to vex the atmosphere with his declamation? If that is his opinion of honesty and of honest men, then no one doubts that he may honestly believe that the Chicago convention was controlled by crooks. I emphasize this part of the gentleman's speech to show the temper of the gentleman, to show on what evidence he is ready to condemn others, to show what he regards as fair argument, to show the condition of his mind, to show how easily he can be convinced that others are dishonest, to show what character of men he considers high-minded and worthy of credit. I dwell upon it to emphasize the fact that a mental condition to-day seems to be widely prevalent, a condition that is anxious to believe anything from any source however disreputable, provided only that it tends to discredit. It is utterly useless to present facts or evidence or argument to sustain the good reputation or the high character or the honest purpose of any man to one in such state of mental aberration, when excitement or self-interest has so prejudiced his judgment and paralyzed his sense of reason.

Perhaps some will think that the statements of the gentleman from Nebraska should have gone by unchallenged, but I believe that reckless and unbridled statements are too common in this House. It is not to our credit that it is so. In justice to the gentleman from Nebraska I must say that he is usually careful and moderate in his statements, and weak, indeed, must be his case now if he finds it necessary to depart from his usual custom and introduce such evidence as he has done. It seems that there are many estimable gentlemen in the country that are in such dazed and hysterical condition that they have lost all sense of proportion. They seem utterly unable to weigh evidence. Their sense of fairness seems to have become paralyzed in their appeals to have it appear that they alone are honest and that they alone are the friends of the people. I hope that soon this period of suspicion, hysteria, and of reckless denunciation will have passed away, and we will have less of the cant and hypocrisy of self-appointed guardians of the people in their self-righteousness, so loudly and fervently thanking God that they are not as other men are.

There is just one other statement that I wish to notice in a sentence made by the gentleman from Nebraska and that is that the action of those who have supported President Taft had destroyed the Republican Party. It is strange to me, even if this is true in the light of the gentleman's career for the last few years that such action should arouse his solicitude or bring him regret, for if any man, according to his ability, and that ability is not small, has done more to destroy the Republican Party than the gentleman from Nebraska, then the Democratic Party should erect costly monuments to his memory and sing his praise in song and story down to the last syllable of record time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] one hour.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman from Washington has not used all his time, and I desire to ask him a question if he will yield.

Mr. CANNON. I want the hour and a half, and the gentleman will have opportunity later.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not asking for time, but I want to know if the gentleman from Washington will yield. He has not consumed all of his time, has he?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not consumed all his time.

Mr. CANNON. How much time?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-four and a half minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington a question or two.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] 60 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Before the gentleman yields that time, I do not see Mr. FITZGERALD on the floor——

Mr. CANNON. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. HEFLIN (continuing). Mr. FITZGERALD promised to yield to me 10 minutes immediately following the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. CANNON. I yield 60 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HEFLIN. Before the gentleman proceeds; the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] promised to allow me 10 minutes immediately following Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not see him in the Hall, and I ask that I may be allowed that 10 minutes now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 10 minutes, to be taken out of the time of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CANNON. I believe I have the floor, and I yield to the gentleman from Illinois one hour. The gentleman from Alabama will get 10 minutes, perhaps when it will suit him better, after the gentleman from Illinois has spoken.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to thank my distinguished colleague for this courtesy, and I hope that I may be able to conclude my remarks without consuming all the time that has been so generously granted to me.

Mr. Chairman, when a great political party has nominated its candidate for the office of President of the United States it is only natural that the people should immediately manifest an intense interest both in the personality of the nominee and in the principles for which he is known to stand. His habits of life, his opinions on social and economic questions, his theories of governmental policy, become at once legitimate and interesting subjects of inquiry and investigation. While it is true that in a Republic like ours government must necessarily be conducted by and through political parties, yet it is also true that the platform of principles adopted by a political party and on the strength of which the candidate appeals for popular support is in no sense a true index of the candidate's worth or of his fitness for the office to which he aspires. In this enlightened day and age, when the standard of general intelligence is higher than it has ever been, the personality of the candidate becomes in a very large measure the true platform of his party. The people are more vitally interested in ascertaining the honest convictions of the candidate, formed in a time of sober and mature reflection, uninfluenced by ambition or hope of political preferment, than they are in any professions or promises contained in a platform which they know has been constructed solely to meet the exigencies of practical politics. In the history of American politics, with but very few exceptions, no man has ever been nominated for the high office of President of the United States by either of the great contending parties who was wholly unknown to fame or who had not previously rendered distinguished services to his country on the field of battle, in legislative forum, or in high executive or judicial place. The candidates who have been nominated by the Republican and Democratic Parties in this year of 1912 are not an exception to this rule. Both are men of high personal character, and both have records of public or semipublic service, which should enable the intelligent voter to form a correct conclusion as to their relative worth and fitness.

William Howard Taft has had a long and honorable career as a Federal judge, as governor of the Philippines, as Secretary of War, and as President of the United States. Woodrow Wilson, on the other hand, has been in public life for a very short time, having served less than two years in the office of governor of the State of New Jersey, that being the only political office that he has ever held. He has, however, had a long and honorable career as president of Princeton University, one of the great universities of this Nation, and he has had even a longer career as an author of note and distinction. He has been a most prolific writer, exploring every nook and corner of the field of history, sociology, and political economy. In his voluminous writings and public addresses every subject in which the American people have ever shown the slightest interest, with the possible exception of the question of race suicide, has been treated by him in a manner which reflects great credit on his intellectual courage and independence, if not upon his political foresight and acumen. But I want to say in defense of the scholarly professor and man of letters that at the time he was expressing his honest views on these multitudinous subjects his fine literary soul was unvexed and unannoyed by the alluring prospects of political preferment. The shadow of the White House had not fallen athwart his peaceful path. The presidential bee had not yet begun to buzz. In fact, it had not even been hatched.

It is with this period in the professor's life that I purpose to deal to-day. For the benefit of such as do not have ready access to his numerous publications I desire to call attention to some of the startling views expressed by Prof. Wilson on men and measures, principally as they appear in his most important work, "History of the American People." This history was published in 1902, only 10 years ago. At the time of publication Prof. Wilson was 46 years of age, and by reason of his erudition and scholarly attainments enjoyed then, as he does now, the titles of doctor of philosophy, doctor of literature, and doctor of laws. It will be apparent, therefore, that the views expressed by him are not the hasty and ill-considered fulminations of a college graduate, but rather the sober and philosophic reflections of the matured student and thinker.

WOODROW WILSON VERSUS THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Mr. Chairman, Thomas Jefferson is regarded as the founder of the Democratic Party and by common consent is accepted as its patron saint. His teachings have furnished Democracy's inspiration since the foundation of the party. Impassioned Democratic orators have been known to bring tears to the eyes of their listeners while describing the patriotic pulsations of that great heart that was wont to beat in sympathy with the oppressed of all mankind. In glowing terms they have pictured Thomas Jefferson as the great commoner, the embodiment of all the homely virtues, simple in all of his tastes, and devoted to the plain people of whom he was part and parcel. No Democratic national convention has ever failed to pay homage to the "Sage of Monticello." At the convention which met at Baltimore we find as the first resolution that time-honored, moss-grown, stereotyped expression with which we are all so familiar:

We, the representatives of the Democratic Party in national convention assembled, reaffirm our devotion to the principles of Democratic government as formulated by Thomas Jefferson.

To-day the mantle of the immortal Jefferson rests upon the narrow but classic shoulders of the Princeton professor. That mantle was placed there amid scenes of great excitement on the second day of July, by the frenzied followers of the lamented Jefferson in convention assembled at Baltimore. It was done in the daytime, in the full glare of the midday sun, at an hour when the spirits of the departed that hover forever near the scene of their earthly activities are supposed to go into retirement, preparing for their nightly walks. Jefferson was taken at a disadvantage, and he is therefore not to blame, for, if given an opportunity, I insist that the spirit of the author of the Declaration of Independence would certainly have protested, and protested vigorously, against the action of that convention. In righteous indignation he would have pointed to page 3, volume 4, of Woodrow Wilson's History of the American People, in which appears this sentiment:

The difference between Mr. Jefferson and Gen. Jackson was not a difference of moral quality so much as a difference in social stock and breeding. Mr. Jefferson, an aristocrat, and yet a philosophical radical, deliberately practiced the arts of the politician and exhibited oftentimes the sort of insincerity which subtle natures yield to without loss of essential integrity.

He would next have pointed to page 289 of Wilson's Life of George Washington, in which Prof. Wilson characterizes Thomas Jefferson as a "philosophical radical rather than a statesman," and says further:

Washington found him a guide who needed watching.

Mr. Chairman, if Woodrow Wilson is correct in saying that Thomas Jefferson was at heart an aristocrat while pretending to be of and for the common people, if he is correct in placing upon him the brand of insincerity, then Jefferson was easily the greatest demagogue, the most consummate hypocrite that has ever lived in the tides of time. If Wilson is correct in saying that in the critical formative period of our Nation's life Jefferson was wanting in loyalty to Washington, in whose Cabinet he served, and that he was "a guide who needed watching," then I insist that Jefferson was not a patriot, but a dissembler and an intriguer.

I for one, however, refuse to accept Woodrow Wilson's estimate of the character of Thomas Jefferson. I decline to have one of the historic idols of my youth and manhood shattered by a Democratic candidate for the Presidency. [Applause on the Republican side.] As the years recede the halo that surrounds the memory of the immortal Jefferson grows brighter and brighter, and I insist that that halo can not and must not be dissipated by Woodrow Wilson or any other Democratic theorist in the United States. The fame of Jefferson is secure; his is "one of the few, the immortal names, that were not born to die." But with Woodrow Wilson as the candidate for the Presidency I insist that it is high time for the Democratic Party, as a matter of expediency, if not consistency, for the latter is well-nigh impossible, and in justice to both Jefferson and Wilson, to change the name of its patron saint.

It is always a great embarrassment to a candidate to find himself out of harmony with a popular tradition of his party, and it is not exactly fair to the memory of the man who is responsible for the tradition.

WILSON VERSUS THE FOREIGN-BORN CITIZEN.

Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that the spirit of "Knownothingism" that was once rampant in this country was long since dead. I was under the impression that that spirit had been crushed out of existence forever by the convincing power of the great truth which lies at the very foundation of our republican form of government, that "all men are created free and equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights." I did not believe that the time would ever come when a great political party would nominate as its candidate for President a man in whom there seems still to linger a trace of the intolerance, the prejudice, and the narrow resentment that gave birth to the un-American, antiforeign agitation of some 50 years ago.

On page 212, volume 5, Woodrow Wilson's History of the American People, I find this remarkable statement:

Now, there came multitudes of men of the lowest class from the south of Italy and men of the meaner sort out of Hungary and Poland, men out of the ranks where there was neither skill nor energy nor any initiative of quick intelligence; and they came in numbers which increased from year to year, as if the countries of the south of Europe were disburdening themselves of the more sordid and hapless elements of their population. The people of the Pacific coast had clamored these many years against the admission of immigrants out of China, and in May, 1892, got at last what they wanted—a Federal statute which practically excluded from the United States all Chinese who had not already acquired the right of residence; and yet the Chinese were more to be desired, as workmen if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at the eastern ports.

Mr. Chairman, it has long been our proud boast that ours is the land of liberty and of opportunity.

Here, on the hospitable shores of the "home of the free," the persecuted of the earth have always found a refuge and an asylum. Our welcome has gone out to all alike. We recognize neither class nor caste, nationality nor religion. Every honest immigrant, no matter from what country he hails, whether from the north of Europe, the south of Europe, the east of Europe, or the west of Europe, if able to meet the requirements of our liberal immigration laws, is invited to partake of our liberties and to join with us in working out the manifest destiny of the American Republic. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is this spirit that lies at the basis of our national greatness. It is this spirit that is responsible for our national supremacy. And to the eternal credit of the vast majority of our foreign-born citizens, including those from the south of Europe, be it said, that when they take the oath of allegiance to the laws and Constitution of our country, they become American citizens, not only in word, but in spirit as well, and they instill in the hearts of their children a sincere love and reverence for the old flag and for the institutions of their adopted country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Oh, my friends, the history of civilization teaches us that liberty does not live with the rich, the powerful, and the great. It lives with the poor, the lowly, the humble, and the oppressed. Its fires have always burned more brightly in the humble cot of the day laborer than in the stately mansion of the multimillionaire. [Applause on the Republican side.]

God knows, I would not deny to any man, no matter how lowly his position in life, the right to enjoy the liberty of a free country. While I believe in the strict enforcement of our immigration laws, to protect us against the vicious, the lawless, and the depraved, yet I would not draw the line against admitting immigrants who, judged by our own experience, possess the possibility of developing into useful American citizenship.

My sympathy goes out to the man who has never had a chance in the struggle for existence, to the man whose dreary pathway through life has never been illuminated by the bright, golden sunlight of hope and opportunity. I would not discriminate against the Italian, the Hungarian, or the Pole. I have not forgotten that Columbus was the son of an Italian laborer. I have not forgotten that among the great sculptors and artists who have given Italy her proud place in the world of art are the sons of men who earned their bread in the sweat of their brows. Ah, genius knows no nationality, and is not the result of birth or location. No nation has a monopoly on intellect, a corner on brains. Italy has her Garibaldi, Poland, her Kosciuszko, Hungary, her Kossuth; and even the learned Princeton professor may profit by reading the inspiring story of their heroic lives. [Applause on the Republican side.] In this land of equal opportunity, the son of the immigrant of to-day may become the American statesman of to-morrow. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Oh, as I read the pathetic story of the patriotic struggle of the people of the south of Europe for greater freedom and for larger opportunity, and as I recall all that they have contributed to the genius of our national life, I must take issue with Prof. Wilson. I believe that these people are superior in every way to the Chinese, and that it is an insult to the Caucasian race to say that they are not. [Applause on the Republican side.]

WILSON THE FRIEND OF THE CHINAMAN.

Prof. Wilson seems to be especially fond of the Chinese. Continuing the quotation which I have just read, on page 213, volume 5, of Woodrow Wilson's History of the American People, the professor proceeds as follows:

They—

Meaning the Chinese—

had, no doubt, many an unsavory habit, bred unwholesome squalor in the crowded quarters where they most abounded in the western seaports, and seemed separated by their very nature from the people among whom they had come to live—

but it was their skill, their intelligence, their hardy power of labor, their knack at succeeding and driving duller rivals out, rather than their alien habits, that made them feared and hated and led to their exclusion at the prayer of the men they were likely to displace, should they multiply. The unlikely fellows who came in at the eastern ports were tolerated because they usurped no place but the very lowest in the scale of labor.

Mr. Chairman, the history of the Geary Act, which passed in 1892, and which resulted in the exclusion of the Chinese from the United States, tells us that that act was passed upon the unanimous and urgent request of American workingmen, who justly regarded the Chinaman as an alien, incapable of assimilation and incapable of Americanization. I do not agree with Prof. Wilson in the statement that the workingmen of this country were driven to make demand upon Congress for this legislation because of their "fear of the superior skill and intelligence" of the Chinese. I know of no wage earner in the great industrial district which I have the honor to represent in this chamber who is not the superior of the Chinaman in point of "skill, intelligence, or power of labor." I know of no American wage earner anywhere who is only a "dull rival" of the Chinaman. There can be no rivalry between the intelligent laborers of the United States and the ignorant coolies of China. Rivalry can exist only between equals. There is no equality between an American and a Chinaman, and Prof. Wilson wholly underestimates the character and the capacity of the American workingman when he makes a statement to the contrary. [Applause on the Republican side.]

As I read Prof. Wilson's glowing tribute to the Chinese race I could readily understand why the Chinese Students' Club of America met in the city of New York on the 2d day of February, 1912, and solemnly indorsed the candidacy of their friend, "Woodlow Wilson." [Laughter on the Republican side.] I can readily understand why there was such great rejoicing in the Chinese laundries of this country when the news went out that Wilson had been nominated for President at Baltimore. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Even at the risk of alarming my colleagues on this side of the Chamber I am forced to admit that the Chinese vote is hopelessly lost to the Republican Party. [Laughter on the Republican side.] It has gone over in a body to Woodlow Wilson. [Applause on the Republican side.]

WILSON VERSUS LABOR UNIONS.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in union labor and in labor unions. I regard them as the logical outgrowth of our modern industrial system, and I know that they have accomplished much for the betterment of the conditions of those who toil for a living. During the 12 years that I have been honored with a seat in this Chamber I think my colleagues will bear me out when I say that I have always been a consistent and loyal supporter of any measure that was presented for the consideration of this House which would prove beneficial to the working men of this country. I believe that any man who has ever given the slightest thought to this subject recognizes and fully appreciates the great and good work that is being done by the labor unions of to-day.

The Democratic Party in the platform adopted at Baltimore professes undying friendship for organized labor, and then, as an evidence of its sincerity, nominates as its candidate for President, Woodrow Wilson, who, on the 13th day of June, 1909, only three short years ago, in a baccalaureate address to a graduating class at Princeton, expressed the following remarkable views on this all-important subject:

You know what the usual standard of the employee is in our day. It is to give as little as he may for his wages. Labor is standardized by the trades unions, and this is the standard to which it is made to conform. No one is suffered to do more than the average workman can do; in some trades and handicrafts no one is suffered to do more than the least skillful of his fellows can do within the hours allotted to a day's labor, and no one may work out of hours at all, or volunteer anything beyond the minimum. I need not point out how economically disastrous such a regulation of labor is. It is so unprofitable to the employer that in some trades it will presently not be worth while to attempt anything at all. He had better stop altogether than operate at an inevitable and invariable loss.

The labor of America is rapidly becoming unprofitable under its present regulation by those who have determined to reduce it to a minimum. Our economic supremacy may be lost because the country grows more and more full of unprofitable servants.

I do not agree with Prof. Wilson that members of trades unions are "unprofitable servants." I do not agree with him that the man who belongs to a labor organization is trying "to give as little as possible for his wages." I do not agree with him that the work of the least skillful member of a labor organization sets the standard which marks the amount of work that his fellow craftsmen can perform. I do not believe that that great organization, the American Federation of Labor, is trying to make American labor unprofitable by reducing it to a minimum.

I do not believe that Mr. Gompers, Mr. Mitchell, and Mr. Morrison are trying to destroy the economic supremacy of the United States. If I read Prof. Wilson aright, he is opposed to putting any limitation on the hours of labor, and would therefore, in order to produce more "profitable servants," exact from the wage earner all that human endurance is capable of producing.

My friends, the recognition of the eight-hour day as constituting a day's work is one of the greatest triumphs of organized labor. [Applause.] It represents years of faithful, patient, intelligent effort and agitation, and it is in full harmony with the enlightened spirit of the times. Its abolition, as so manifestly desired by Prof. Wilson, in order to produce more "profitable servants," may prove popular with a Princeton graduating class, but I am sure that it will never prove popular with the 20,000 union men who live and work and vote in the twenty-second congressional district of Illinois. [Applause.]

And I go further. I measure my words well when I say that organized labor would receive a blow from which it would not recover in 20 years if a man holding the views that Woodrow Wilson holds on the question of labor organizations should be elected to the Presidency on a platform which limits his tenure of office to a single term in the White House. Platform or no platform, he would consider himself free to bend every energy and to use the power and influence of his great office to carry into effect his own narrow views on the question of organized labor.

WILSON VERSUS THE SOLDIER.

Mr. Chairman, on the 12th day of December, 1911, 98 Democratic Members of the present House joined with 130 Republicans and 1 Socialist and passed the Sherwood service pension bill. Eighty-four Democrats and only eight Republicans are recorded in opposition to this bill.

While the provisions of the Sherwood pension bill were not as liberal and generous as those of the Sulloway bill which we passed in the preceding Congress, yet, taken as a whole, it is a very meritorious measure, and the gallant veterans of the great civil conflict, whose ranks are so rapidly thinning, have reason to thank Gen. SHERWOOD, Mr. SULLOWAY, Col. BRADLEY, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. FULLER, and the other members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions for the splendid work that was done in their behalf.

In the platform adopted at Baltimore I find this plank:

We renew the declaration of our last platform relating to a generous pension policy.

Prof. Wilson, the Democratic candidate for President, does not seem to be in harmony with this declaration. In a review of the administration of Grover Cleveland, whom he eulogizes to the point of idolatry, on page 180, volume 5, History of the American People, Prof. Wilson says:

What most attracted the attention of the country, aside from his action in the matter of appointments to office, was the extraordinary number of his vetoes. Most of them were uttered against pension bills, great and small. Both Democratic House and Republican Senate were inclined to grant any man or class of men who had served in the Federal armies during the Civil War the right to be supported out of the National Treasury, and Mr. Cleveland set himself resolutely to check their extravagance. He deemed it enough that those who had been actually disabled should receive pensions from the Government and regarded additional gifts for mere service both an unjustifiable use of the public money and a gross abuse of charity.

In view of this remarkable statement, I would like to inquire how many Republicans and Democrats in this House who voted for the Sherwood service pension bill, or any other pension bill, did so on the theory that any man who had ever served in the Federal Army had an absolute right to be supported out of the National Treasury? I would like to inquire of the Democrats who supported this bill if they agree with Prof. Wilson that legislation of this kind is an "unjustifiable use of the public money and a gross abuse of charity"? The trouble seems to be that Prof. Wilson does not comprehend the true spirit and intent of our pension system. I maintain that the man who spent several of the best years of his young manhood in the service of his country is entitled to the everlasting gratitude of the Nation, whether he was actually disabled or not [applause on the Republican side], and that gratitude can only manifest itself in a practical way by granting him a pension if his declining days to compensate him for the loss that he sustained while at the full zenith of his power and capacity to earn a competency for himself and his family. [Renewed applause.]

No, no, my friends, a service pension is not "an unjustifiable use of the public money." It is not "a gross abuse of charity." It is founded on the eternal principles of right and justice. It is the expression of a Nation's love for the heroism of the men who were prepared to sacrifice their lives on the altar of patriotism that "government of the people, by the people, and for the people might not perish from the earth." [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is possible that Prof. Wilson has experienced a change of heart since he wrote those cold and heartless lines, for I recall that less than a year ago he himself applied to Andrew Carnegie for a pension, and based that claim not upon disability but upon "mere service" as an educator. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I hope the fact that he did not succeed in getting the Carnegie pension will not embitter his soul, but that it will lead even him to recognize the injustice of his views as expressed on the question of service pensions.

WILSON VERSUS BRYAN.

Mr. Chairman, the dominating power in the Baltimore convention was William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska. In fact, William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, has been the dominating power in the Democratic Party so long that the memory of a "first voter" runneth not to the contrary. For 16 long and weary years he has been Democracy's Old Man of the Sea, gripping her with a strangle hold and choking her into abject submission to his every whim and caprice. In utter defiance of a precedent that has been as binding as law in every Democratic national convention for 60 years, in utter disregard of every consideration of elementary decency and fair play, he succeeded in robbing the distinguished Speaker of this House of the honor of a nomination for the high office of President of the United States after the Speaker had secured a majority of the votes on eight successive ballots [applause], and he succeeded in bestowing that honor upon a man who was not only not his friend but his pronounced and active enemy.

If it be true that Opportunity knocks but once at every man's door, then CHAMP CLARK may never again have a chance to be President of the United States, but CHAMP CLARK will live in the hearts and affections of his fellow men long after William Jennings Bryan shall have been forgotten. He will live, and his name will be honored because all the world knows that CHAMP CLARK has always been true to his friends, true to his ideals, true to his conception of duty, standing "four-square to all the winds that blow," in fair weather and in foul. [Applause.] And when the impartial historian of the future shall come to write of his base betrayal at Baltimore he will denounce the act of William Jennings Bryan as marking the very acme of perfidy, the culmination of political treachery. [Applause.]

I have said that Prof. Wilson was not the friend of William Jennings Bryan, and for a verification of that statement I refer to page 258, volume 5, Woodrow Wilson's History of the American People, and this is what he says about the man who was once democracy's "peerless" but who is now her "cheerless" leader:

Mr. Bryan, though he had been a Member of Congress and had spoken in the House upon the coinage question, had made no place of leadership for himself hitherto, was unknown to the country at large and even to the great mass of his fellow partisans, and had come to the convention with the delegation from Nebraska unheralded, unremarked. A single speech made from the platform of the convention had won him the nomination, a speech wrought not of argument but of fire, and uttered in the full tones of a voice which rang clear and passionate in the authentic key of the assembly's own mood of vehemence and revolt. It was a thing for thoughtful men to note how a mere stroke of telling declamation might make an unknown, untested man the nominee of a great party for the highest office in the land, a popular assembly being the instrument of choice.

Mr. Wilson was not the friend of Mr. Bryan in 1896, and he was not his friend as late as April 29, 1907, when he wrote the following letter from Princeton:

MY DEAR MR. JOLINE: Thank you very much for sending me your address at Parsons, Kans., before the board of directors of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co. I have read it with relish and entire agreement. Would that we could do something, at once dignified and effective, to knock Mr. Bryan once for all into a cocked hat.

[Laughter from the Republican side.]

"I have read it with relish and entire agreement!" And in the Parsons speech Mr. Joline, the great trust and corporation lawyer, gives utterance to this sentiment:

But I venture to utter what is perhaps a feeble protest against the blind and foolish outcry against all railways. You and I know who are responsible for this socialistic, populistic, antiproperty crusade. It is the cry of the envious against the well to do—the old story. It is not new to this generation, only it is louder and more bitter than ever before in this country.

This is what Woodrow Wilson read "with relish and entire agreement." This was his honest opinion as late as 1907 of Bryan and Bryanism, and yet to-day, to gratify his ambitions, he is prepared to set aside the convictions of a lifetime, to don sackcloth and ashes and to eat out of the hand of the man whom he denounced as an untried declaimer, and who, because of his populistic and socialistic tendencies, he was anxious to "knock into a cocked hat once for all." [Applause on the Republican side.] Oh, what a spectacle for gods and men! What an example for the youth of our land to emulate! How proud our Democratic friends should be of the sincerity, the consistency, and the moral courage of their candidate for President of the United States! [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall not go much further into the record of this anti-Jefferson, antiforeign, antilabor, antisoldier, and pro-Chinese candidate for the Presidency. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I shall not speak of his remarkable reversal of opinion as to the efficacy of the initiative, the referendum, and the recall. Suffice it to say that a few years ago he denounced this doctrine as revolutionary and as destructive of constitutional government. Yet to-day he loudly proclaims it as the one panacea for all the ills that afflict the body politic. I shall not speak of his sneering references to the Farmers' Alliance and of his characterization of the Knights of Labor as being tinctured with the hideous doctrine of anarchy. I believe that it was Job who said, "Oh, that mine adversary had written a book." I would say, "Oh, that the voters of this country would read the books written by mine adversary." For if Woodrow Wilson's History of the American People were made a campaign document and placed in the hands of every man who will exercise the sacred right of franchise on the 5th day of next November he would be buried beneath an avalanche of votes so deep that he would never hear the blast of Gabriel's trumpet on the morning of the resurrection. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party faces this contest with courage and with confidence. We know that we are right and we have an abiding faith in the triumph of any question of truth or justice submitted to the will of a free and an enlightened people. We have an abiding confidence in the discriminating sense of the American voter. We believe that he can distinguish between wheat and chaff, between a statesman and a demagogue, between evolution and revolution. [Applause on the Republican side.] The record of the administration of William Howard Taft will be fully vindicated. When the froth and foam and fury of misrepresentation shall have disappeared, when the billows of billingsgate shall have subsided, when the calm succeeds the storm, the sober-thinking people who are in a majority in this country will do full justice to this brave, fearless, and manly man who has never failed to do the right as "God has given him to see the right." [Applause on the Republican side.] They will elect William Howard Taft as his own successor because in him the American people recognize the dignity and the majesty of an honest man who has tried faithfully to uphold the best traditions of the Republican Party, the party of progress and protection, the party of a people's hope and of a Nation's desire, the party that believes in preserving in all its strength and purity and glory the Constitution of the fathers. "We stand at Armageddon and we battle for the Lord." [Loud and continued applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, before this session of Congress adjourns I expect to call to the attention of the House the statements made by the President of the United States and by a former President of the United States in which they picture their real thoughts regarding each other. They had them concealed for some years, but the exigencies of the present political campaign compelled them to develop their real beliefs regarding each other. I shall set forth their views of each other as a contribution to important historical events of the recent past. At this time, however, I desire to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech by Hon. Woodrow Wilson on "Government in relation to business," which was delivered at the recent banquet of the Economic Club of New York at the Hotel Astor on May 23, 1912, in which he makes some pertinent observations as to the methods adopted and followed by the Republican Party during the past few years in enacting legislation and in legislating particularly for the benefit of "big business" rather than for the masses of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a certain speech designated by him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the other day the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] asked unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech delivered by Dr. Woodrow Wilson, to which, for some reason, a gentleman on the Democratic side objected, and I desire to couple that request with the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it?

Mr. MANN. If you are not willing to have printed in the RECORD any speech he made, say so.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to the request. I think the more that is published of Dr. Wilson's writings the better it will be for the Republican Party, but I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the speech to which he referred was subsequently made a part of my remarks on the day after the gentleman from Georgia had refused unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I want to know whether anybody on the Democratic side objects to the printing of this speech of Woodrow Wilson's.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would gladly print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and send to every voter in the United States a copy of everything Woodrow Wilson has ever written. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I think if that were done I do not believe that there would be a single State in the Union which would not cast its electorial vote for the Democratic candidate after November.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the gentleman has read the speech since a gentleman on the other side objected to its being printed the other day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman must not put me in that attitude. I did not make any such objection.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was not here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I had been, I would have been glad to have induced gentlemen to withdraw their objections. It might have been that some one objected to the printing in the RECORD of extracts from speeches of Gov. Wilson——

Mr. MANN. That was not the request at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). A practice that has been followed in certain parts of the country, where they have printed portions of his speeches which entirely misrepresent his attitude and his statements on important public questions. Whenever gentlemen desire to publish in full his statements I know that this side of the House will not only welcome the publishing of them, but will gladly contribute to the circulating of them, not only among Democrats but among the disorganized, disheartened, and discredited Republicans of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, still reserving the right to object, I decline to let the gentleman from New York insinuate in any way that the request which was made the other day and objected to was to print extracts. It was to print a speech in full, and the request was refused by the Democratic side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who objected?

Mr. MANN. A number of gentlemen made serious inquiry and afterwards had some one object.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not a fair statement to put in the RECORD. It does not show that some Democrats induced another Democrat to object, and the gentleman has no right to make any such statement.

Mr. MANN. Well, I make it. I do not misrepresent gentlemen who were not within a thousand miles of here, and they should not undertake to say anything on the floor about my misrepresenting that which they know nothing about.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the world is at war with tyrants and the party of Jefferson has practically destroyed the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Behold the two factions of this agent of predatory wealth, each accusing the other of hypocrisy and theft.

I used to hear it said that—

When thieves fall out and begin their fights,
Honest men will get their rights.

I have heard from my youth time that "it takes a thief to catch a thief." I have heard it said also that the way of the ungodly shall perish, and "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." The Republican Party has sown political corruption. That party is now reaping the fruits of that corruption. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Well can that party now exclaim, "The thorns that I have reaped are of the tree that I have planted. They have torn me and I bleed."

As I view the mutilated form of this old party of plunder, and as I see the spoilsmen, the pie-hunting brigade, arrayed on opposing sides, the big fat man from the Philippines commanding one army and the wild man from Africa commanding the other [applause and laughter on the Democratic side], I recall these appropriate lines:

Humpty Dumpty sat on the wall,
And Humpty Dumpty got a great fall;
And all the king's horses and all the king's men
Can't put Humpty Dumpty together again.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen have told us on that side that the nomination was stolen from Roosevelt at Chicago. Other gentlemen on that side contend that money was used to corrupt voters to buy them for Roosevelt. Both factions have been indicted and both factions stand convicted at the judgment bar of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Roosevelt wants to come back and serve the powers that he served so well when in office before. But the present President has gone him one better, and the Woolen Trust, the Sugar Trust, the Beef Trust, and other trusts are saying "Hurrah for Taft." But the Harvester Trust and Perkins, Morgan, and many of the tariff barons are thankful for past favors, and are saying "Hurrah for Roosevelt." One has served them; the other is serving them now. With the Republican Party it is not so much in the "happy long ago" and the "sweet by and by" as it is in the "happy now and now." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, look upon the prostrate form of the old standpat party.

Who killed Cock Robin?
"I," said the Roosevelt sparrow,
"With my little bow and arrow;
I killed Cock Robin."

[Applause and laughter.]

Who saw him die?
"I," said the Taft fly,
"With my little protection eye;
I saw him die."

[Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Who will dig his grave?
"I," said the crow,
"With my Democratic hoe;
I'll dig his grave."

[Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Who will toll the bell?
"I," said the independent bull,
"For I can pull;
I'll toll the bell."

[Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Who will be chief mourner?
"I," said the trust dove,
"For I mourn for my love;
I'll be chief mourner."

[Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

So, my friends, let the bell toll. The Republican Party's withered soul floats on the Stygian river. Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has shown us what a thieving, villainous gang marches behind the banner of Taft, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has shown us what a motley crew of hypocrites and trust agents follow the flag of Roosevelt, and the people of all parties are praying that Democracy's great leader will be elected, and the signs of the times point to the overwhelming election of Woodrow Wilson President of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], who has just spoken, is the most cheerful and best-natured mourner that I have ever seen following a political hearse. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The gentleman whistles to keep up his courage. He raised his hand and said, "We go into this campaign with confidence."

He reminds me of my experience with a negro that I once defended for murder. I assured him that he would be acquitted by the jury. He talked as though he thought so, too, until he got into the court room and heard the indictment read and saw the solicitor, who was a splendid prosecuting officer. He looked around at me doubtfully. I said, "Joe, we are going to acquit you." He hung his head for a moment and then said: "Mr. HEFLIN, there is some talk around here about Dr. Hudson getting my body. I don't want my body cut up." I said, "What?" He said, "Dr. Hudson wants my skeleton. I make this request of you: I do not want any doctor to put a knife into my body when I'm dead." [Applause and laughter.] I began to fear, as Joe did, that they would convict him, and they did convict him. Joe knew that he was guilty, but he talked of his innocence right up until the time he was arraigned, and somehow or other he commenced to think what would happen to his body should he be hanged, and he knew what was going to happen.

So my friend RODENBERG, if he would only speak the conviction that is in his heart, would say: "Boys, by gosh, they've got us. What will become of us after the election in November?" [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman, by his attack on the great statesman of New Jersey, can not turn the attention of the people from the miserable record of the Republican Party—

> For the raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting
> On the pallid bust of Pallas, just above your chamber door,
> And the lamplight o'er him gleaming, * * * casts his shadow on the floor;
> And your party's soul—
> From out that shadow shall be lifted—nevermore.

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have a few minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 12 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I always listen, Mr. Chairman, with great interest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. Great heavens! If he had turned to theology, what a powerfully rousing individual he would have been at a camp meeting. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I am not going to undertake to make reply, or to detain the House. You know that little story of the Sunday-school teacher with the little class of boys. She said, "Listen, little boys, while I read you from the Holy Bible," and she turned and read the proclamation of Goliath, who, full-armored, pranced out before the armies of the living God and made his "defi," "hooplah," day after day repeated. One bright-eyed little boy in the class said, "Skip that, madam; he is blowin'." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Goliath HEFLIN, we will skip it. You are "blowing." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

One word in conclusion, and then I will sit down. After all, a great contest is in front of us, all the people are cosovereigns. The campaign will soon commence. We shall have various candidates. The Republican Party has a candidate. The Democratic Party has a candidate. There are various other candidates. [Laughter.] When the silent ballots fall somebody will be chosen. Perchance, if in the chapter of happenings and by a vote of the majority your candidate Mr. Wilson is elected and becomes President of the United States, he will be your President, and my President, the President of the whole country, the coordinate branch of the Government, the titular leader of his party in all soberness; and you will be called on many a time to answer this question: If you succeed and elect your candidate for the Presidency, will his policy be shaped according to the first 42 years of his life, as evidenced by his writings, by his teachings? Or will it be shaped by what he has said in the last 12 months, directly to the contrary of his teachings? Who is to be deceived if he becomes President? And will it be by his givings out of the last 12 months, or by his words and writings and actions for the first 42 or 43 years of his life? [Applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 38. An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY].

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be an afternoon of reading, some of ancient history, some of modern. I wish to take a moment or two of the House to read something from the editorial page of to-day's New York Sun, which appears to be prophetic, in view of the speech that was delivered a few moments ago by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG].

This editorial is headed "A waste of wind." It is as follows:

A WASTE OF WIND.

The Hon. WILLIAM A. RODENBERG, Republican Representative in Congress of the twenty-second Illinois district, is reported to be laden with a most tremendous and horrendous speech, wherein he will trace every known spoken and written word of Woodrow Wilson since that statesman acquired language and the use of the pen. Every bit of his "record" is to leap to light; every book and magazine article of his has been searched with a gerfalcon eye; let him tremble and cower while the majestic and surcharged RODENBERG "exposes" his inconsistencies, "scores" him, "excoriates" him, "flays" him; shakes the Rodenbergian fist and the untanned Wilsonian hide before the haggard eyes of mankind.

In the name of the prophet, stuff!

It is with the Woodrow Wilson of to-day and not of any other time that the country has to deal. Everybody wants to know what he says, what he writes in his great representative capacity as the chosen chief and spokesman of the Democracy. Nobody cares a franked speech what he has said or written or is to be gulled by any malicious midgemadge of extracts and quotations.

Mr. RODENBERG is wasting his wind.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. All truth is wasted on that side of the House. The Members on that side are incorrigible. Any truth is wasted over there.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and had insisted upon its amendments still in disagreement, and had asked a further conference and had appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. [Applause.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely unnecessary for me to reply to the kind of a speech that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has seen fit to make, as far as the issues involved are concerned. I wanted to ask him a question or two, and, as the House well remembers, he refused to yield. One of the questions I desired to ask was, after he had devoted 24 minutes of his 30 minutes to personal abuse of myself, whether he would not condescend to discuss the issues that were involved in the debate between myself and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

When the gentleman from Washington reads what I said on the point that he discussed—and I shall not change it in a single particular—I do not believe that the gentleman himself in his own conscience, if he has one left, will conclude that he was justified in saying what he did. I stated that a written statement prepared by a man whose name I gave, as far as Washington was concerned, had been submitted to another man, whose name I also gave, and that I had submitted the statement to another man of national reputation, whose name I did not give; but I will say to the House that I expect to be able to give it within the next few days, and every man here will admit, when he hears it, that I told absolutely the truth about it, and never exaggerated it for a moment. The gentleman from Washington will have to admit it. I stated then that I did not expect that to add to the effect of the statement as evidence, but that it went a good way to convince me of the truth of the statement written by the man whose name I gave and in whom I had confidence.

I offered the evidence in the Washington case. I made it public and laid it bare, and the gentleman from Washington, after laboring half an hour here in personal abuse of myself, has failed to refer to a single particle of it. As far as he is concerned, this evidence pertaining to his own State stands here before the House and before the country absolutely uncontradicted. He can not gain anything by abusing the man who brought it out, and I am not going to take the time of this House or of anybody else to try to reply to a man who resorts to such disreputable, uncourteous, and disrespectful methods. He can not gain anything——

Mr. MANN. Unless the gentleman withdraws that language, I shall ask to have it taken down.

Mr. NORRIS. Let it be taken down.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the language taken down—characterizing language used by any gentleman on the floor of the House as disreputable.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to taking it down. I suppose it has already been taken down. The gentleman from Illinois has misquoted me. I have not used the language that the gentleman from Illinois has imputed to me.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did use the word "disreputable" in connection with the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not say that the gentleman from Washington was disreputable.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the language be read.

Mr. NORRIS. If I have said anything that is wrong, no man on earth will more quickly apologize for it than I will. I remember what I said, I think, and if my recollection is right, there is not anything in the language that is wrong or that is not justified under the circumstances.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I did not think that the gentleman would want the language to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that the time taken by the gentleman from Illinois should not be taken out of my time. He has raised a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska had already expired.

Mr. NORRIS. But the gentleman from Illinois has raised a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman had expired in any event.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of controversy may not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been taken out of the gentleman's time. The time had expired in any event. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have control of the time, and I will be very glad to yield to him.

Mr. NORRIS. I am about through.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman from Nebraska wish?

Mr. NORRIS. About two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I was about to conclude by saying that in the statement of the Washington case I showed what had been done in Washington by Coiner, the chairman of the State central committee. I showed how he had been rewarded, or, at least, since doing that and since the Chicago convention has received an appointment as United States district attorney. When they are out of evidence and have nothing left but personal abuse of the man who brings the evidence out, and does it reluctantly, as I said yesterday, then they select the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] to make a speech abusing me for 26 minutes, without referring to the evidence at all; and I presume, like the other man from Washington, Coiner, he will receive his reward the same as the other fellow did. I would not be surprised if before long we will find that the man in the White House has rewarded the man here who had devoted his time to the personal abuse of the man who developed the facts and brought them out before the House and the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, at some future time I may desire to spend a little more time in reply to some of the observations of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. RODENBERG. Just now I wish just briefly to make a few comments. The gentleman attempts to appeal to every class of prejudice that might possibly exist in the bosom of any living human being in the United States. He sings the praises of Thomas Jefferson. A eulogy upon Jefferson by the gentleman from Illinois, who has spent his whole lifetime in fighting every vital principle advocated by Jefferson, seems to me to be superb humbug. He criticizes Mr. Wilson because Mr. Wilson in his writing has said that Jefferson was an aristocrat. Mr. Wilson did say that, and it is not the first time I have heard it said. It has been my understanding all of my life that Thomas Jefferson was personally an aristocrat; that he was proud, even haughty; that he himself was responsible for a change in the order of the sitting of the Cabinet in this country, around the council board of the head of the Nation, because he did not propose to take a lower seat than Mr. Hamilton, and therefore the Secretary of State in this country is seated at the Cabinet meetings on the right hand of the President, whereas in England the chancellor of the exchequer, corresponding to our Secretary of the Treasury, has that high position in the cabinet. Mr. Jefferson was an aristocrat and Washington was an aristocrat; so was Lafayette, one of the noblest defenders that came from foreign climes to help us wrest our independence from the old mother, Great Britain. Aristocrat many times have devoted their lives to the service of the whole human race, and the history of the labor legislation in Great Britain is the story of the joint labor of a nobleman and a son of labor. Lord Ashley, I believe it was, on the one hand and John Burns on the other labored hand in hand to redeem the toiling masses of England and to give place on the statute books of England to the most progressive labor legislation that the world up to now has ever seen.

It is not a remarkable thing that the gentleman should now undertake to criticize Mr. Wilson by reading extracts from his book. This thing of reading extracts is a wonderful way of misrepresenting the character of individuals and also their views. I have heard Thomas Jefferson quoted as being in favor of ship subsidies and discriminating tonnage dues, and yet, when you read the passages which are quoted and the context unquoted, it simply shows that Mr. Jefferson said in his writings that as long as England adopted measures oppressing our merchant marine we, in retaliation, should adopt discriminating duties, and that he was in favor of free seas, but it also shows that if he could he would remove all restrictions. Such illustrations of the garbled and isloated extracts from writings will be found in many, many political speeches, and only the full context can sometimes bring a right conception of the views of the writer, whose disconnected expressions are used to distort his views. As to Mr. Wilson's views and relations to labor, while the gentleman comments on the fact that Mr. Wilson has been charging that Mr. Gompers and his companions are seeking to tear down industry in this country and to destroy the industrial supremacy of the country, it is a strange thing that Samuel Gompers himself is for Woodrow Wilson for President. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Samuel Gompers has watched the works of the man and is with him. Mr. RODENBERG can eulogize Thomas Jefferson, yet all of his life he votes the other way, and he criticizes Woodrow Wilson, who all of his life has voted to support and maintain the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois sings the praises of CHAMP CLARK to-day, and yet his party associates, if not himself, were busy collecting little extracts from the sayings of CHAMP CLARK in order that had he been nominated at Baltimore he also might be torn to shreds by spreading before the country just pieces of what he had said. I wonder if the praise of Mr. CLARK by Republicans to-day is not just with the faint hope of hurting Wilson rather than helping CLARK. I simply wish to say that in this coming race we will meet the gentlemen with their criticisms fair or unfair. Not only will we show that Samuel Gompers is for him, but that in the State of New Jersey, where for over one year he has administered the affairs of that Commonwealth, all the labor unions are unanimously for him, as they are all over the country where they know his work; and when this campaign is over by his fruits he shall be known, and the fruits of labor of Mr. Wilson as a public man the people of this country will approve, and they will elect him President of these United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the House to print in the RECORD an address delivered by the Hon. P. C. Wadsworth, of Georgia, delivered in Washington, D. C., July 19, 1912, at a meeting of Representatives in Congress from the cotton-growing States, upon the subject of the economical marketing of farm products.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the address referred to be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[For address, see elsewhere in to-day's RECORD.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, as an evidence of the very great amount of harmony that is existing in the Republican Party in Illinois, I desire to read a letter confirming that great degree of confidence which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG] expressed in his party's success this fall:

TAFT'S MANAGERS CUT BY THEIR OWN KNIVES.

NEW YORK, July 15.

Oscar King Davis, at national headquarters of the new Progressive Party, has made public the following letter:

WESTFIELD, ILL., July 1, 1912.

DEAR SIRS: We have just received, via express prepaid, from you 1 dozen knives etched Taft and Sherman. We are at a loss to know just what to do with them. There is only one Taft man here, the postmaster, and he already has a jackknife. The majority of our people think Roosevelt is the nominee, and it would be justifiable homicide, or at least assault and battery against us, if we should offer the knives you sent us. Honestly, there are not three men in this town who are openly for Taft. Maybe we can sell them to the blind or those who can't read. We are receiving them under protest.

Respectfully,

SHUEY & RIDER.

"We want Teddy."

Now, Mr. Chairman, the above portrays the true situation of the harmonious conditions existing in the great State of Illinois in the Republican Party. What is true in that State is true in every other State, such a demoralized condition of affairs exists throughout the Union in the ranks of that party. Under such a condition, how can it hope to win? How can it expect victory? Defeat stares it in the face everywhere, and all the attacks it makes on Woodrow Wilson fall ineffectual upon the public's ear. Assault him or the Baltimore platform as they will or may, but nothing they can say or do will impede the march to victory of the Democratic Party and its standard bearers in this campaign.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

International Seismological Association: For defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association, for the fiscal year 1912, $800.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this item, and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill about these various items in this bill relating to international conferences. Last year on the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill by the House these same items were in that bill, as reported to the House, if my memory serves me correctly. I think they went out on points of order made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON]. I know that they were not available for the last fiscal year. Now, do I understand it to be the policy of the Committee on Appropriations that in the consideration of one of the other appropriation bills coming from the committee which has jurisdiction of that appropriation bill, where items are not inserted in the appropriation law, thereupon the Committee on Appropriations includes those items in the deficiency appropriation bill? When things are deliberately stricken out, when appropriation bills come from another committee and items do not go into the law, does the Committee on Appropriations sit as a board of review and provide in the deficiency bills items which were estimated for but refused in the regular appropriation bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there are three or four of these items. I regret——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice I did not touch the first item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I regret the gentleman from Illinois has reserved the point of order——

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman I will withdraw the point of order and I will ask the gentleman to explain the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was about to say I regret the gentleman reserved the point of order on this particular item and did not reserve it on the first item.

Mr. MANN. I think the first item ought to be allowed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The International Prison Commission, in which the gentleman himself is so vitally interested, is an item as to which he might have directed these remarks in apparent criticism of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In that event, if the House had felt that his criticism had been justified, he could have eliminated, on the point of order or by motion, not only the appropriation for the commission, just read, but the commission or congress, in which the gentleman is so much interested, and of which one of his most distinguished constituents is the representative of this Government. The committee's action was based upon these facts——

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman proceeds, I did not make the point of order or reserve the point of order on the first item, because I was afraid somebody would make the point of order if I reserved it, and I did not want the item to go out on a point of order. I tried to put it on the diplomatic bill, and I did not succeed. I am in favor of that item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman tried to put it on the deficiency bill the last session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I tried to put it on every bill I could.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And as a reward of the gentleman's persistency, in part, the committee considered the very persuasive argument made by him and decided to put it on this bill. The facts about these various commissions and associations are these. For a number of years under arrangements made by the Department of State, the United States has been a participant in the International Prison Commission, the International Railway Congress, the International Seismological Association. The cost in one instance is $2,000, $400 a year, and $800 a year. For the last fiscal year, when the items were carried in the diplomatic bill the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] interposed points of order, and they were all stricken from the bill.

The items for the present fiscal year are carried in the diplomatic bill, which has already received the approval of the President. That leaves us in the anomalous position of having continued our connection with these associations or congresses for a number of years and of having refrained from paying our small subscription for one year. The committee thought that sooner than have the United States be put in the attitude for being indebted for $400 in one instance and $800 in another and $2,000 for the expenses for the distinguished gentleman residing in the district of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the Democratic Congress would remedy the dereliction of the Republican Congress and recommend to the House that these slight appropriations be made in order to discharge these obligations which a nation should discharge. We regret that a Republican Congress was unable to find itself able, because of its desire to reduce the appropriations, to appropriate this $3,200; but rather than have the United States placed in that unfortunate position that the Nation could not afford to pay this $3,200 for these various subscriptions, the committee recommended the appropriations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Touching the matter of the influence of committees, do these items have any stronger legal status in the appropriation bill than they would have had had they remained in the diplomatic and consular bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a few more minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These are conferences or arrangements into which the United States has entered through the Department of State. There is no authority for the department to do so. They have been doing it for a number of years, and Congress has acquiesced by making appropriations, but for one year no appropriation was made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My recollection is that is the reason given by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON], when he made the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Department of State had no authority to enter into these arrangements. It only could be done with the approval of Congress or the President and the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman is on his feet I wish to ask him a question with reference to another matter. I do not notice any items in this bill for the payment of election-contest expenses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. None were certified to the committee.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentlemen who were interested that they had best get busy and have them certified.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee has no knowledge that there were any contests.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The practice of the committee has always been to insert in this bill the expenses of the contestants within the amount limited by law upon the certification of the chairman of the Committee on Elections. It has accepted his certificate. Either there have been no contests or those involved in them are reluctant to ask Congress to reimburse them.

Mr. MANN. I will say that the gentlemen who are interested had better get busy before this bill passes. Those items ought not to be inserted in the Senate, although they possibly could be. I know half a dozen or more gentlemen have spoken to me on both sides of the aisle, asking what the procedure was, and they have been told by me and others how to go at it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No gentleman has made any request, or I would have informed him of the practice to be followed—and I have enough gentlemen seeking my assistance to obtain appropriations without hunting them up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance after the payment of outstanding liabilities of the appropriation of $170,000 for special repairs to the Subtreasury Building, New York, N. Y., contained in the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, is reappropriated and made available toward construction of vaults and work incidental to their installation in the assay office in the city of New York, N. Y.; and said vaults and work incidental to their installation are authorized, at a total cost not exceeding $322,000, including the sum herein reappropriated therefor, and a contract or contracts are authorized to be entered into within such limit of cost.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire also to reserve a point of order.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be heard on the point of order. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to inquire of the chairman if this language—

And said vaults and work incidental to their installation are authorized, at a total cost not exceeding $322,000, including the sum herein reappropriated therefor, and a contract or contracts are authorized to be entered into within such limit of cost—is authorized?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The vaults will cost $322,000, and making $170,000 available at this time and giving authority to make a contract for the construction of them is all that is necessary now. The situation is that we have over one thousand million dollars in gold stored at present. We are accumulating gold at the rate of $100,000,000 a year. Within five years all the possible available storage places in the United States will be filled. They have just completed in New York City a refinery for assaying gold, back of the old assay office, on Wall Street. The condition of the vault there is such that it is imperative that a new one be constructed. A vault one story high would cost $168,000. By going any farther down it is necessary to go down sufficiently far to get a rock foundation, and to do that would require but very little more to complete a five-story vault. Four stories of it will be below the water line in the city of New York, which makes a very effectual protection. These vaults when completed will hold over two thousand millions of gold and will furnish all of the storage space for gold for an indefinite period. If the work is to be done, it must be done at this time in connection with the work that is going on at present. In the last Congress $170,000 was appropriated to rearrange and refit the Subtreasury in New York, which is adjacent to the assay office. Upon investigation the Treasury Department states that the advantages to be gained from the expenditure of this money will be so insignificant that it would not be an advisable expenditure, but the necessity for the vaults is very great and very pressing. They ask that that money be made available for the vaults. They presented plans and information which led the committee to believe that if the vaults are to be built at all the most economical and most advisable plan to adopt is the one which gives the five-story vault for the $322,000.

Mr. FOSTER. This $170,000 was not sufficient to build these vaults?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not appropriated for that purpose. It was not available. It was for improvements to the subtreasury. A one-story vault could be built for $168,000, but the very greatly increased storage space that could be obtained by less than double that sum, together with the very greatly increased protection that would come from the sinking of these vaults below the water line induced the committee to adopt this plan.

Mr. FOSTER. In view of the statement of the gentleman from New York I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I renew the point of order and reserve it. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a question. It may be the information has been given, for so long as the gentleman, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, insists on remaining in the middle of one side of the House it is impossible on the other side of the House to hear what he says. Is not this item an item over which the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has jurisdiction?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not. It belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Why?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is an item intimately connected with the security of funds under control of the Treasury Department, and such items have always been carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MANN. If a bill were introduced for this purpose, it would go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no information about that.

Mr. MANN. Nobody in the House has more information than has the gentleman as to how bills should be referred.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no information about the matter except that which was submitted by the Treasury Department, and the committee believed it was a desirable thing to do.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, these vaults if completed under the plan proposed will be capable of storing $2,000,000,000 of gold?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two thousand millions.

Mr. MANN. That is two billions. I understand that is a part of the program of the Committee on Appropriations, to store the gold in the assay office in New York and to abolish the assay offices in other parts of the country—a proposition which came into the House on the sundry civil bill in naked form and was temporarily defeated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am glad to have the gentleman's assurance that this has nothing to do with that, but I think it is a part of that plan to do away with the assay offices on the Pacific coast and at Denver and St. Louis and in North Carolina and at various other places and concentrate them all in New York City, where there is ample room to store all the gold in the new vaults that we have just provided for. However, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, by inserting at the end of line 22 the following: "For rent and expenses incident thereto of the building leased for use as a customhouse in the port of Boston for the year ending June 30, 1913, $96,000."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, in the act approved March 4, 1909, an appropriation was made for the remodeling of the Boston customhouse, including the expenses of carrying on that service while the remodeling was under way. There was a proviso in that act as follows:

That the total cost of said enlargement, remodeling, or extension of said customhouse building shall not exceed $1,800,000, including expenses incident to the temporary removal of the force employed in the customhouse during the enlargement, remodeling, or extension.

Last month an act was passed practically increasing the appropriation for this purpose. The amount of money that was to be expended for rent and other things incident thereto aggregated $285,000. It was virtually the striking out of this part of the act which I have just read, that no part of the amount, $1,800,000, should be used for the expenses incident to the temporary removal of the force employed in the customhouse during the remodeling of the building.

Now, there is enough money available to continue the construction of this building until the 4th of next March, so that it is not necessary in this bill to appropriate any more money for that purpose. But there is no authorization for paying rent in the quarters that are now being occupied by the customhouse, and I am informed by the Treasury officials, and particularly by the Comptroller of the Treasury Department, that there is great doubt whether they have any right to expend any money which would otherwise have been available if this act which I have just read had not been passed—to expend any money for rent or other matters that would be incidental to the rental of these quarters. This amount of money will have to be appropriated, either now or later, for this rental, and it seems to me that it is wise and proper that the item should go in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this item is not in this bill because it is not necessary. We appropriated for the matters of construction and rent in the sundry civil bill to the amount of $500,000. I am not certain of the exact sum, but it is all that can be used. The law that was enacted does not in any way change the availability of that appropriation. The purpose of it was to increase the limit of the amount that might be expended on the building proper. There is no necessity of putting this item of $96,000 on this bill. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a word more; I would like to say that the Comptroller of the Treasury Department is in disagreement with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on that point. He is in doubt, and he would so say to anybody who would communicate with him—that there is strong doubt as to that authorization.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may say to the gentleman that the comptroller and myself frequently disagree, and the inclusion of this item in the bill would result in the comptroller resolving the doubt in his own way.

Mr. WEEKS. I would like to find out how many gentlemen agree with the comptroller against the opinion of the chairman of the committee, and therefore I ask for a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no disposition to withhold the money authorized by law for the customhouse. The committee gave all that could be expended, not only for the building but also for rent. It is absolutely futile and unnecessary to add $96,000 to this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is it not going to be necessary to appropriate at some time this $96,000 for this year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On that theory we might as well appropriate at this time, instead of $500,000 to complete that building, the entire balance under the limit authorized by law. The gentleman might as well say it is necessary to appropriate now for the gentleman's salary for the next 10 years. I hope the gentleman will continue his service here for that long, but that is no reason why it should be done this year.

Mr. WEEKS. But, Mr. Chairman, if this money is to be appropriated some time, it should have been appropriated in the sundry civil bill for the year ending June 30, 1913, and inasmuch as it was not appropriated in that bill, it seems to me it should be carried now in this bill. Otherwise we are going on and spending money for rental during the year when there is no actual authorization.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is an appropriation for it carried in the sundry civil bill, that covers this item for rental.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in what bill it is planned to make the authorization? I understand from the position of the chairman that it is not necessary to appropriate this $96,000 now, because it will be taken care of at some other time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because it was included in the $500,000 carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MURRAY. That is a matter of dispute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not understand that it is a matter of dispute.

Mr. MURRAY. Of course it is a matter of dispute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not call these matters of dispute.

Mr. MURRAY. As I understand, there is a lump sum of $500,000 appropriated in the sundry civil bill, and this $96,000 may or may not be included in the $500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no question of may or may not. It is included.

Mr. MURRAY. There is no question in the mind of the gentleman, but in the minds of some other gentlemen there is a question. Is that not so?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I never heard of it until a few days ago.

Mr. MURRAY. Has the comptroller, for instance, expressed an opinion on it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I never heard from the comptroller about it. The committee gave all the money asked toward the construction and rent of the Boston customhouse in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MURRAY. Has the gentleman ever heard until to-day that the comptroller takes a different attitude?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I never heard that the comptroller did so. If the appropriation were needed, I would not object to it. In my opinion, it is not necessary and should not be made.

Mr. MURRAY. And the House may have the assurance of the gentleman that it has already been appropriated in the sundry civil bill for these purposes? Is that the fact?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The sundry civil bill carries, if I recall correctly, $500,000 toward the construction of the Boston customhouse, and out of that $500,000 it was contemplated and expected and intended to pay the proportion of the $96,000 rent that would be required until the next sundry civil bill becomes a law in March next.

Mr. WEEKS. Will my colleague yield while I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. I find in the sundry civil bill this item:

Boston (Mass.) customhouse: For continuation of the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the building under present limit, $250,000.

It says nothing about rent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not necessary to say anything about rent. That was covered by the original act.

Mr. WEEKS. Will not the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] agree that this $96,000 must be appropriated some time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not. I insist that it has been appropriated and that it is included in the item in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MURRAY. Is that the item which the gentleman from Massachusetts has just read?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; that is the item. There was a similar item, out of which they paid the rent last year, and this is the item out of which they will pay the rent this year.

Mr. MURRAY. The item is $250,000 instead of $500,000. I wonder if it is the same item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was under the impression that it was $500,000. It is the same item, however.

Mr. MURRAY. I see that says nothing about rent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And it says nothing about architects' fees, either.

Mr. MANN. The original act provided that the limit of cost should be so much, and out of that should be paid the cost of moving the customhouse. That was considered to include rent. I heard a gentleman the other day wax eloquent upon that. We passed a bill here the other day providing for the reimbursement to this fund of any money that was paid as rent, but these items, so far, have all been like that in the appropriation bill and rent has been paid out of them. It seems to me it is not a question whether $96,000 rent can be paid out of the $250,000 as a matter of law, but whether the $250,000 toward the continuation of the improvement over there is sufficient for the next year with the $96,000 taken out. Whether it was contemplated by the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman might just as well have added to his amendment an item proposing to reimburse the appropriation heretofore made by $280,000, as requested by the department.

Mr. WEEKS. The reason I did not add that to my amendment was because I was informed by the department that they had sufficient money for construction purposes until the 31st of next March, and therefore it would not be necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They assured us that the money we appropriated would be sufficient for construction purposes until the 4th of next March, as well as to pay the rent. Perhaps we have given them more than we should have in the item, if the gentleman's statement be correct, but the fact is that the only thing done by the act passed by Congress was to make it possible to spend for construction $300,000 more than originally had been intended. There is no necessity to appropriate the additional $96,000 at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The accounting officers of the Treasury Department are authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of W. S. Richards, disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, $93.50, and S. R. Jacobs, disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, $101.16, being amounts disallowed by the said accounting officers for sums paid by the said disbursing clerks prior to April 18, 1911, for wrapping and addressing Public Health Reports and other circulars and publications of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to inquire whether, after the comptroller held that the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service could not pay for the work of mailing Public Health Reports out of the general appropriation, that was corrected in making the general appropriation for this year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was not. These persons were employed in violation of the act of 1882 prohibiting the payment for personal services at the seat of government out of certain appropriations unless specifically authorized. These men had done the work and the committee thought they should be paid.

Mr. MANN. It was not because the original appropriation did not authorize the work to be done, then, but only because of the method of their employment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is very doubtful whether they had any authority to incur the obligation for this service at all.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, they had authority to wrap, address, and mail Public Health Reports, but they could not pay for personal services out of that appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CUSTOMS SERVICE.

To defray the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, being additional to the permanent appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, $350,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York inform the House if any of this money is for the purpose of investigation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is to meet the pay roll for the latter half of the month of June. It has been customary for Congress in the past to appropriate a sum of money somewhat insufficient to meet the expense of the customs service. Early in the month of June the Treasury Department called attention to that fact and stated that unless the money was to be appropriated it would be necessary to furlough a very large number of employees.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has nothing to do with investigations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee took up the matter with the department, and upon investigation informed the department it would recommend an appropriation of $350,000 to cover the deficiency that would be created. Upon that assurance the department continued these employees, and the amount actually required is within a few hundred dollars of the $350,000, and that is merely to meet the deficiency for the last fiscal year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are regular employees?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not engaged in any special or secret-service work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The matter to which the gentleman refers, some special investigation, I think, was predicted within a few days by the press.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And would not come from this appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This item has nothing to do with that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motor tags: For additional amount required for the purchase of enamel, metal, or leather identification-number tags for motor vehicles in the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1912, $200.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Inasmuch as these tags when purchased are paid for on the half-and-half system and are sold by the District of Columbia at $2 each, and then afterwards the United States has to put $2 each against that to offset it as a source of revenue for the District of Columbia, does the gentleman not think the District of Columbia should pay for the whole of it? There is a provision later along in the bill providing this and all other items relating to the District of Columbia shall be paid for one-half by the District of Columbia and one-half by the United States. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, that the District of Columbia shall pay this entire sum out of this revenue.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is to supply deficiencies in these items. This is a small sum. I believe on the District bill which has been enacted into law there is a provision which covers this matter. It covers in the future just what the gentleman wishes to do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky will permit, I raised this question a number of years ago, and it was covered as to certain things; and in the last District appropriation bill, which just became a law, there was inserted in the Senate and, I think, agreed to in such form that it would cover this and all similar cases a provision that the money received from the sale of these should be covered into the Treasury on the half-and-half principle. So that the appropriation is payable on the half-and-half principle, one-half from the Government Treasury and one-half from the District treasury, and as the money that comes in equals what is paid out the money that comes in goes into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the General Treasury and one-half to the credit of the District treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I am thoroughly familiar with that, and there are several items preceding this and some which follow that are small and trifling. Yet it is the principle of the thing. There is a provision following providing that the United States Government shall pay half of this and the District of Columbia shall pay half. When the United States Government pays half of this $200 it thereby paves the way to let that $200 and all that the tags are sold for find its way into the treasury of the District of Columbia as a source of revenue, and then next year the United States Government will have to put up an amount to equal this.

Mr. MANN. If the United States Treasury pays one-half of the $200 and then the tags are sold for $200——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They are sold for a good deal more than that. They may be sold for several thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. Half of that goes into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not of this item.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; of the next item.

Mr. MANN. Oh, all of these items.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not of this.

Mr. MANN. I want to say that my understanding is to the contrary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My understanding of it is—and I think I am right—that the tags purchased with the amount in the appropriation bill which has recently passed comes under the description referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, but not under this.

Mr. MANN. There was general language inserted by the Senate and agreed to in conference which was intended to cover all of these items wherein the Government contributed half, that the receipts should go one-half to the Government. Whether that language is sufficient I do not undertake to say. I think it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My recollection is that it is not sufficient, but it is a trifling thing here—only $200—and, as it is, and as I have overlooked several other small items, I will ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw the amendment which I offered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is to pay an outstanding obligation. The tags have been bought. It is possible they have all been sold and the proceeds turned into the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Turned into the District treasury; and that is the objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horse-drawn vehicle tags.—For additional amount required for the purchase of metal identification-number tags for horse-drawn vehicles used for business purposes in the District of Columbia—
For the fiscal year 1912, $550.
For the fiscal year 1911, $500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order for the purpose of at least asking the chairman of the committee what disposition will be made of the sale of those tags?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is it not true they have already been covered into the District treasury?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no information on that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think I can safely say that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I believe, the District having sold these tags and having gotten the money and put it into their own treasury, and the Government having to pay dollar for dollar, unless an amendment be agreed to letting the District pay this, I shall make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am ready to discuss the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman before he discusses the point of order that in the report made here they admit the point of order and state in the report that it is "submitted matter."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nobody can concede a point of order who does not belong to this House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman can find no authority; if he has it, he must do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I understand correctly, the law authorizes the commissioners to require identification tags. There is a regulation which requires all horse-drawn vehicles to be provided with these tags. Under authority given the commissioners they make these regulations and they furnish these tags at a fixed price.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no act of Congress authorizing it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, the act of Congress specifically specifies that there shall be these vehicle tags and that they shall be furnished by the District of Columbia upon application, and so much shall be paid for them. We had that act up the other day for amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the statute authorizes the commissioners to make regulations, compels them to furnish the tags, and it is an instance in which, the law requiring them to do the act, there is authorization to incur a deficiency. Now, the appropriation last year was $500. The receipts up to the time the estimates were submitted were $3,658.

The proceeds from this tax went into the District treasury, and the purpose now would be a change of that law. The only question, I understand here, is as to the authority of the commissioners to purchase these tags. If there is any question about it I will be glad to have the matter passed until later we can find the statute which authorizes them to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order that the purchase has not been authorized, and I will say in the report submitted by the commissioners themselves, which is Document No. 634, they say that in the fiscal year 1912, "submitted," $550; for the fiscal year 1911, they quote the act of March 4, 1911, volume 36, page 1296, section 1, $500, but that is only an appropriation without formal authorization and they claim no authorization for the $550. I have the report in my hand, document No. 634.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman simply refers to a document in which the estimate is simply submitted, and there is no information there. I would like the matter be passed temporarily until we can find the statute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I might be out for a moment and the gentleman will permit me to be present when it comes up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman only steps out temporarily, but we want to get along with this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the matter may be passed temporarily.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I insist that under the law the authority exists.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I insist, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman must produce his authority; that is the rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Chair may have that information without the gentleman producing it, but certainly I do not think that the gentleman would object to passing the matter temporarily. If the Chair is not satisfied that the statute exists I will ask the Chair himself to reserve his decision temporarily, as he has the power to do, and let us pass on until an opportunity is given for the Chair to be satisfied as to what the law is.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by providing that the two amounts shall be paid entirely out of the District revenues.

The CHAIRMAN. Where would the gentleman from Kentucky have his amendment inserted, at the end of the section?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 4, page 8, insert "Provided, That half of this amount indicated in these figures be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman will not seriously contend——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I make the point of order. Under the law one half of the expenses of the District of Columbia is payable from the District treasury and one half from the Federal Treasury. My recollection is that there are several rulings made, particularly upon the item for playgrounds, in which it was held that an attempt to make the entire cost of the playgrounds payable out of the District revenues was subject to the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, nobody who pretends to be familiar with the act of June 11, 1878, will contend that the United States Government has ever agreed to pay half the expenses of the District of Columbia. The furthest that act goes is, and nobody familiar with it will claim that it goes beyond, paying one-half of such expenses of the District of Columbia as Congress may agree to pay. Congress has not agreed to pay this, and Congress will not have agreed to pay it until at this session it adopts the motion agreeing to pay this. I contend that Congress has never agreed to pay this——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask to have the amendment again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, after line 4, insert the following: "That half of this amount indicated in this paragraph be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I did not say half; I said the total amount of the two sums be paid out of the District revenues. There is a provision a little later along that says of all these items one-half shall be paid by the District of Columbia and one-half by the Federal Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, after line 4, insert "that the total of the two amounts indicated in this paragraph be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist that it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is subject to a point of order. The provision for it to be paid out of the Federal Treasury makes it subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. Let us vote on the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 18.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Industrial Home School for Colored Children: For maintenance, including purchase and care of horses, wagons, and harness.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article on agricultural credit banks, appearing in the June issue of the Journal of the Institute of Bankers, of London. It is not very long, about 25 pages, and it is a very valuable contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD as a part of his remarks a certain publication which he has named.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman prefer to have it printed in the RECORD or as a House document?

Mr. HOBSON. To have it printed as a House document will be satisfactory.

Mr. SHERLEY. You can do that when you get in the House.

Mr. HOBSON. All right. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Special assessment refunds: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to pay to Carrie Madison the sum of $146.47, amount paid by her on account of redemption of erroneous sale of special assessment taxes chargeable to property owned by her.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the item. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not true that Carrie Madison has paid to the District of Columbia $146.47 as taxes erroneously collected, and that now the District of Columbia proposes by this bill to return her money to her, and under the provisions of this bill, in returning her money which the District of Columbia got, the United States Government is asked to pay one-half of it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. I think this is assessment work.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It says:

Erroneous sale of special assessment taxes chargeable to property owned by her——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Tweedale, the auditor of the District, makes the following statement:

In this case Congress provided the special assessment should go back, half to the United States and half to the District of Columbia. Previous to that they have been going back to the appropriation. When they went back to the appropriation, if a person made an erroneous payment, we could pay them out of the appropriation. Now the money is put back half in the United States funds and half in the District funds, and there is no way we can refund erroneous payments.

This money having been placed half to the credit of the United States and half to the credit of the District of Columbia, when it is to be repaid——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I beg your pardon; it was paid entirely by the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman may be better informed than the auditor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think the auditor says that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am reading from the statement of the auditor that this money went half to the United States and half to the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Read it and see if you are not mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It says:

In the case just preceding and in this case Congress provided the special assessment should go back, half to the United States and half to the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, read on.

Mr. FITZGERALD (reading)—

Previous to that they have been going back to the appropriation, and if a person made an erroneous payment we could pay them out of the appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They paid them out of the appropriation, and the appropriation was upon the half-and-half plan.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that is the general appropriation, and this money has been erroneously paid.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Into the District treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assert again that the auditor states it has been paid half to the District treasury and half to the Treasury of the United States, and this proposes to repay it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will permit, a few years ago, upon the consideration of the District appropriation bill, I called the attention of the House to the fact that at that time we were appropriating half out of the general revenues for the maintenance of the office which did this work, and issued permits, and collected special assessments; that all the revenues that came in went entirely into the District treasury. The gentleman in charge of the bill at that time, or subsequently, provided by amendment or by a new bill—it was in different cases—that this money should go half into the Federal Treasury and half into the District of Columbia treasury. I presume by the auditor's statement that this case was covered by that. I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Can the gentleman from Illinois say with any degree of accuracy what is to become of the deficit of $73,000 in that same fund, which was stolen a few years ago?

Mr. MANN. I can not say with any degree of accuracy with reference to that or this item further than I have said. But I will say further, I find upon examination of the recent District bill, which contains section 10, providing for the covering in on the half-and-half principle of receipts, it would not cover this case apparently and would not cover the motor tags or vehicle tags.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This particular matter was taken care of last year.

Mr. MANN. Several years ago, I think. The new provision covers the annual wheel tax on automobiles and other motor vehicles, but I do not think covers the tag proposition which I stated a while ago I thought it did cover.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will withdraw the point, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Judgments: For payment of the judgments, including costs, against the District of Columbia, set forth in House Documents Nos. 402, 634, 648, and 777 of this session, $8,944.04, together with a further sum sufficient to pay the interest, at not exceeding 4 per cent, on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman to explain the nature of these judgments. There is nothing here to show their nature. I have not seen the hearings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I did not look particularly to see what the judgments were for. They were final judgments of the court to which no appeal had been taken and from which none could be taken. It is customary for Congress to pay judgments of the courts after the time for appeal has expired.

To be frank with the gentleman, I did not bother to burden myself with the information regarding the nature of the litigation. I ascertained if the judgments were final and whether the time for appeal had expired; and that being shown and the claims being a valid obligation against the Government, I thought they should be paid.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, the gentleman knows nothing about it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nothing more than that. They are all small claims, I will state, except one for $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous expenses, supreme court: For payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and its officers, including the furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, including also such expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the Court of Appeals, District of Columbia, $13,000.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill if there is in this paragraph or any other paragraph of the bill included any payment or any appropriation for the payment of services of the three prosecutors appointed by the court for the prosecution of the case of Gompers, Mitchell, and Morrison in contempt proceedings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This appropriation of $13,000 is to meet certain expenditures, mostly all ascertainble—and $12,000 of the amount is ascertained—in connection with the proceedings to acquire the property to be added to the Capitol Grounds. The attorney in charge of the proceedings appeared before the committee and made a statement as to the sum due. He said it was in the neighborhood of $12,000, and he thought there would probably be an additional thousand dollars or so required to take care of small items. He stated that he had no definite information about them.

No request was made of the committee to pay for the services of the character mentioned by the gentleman, either on the part of the justice or anybody else.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. No such money is carried on this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No money is carried in this bill for that purpose, according to the understanding or intention of the committee. Whether any of these appropriations is available for the purpose I do not know. The attorneys in those proceedings were appointed by the court and acted as amici curiæ—friends of the court—and I know of no authorization of law to pay for services of that character unless they are specifically authorized. I am not certain about it, but I know of none. No request was made, and no appropriation was made here with the intention of its being utilized for the purpose named by the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reimbursement of State of Texas: To reimburse the State of Texas the amount expended for the increased force of rangers required for policing and patrolling the international boundary along the Rio Grande during the months of October, November, and December of the year 1911, and during the month of January of the year 1912, $9,639.41.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask if there is any authority of law for this item? That is, the Texas item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; there is no authority for it.

Mr. MANN. Was there any agreement that the Government should pay it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The President, I understand, made an arrangement with the governor of Texas, and sent a message to Congress in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. This is to carry out that agreement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; this is to carry out the arrangement.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw my reservation of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay claims adjusted and settled under section 4 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and certified to Congress in House Documents Nos. 313, 664, 713, and 823, at the present session, and 1386, Sixty-first Congress, third session, $1,509.05.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose this item refers to the payment of damages caused by collisions with Government vessels in river and harbor work. There is nothing in the item itself, without reference to the document to which it refers and the text of the law, to indicate what it is, but I think that is what it is. As I am the father of that scheme, I have some interest in it. Why is it not perfectly practicable to put the items in the appropriation bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have put in this bill only the claims certified in accordance with the law.

Mr. MANN. I am not questioning that, but why is it not practicable to put in briefly the items, so that we will know what they are?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be pretty voluminous to do that in all these matters, and this is the customary way.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there has been no customary way. This is a new scheme.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. There are other certified claims besides these, and they are done in the same way, because in many instances they include a large number of very trifling claims. But the committee in preparing this bill included only those which were certified under the law. Where they were in excess of the amount limited to the department, the committee declined to insert them.

Mr. MANN. The reason why I asked the question is that I first presented this proposition to the House in connection with the Lighthouse Board, and it went through, and the War Department copied it, and the river and harbor branch of the service and the Navy Department copied it, providing for the adjustment and settlement of claims not exceeding $500 in any case, and I think I stated, when the first proposition came before the House as the result of that, that these claims would be certified to the Committee on Appropriations, and the items would thus come before the House, so that anybody who wished to know about them would know what they were; but I see I was mistaken.

The reason given by the gentleman is sufficient for me if there are a great many of these claims and they are individually very small.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am informed by the clerk of the committee that the claims included in this particular document alone would probably take several pages of the bill. They are all small claims.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsyvania. Have these claims been adjudicated by the Court of Claims?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. Under the law certain claims for damages arising from collisions are investigated by certain departments, and if they do not exceed $500 do not require to be adjudicated by the Court of Claims. If the department determines that the United States was at fault, the amount of the damages not to exceed $500 is certified, and we make the appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Being interested in a matter of this kind, I want to learn the method of procedure. The total amount appropriated here is slightly in excess of $1,500, but the persons to whom payment is to be made are not specified. There may be one or a number.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These claims are included in five different documents, and they are of this character:

J. Randazzo, for $25, as reimbursement of cost of repairing damages to lugger Australia caused by collision with a United States Government barge on the night of December 15, 1910.

The Rathbun Co., for $283.36, as reimbursement of cost of repairing damages to its wharf in Oswego (N. Y.) Harbor, caused by collision with the U. S. tug W. H. Lee, formerly the Wm. C. Chapman, on November 4, 1910.

F. H. & A. H. Chappell Co., for $140.29, as reimbursement of cost of repairing damages to its dock, New London, Conn., caused by collision with the U. S. lighter Panuco on March 29, 1911.

Frygoe Jolstad, for $18.75, as reimbursement of cost of repairing damages to his motor launch Lyn by U. S. snagboat Missouri at St. Charles, Mo., on July 5, 1911.

Krause & Banks, for $25, as reimbursement of cost of repairing damages to their shipways at North Bend, Oreg., caused by collision with the U. S. dredge Oregon on June 6, 1911.

Columbia River Packers' Association, for $100, as reimbursement of cost of repairing damages to its ship Jabez Howes and wharf at Astoria, Oreg., caused by collision with the U. S. dredge Chinook on February 4, 1911.

Johnson & Hamilton, for $233.17, as reimbursement of cost of repairing damages to their launch Taurus, caused by collision with the U. S. dredge Delatour at Morgan City, La., on April 5, 1911.

W. G. Downie, for $7.15, as reimbursement of cost of repairing his warehouse at Pomeroy, Ohio, damaged by collision with U. S. snagboat E. A. Woodruff on September 19, 1911.

This is one of five documents. The amount in each case is trivial.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, before the act was passed providing for the adjustment of these claims, and their settlement in this way, they came to the House in communications from the department and were referred to the Committee on Claims, or went to the Senate, where the same action was taken. It became the settled policy of both Houses, as frequently stated in the committee reports, for Congress in adjusting damages for collisions, where Government vessels were at fault, not to make an allowance for demurrage for the time that the vessel was laid up. That was the settled policy, as frequently stated by the committees, and time and again I have seen the matter voted upon in the House, and every time the House voted that it would not allow demurrage; that it would only allow the actual damage to the vessel. Yet these claims that are allowed here do cover demurrage. Not only that. Even the Committee on Claims is now undertaking to reverse the policy of the House; and the Senate has taken the back track on the question, and is willing to allow almost any amount of demurrage that anybody claims. It was for that reason that I called the attention of the committee to it, and will do so further if a certain bill now on the calendar gets before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, my recollection from an examination I made of these documents was that there was no demurrage in any of these claims. I may be mistaken. My recollection is that they are all amounts fixed for repairs—unless the department includes under the term "repairs" an allowance for demurrage.

Mr. MANN. I have examined the claims, and there are allowances for demurrage; but, of course, the amount is small, and these claims are authorized and will have to be paid, I suppose.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse the German ambassador at Washington, D. C., for expenses incurred by him in procuring information for the Interior Department as to the whereabouts in Germany of the heirs of John A. Beck, and Frank A. Armbruster, who died at the Government Hospital for the Insane, $3.45.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

"Three hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to employ temporarily extra clerks by the Commissioner of Pensions to aid him in the work incident to the adjudication of pension claims filed under the act entitled 'An act granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico,' approved May 11, 1912, at salaries not to exceed $1,200 each; and in order to facilitate said work the Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to employ clerks heretofore employed in other departments of the Government service, or others who may be sufficiently skilled to do the required work, without complying with the requirements of the civil-service laws: Provided, however, That none of said extra clerks shall continue in the service beyond the fiscal year of this appropriation without further legislation, or, by reason of said employment alone, be eligible for transfer to the service in other departments, or be continued longer than may be necessary to do the work hereby provided for."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order on the amendment, Mr. Chairman. This is a deficiency bill. There is no authority for the employment of these clerks.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order. These clerks are not needed.

Mr. MANN. The year which this bill covers is passed. They could not be employed in the future under this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I can not believe that the gentleman is in earnest when he says——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order. The gentleman can believe it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio is about to discuss the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. There is no question in my mind that the gentleman from New York is joking when he states that the Pension Bureau does not need additional help to adjudicate the claims——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not only not joking, but I know what I am talking about.

Mr. MANN. This bill only applies to the time before July 1, and if they needed them before the 1st of July, they could not employ them now under this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. The act was passed May 11, 1912, which was before the 1st of July.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that is covered in another bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is a deficiency bill, and the gentleman wants to employ services during this fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio on the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if an amendment was offered in the Senate to the sundry civil bill and the point was not made there, I can not understand why this amendment should not be adopted here. This House passed the most generous pension bill that was ever passed by any legislative body. It was based on service and disability. It was amended by the Senate and based on age, service, and disability. It passed the House, carrying an appropriation of $75,000,000 approximately. The Senate amended it by cutting it down from a third to a half.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will not discuss the pension matter at this time.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires to discuss the matter of pensions, I shall make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We do not care to enter into a competition between the gentleman from Ohio at this end of the Capitol and the gentleman from Ohio at the other end of the Capitol, who are competing for the favoritism of certain classes of persons.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed in order on the question of order.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New York a question. This item under discussion here strikes me as being a peculiar one, and if the gentleman from New York can give the information as to the origin of it I should like to have it. It provides an appropriation of $3.45 to pay the German ambassador for his services in locating the heirs of one John A. Beck and one Frank A. Armbruster.

Mr. MANN. For his expenses.

Mr. WILLIS. It strikes me as a peculiar item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a peculiar item.

Mr. WILLIS. Why was it desirable that the American Government should assume the obligation of hunting up the heirs of these two particular men? It arouses my curiosity.

Mr. MANN. It was not; but he did it.

Mr. WILLIS. Why should we do it?

Mr. MANN. Because the State Department requested him to do it; and in doing it he expended some money, and it is common courtesy that we should reimburse him the money.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, John A. Beck, who had been a private in the Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, was sent to the Government Hospital for the Insane, where he died, leaving $101.50 to his credit. According to the records taken at the time of his enlistment he was born in Germany. An effort was made to locate his heirs, in order to turn this money over to them. An effort was made through the German ambassador. The German ambassador incurred an expenses of $3.45, and presented a claim for reimbursement.

There was no appropriation out of which it might be made, and the committee believed that it was highly appropriate that Congress should authorize the payment of this sum of $3.45 to reimburse the ambassador for the expense incurred by him in attempting to obtain for the Government of the United States the information desired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and thank the gentleman for the information and desire to make the observation that it seems to me that it is a very complimentary reference to the care with which the business of this Government is conducted, particularly so far as the Appropriation Committee is concerned, that an item of $3.45 can be figured out here to be paid a representative of a great government such as Germany.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no appropriation from which it might be paid.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand, and I think it is perfectly proper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was a claim, and while there might be some doubt as to the legality of the expense incurred at the request of the Government, the committee did not wish to raise any question of that character. The German ambassador having stated he spent the money doing this work, the committee felt that he should be reimbursed.

Mr. WILLIS. And I think it is right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And not compel him to bear the burden of the expenditures while obtaining information for this Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Charles F. Read, special disbursing agent, General Land Office, under the appropriation for "Expenses of hearings in land entries, fiscal year ended June 30, 1910," with the sum of $8.39, being the amount disallowed by said accounting officers on account of payments in excess of 10 cents per folio made by the disbursing officer to United States commissioners in the State of Colorado for taking depositions in land hearings under section 4 of the act of January 31, 1903.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that after a long and arduous day's labor it is proper to rise. It seems that we might easily finish this bill by 3 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee has shown so much interest and we have made so much progress that I was in hopes that we might run a little longer.

Mr. MANN. I think we will be able to finish this in a very few hours to-morrow. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25970, the general deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS (H. DOC. NO. 890).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress a report of the proceedings of the Eighth International Prison Congress, held at Washington in October, 1910, in pursuance of the invitation extended by the President in virtue of the joint resolution approved March 3, 1905.

The attention of Congress is invited to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State concerning the printing of the report of the proceedings of the prison congress.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 26, 1912.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the letter of the Secretary of State accompanying the President's message ought also to be read to the House, as there seems to be some question of doubt as to who ought to pay for the printing. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President a report of the proceedings of the Eighth International Prison Congress, held at Washington in October, 1910.

As this congress was so held by reason of the invitation extended by the President in virtue of the joint resolution of the Congress of the United States, approved March 3, 1905, it would seem to be required that the report should be transmitted to Congress for the information of that body.

In recommending this action the undersigned feels obliged to say, however, that in view of the joint resolution approved March 30, 1906, entitled "Joint resolution to correct abuses in the public printing and to provide for the allotment of certain documents and reports," the transmission of the report is not to be deemed to imply any request that it be printed if the cost of printing would be a charge against the Department of State, inasmuch as the appropriation for the printing of the Department of State is not sufficient to provide for the department's printing and also for the printing of documents of this description, as to which the department serves only as a conduit.

Respectfully submitted.

P. C. KNOX.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 25, 1912.

The SPEAKER. Ordinarily the order in this case would be that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed. There are 131 pages of typewritten matter of letter size constituting the papers in the case. The request of the Secretary of State, or his suggestion is, that he does not want to ask this to be printed, provided it is to be charged up to the printing fund of the office of the Secretary of State, because that seems to be about exhausted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I recall nothing whatever in the resolution providing for the invitation to be extended to this Congress that there should be any report made to the Congress of the United States. I do not see why the Secretary of State sends it here unless it is to have it printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the expense of Congress.

Mr. MANN. At the expense of Congress. It has not been usual, I think, for the Secretary of State to transmit to the House copies of the proceedings of all of the international congresses that are held here.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair will refer this message and the Secretary's letter to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and order them printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the accompanying document lie on the table.

Mr. MANN. Why not print the document and charge it up to the State Department.

The SPEAKER. He does not want that done.

Mr. MANN. Then he has no business to send it here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the accompanying document lie on the table.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the matter remain on the Speaker's table for the present without reference until there can be investigation made.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, let us know the nature of the document.

The SPEAKER. It is a letter from the Secretary of State about the last meeting of the prison congress. Now, the Secretary of State in his letter which the President transmits with this bundle of papers, 131 pages of typewritten matter, makes the suggestion in this letter to the President that he does not recommend it to be printed for fear the printer's bill will be charged up to the office of the Secretary of State, and they are rather short in funds up there and did not want to assume that expense, and the Chair was trying to find out what to do with it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a word in this connection. This Government is a member of the International Prison Commission, and every year we pay our pro rata share of the expense——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; and, of course, it is very important, it seems to me, to the people of this country to have the reports of the commission printed, in order that they may know what is being done in prison reform. The taxpayers finally pay for the printing, and it is immaterial which department has it done. In order to get the information the report should be printed.

Mr. MANN. Is not the report of the proceedings of the International Prison Congress already printed by the International Prison Association?

Mr. SULZER. That I do not know.

Mr. MANN. I think it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in the deficiency bill now under consideration we carry an item of $2,000 as the subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission for the expenses of the commissioner, including the preparation of the report. Having done that much, it is somewhat of a presumption for the Secretary of State to endeavor to have printed at the expense of the congressional allotment the proceedings of this prison congress. So far as I am concerned, if it can be avoided, it will not be done at the expense of the congressional allotment.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, it is immaterial to me who prints this document. If it is important, it ought to be printed for the benefit of the people of the country, and it will make no difference in the end to the taxpayers whether it is printed by the State Department or printed by the House of Representatives. If it is printed by the State Department, I suppose the State Department would have to send this document out to the various prison associations of the United States and to the various prison officials of the United States. If Congress prints it, then the Members of Congress will get the document, and they can send it out. I think its about as broad as it is long.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that, in effect, this is a request for a deficiency appropriation to help out the expense of this International Prison Congress?

Mr. SULZER. I do not know what the document contains. I want to find out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is.

Mr. MANN. There was a large fund raised for paying the expenses of the congress—for printing the proceedings and for the actual expenses. If the proceedings have not been printed—I think they have, but I may be mistaken—then they are asking Congress to pay that expense, which was contemplated to be paid by the association.

Mr. SULZER. I will investigate the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the accompanying document lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to lay this accompanying matter on the table, and the gentleman from Illinois suggests it remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in order to find out what it is and what to do about it, I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. We can examine it there.

Mr. HOBSON. May I ask the gentleman from New York what will be the status of the document if laid on the table?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not be printed at the expense of the congressional allotment, if printed at all, until we know what is involved.

Mr. MANN. And it will be subject to the control of the House hereafter.

Mr. SULZER. That is so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If referred to the committee, it will be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion does not go to the message?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; only to the document.

The SPEAKER. The message and the letter of the Secretary of State will be printed and sent to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the accompanying papers lie on the table.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, until I can look into the matter I have no objection to that course being taken.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

RETURN OF BILL H. R. 18041.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street-railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

Attest:

CHAS. G. BENNETT,
Secretary.
By H. M. ROSE,
Assistant Secretary.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CORNELIA BRAGG.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 25598) and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25598) an act granting a pension to Cornelia Bragg.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 22111. An act for the relief of the Delaware Transportation Co., owner of the American steamer Dorothy;

H. R. 20347. An act to authorize the Dixie Power Co. to construct a dam across White River at or near Cotter, Ark.;

H. R. 22043. An act to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 18033. An act to modify and amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11628. An act authorizing John T. McCrosson and associates to construct an irrigation ditch on the island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii; and

H. R. 4012. An act to authorize the exchange of certain lands in the State of Michigan.

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT BANKS (H. DOC. NO. 891).

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have printed as a House document an article entitled "Agricultural credit banks," published in the Journal of the Institute of Bankers, London, in the month of June.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to have printed as a public document an article on agricultural credit banks, published in the Journal of the Institute of Bankers, London, in June. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, July 27, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bill and resolution were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 6899) increasing the limit of cost for the erection and completion of a public building in the city of Richford, State of Vermont, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1069), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 505) directing the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution to send to the House of Representatives a complete list of the subscriptions, if any, made by private persons to the Smithsonian Institution or to any of its officers for the expenses in connection with the African hunting trip of ex-President Roosevelt, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1071), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3957) for the relief of Isaac Thompson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1068), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16604) for the relief of Lewis Montgomery, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1067), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1484) for the relief of Ferdinand Tobe, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1070), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COVINGTON: A bill (H. R. 25988) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 25989) to equip, build, complete, and furnish water, electric-light, and sewerage systems for the Fort Bidwell Indian School, on the Government reservation at Fort Bidwell, Cal., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. PRAY: A bill (H. R. 25990) to establish a mining experiment station at Helena, Lewis and Clark County, Mont., to aid in the development of the mineral resources of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 25991) to amend section 3186 as amended by section 3 of the act of March 1, 1879; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Resolution (H. Res. 642) providing for consideration of the disposition of water rights on Schofield Military Reservation, Hawaiian Islands, in connection with the bill (H. R. 25970) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations, etc.; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. ANSBERRY: A bill (H. R. 25992) granting an increase of pension to Franklin Converse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 25993) granting a pension to Almira M. Meade; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLAYPOOL: A bill (H. R. 25994) granting an increase of pension to Henry Wolf; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25995) granting an increase of pension to Aries Butcher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAGO: A bill (H. R. 25996) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Rice; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRANCIS: A bill (H. R. 25997) for the relief of Joshua Algeo; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 25998) granting a pension to Andrew Crowl; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 25999) for the relief of the heirs of Lindley Abel, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN: A bill (H. R. 26000) granting an increase of pension to Hiram E. Staples; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 26001) granting a pension to Harry A. Rhea; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 26002) granting an honorable discharge to David D. Woods; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 26003) granting an increase of pension to Moses McGinnis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: A bill (H. R. 26004) granting an increase of pension to Annie Liese; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of the Allied Printing Trades Council of the State of New York, against passage of the Bourne parcel-post bill; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of members of the Daughters of Liberty, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring passage of bills restricting immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Fourteenth Street Store, New York City, against passage of the Bourne parcel-post bill; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DICKINSON: Papers to accompany bill in support of pension claim of George C. Brill, Troop M, Fourteenth Regiment United States Cavalry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: Petition of citizens of Mount Vernon, Ill., favoring the passage of Senate bill 5461, to restrict the number of saloons in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FRENCH: Petition of citizens of the State of Idaho, favoring passage of bill regulating express rates, etc.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of citizens of the State of Idaho, against passage of the Bourne parcel-post bill; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of merchants of Stites, Idaho, against passage of bills changing patent laws; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Ottawa (Ill.) Business Men's Association, protesting against the passage of the Bourne parcel-post bill (S. 6850) and favoring a parcel-post commission; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund of America, New York, protesting against the passage of House bill 22527, for restriction of immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: Petition of citizens protesting against the passage of a general parcel-post bill; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SULZER: Petition of the committee of wholesale grocers, New York, favoring reduction of duties on all raw and refined sugars; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 27, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. BRANDEGEE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21480) to establish a standard barrel and standard grades for apples when packed in barrels, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 4930. An act to harmonize the national law of salvage with the provisions of the international convention for the unification of certain rules with respect to assistance and salvage at sea, and for other purposes;

H. R. 21480. An act to establish a standard barrel and standard grade for apples when packed in barrels, and for other purposes;

H. R. 25598. An act granting a pension to Cornelia C. Bragg; and

H. J. Res. 340. An act making appropriation to be used in exterminating the army worm.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (for Mr. GARDNER) presented petitions of Local Grange No. 134, Patrons of Husbandry, of Sweden; of the Board of Trade of Presque Isle; of the Board of Trade of Yarmouth; and of the State Federation of Labor, all in the State of Maine, praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. GARDNER) presented resolutions adopted by members of the Association of Hebrew Veterans of the War with Spain, in convention at New York City, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. GARDNER) presented a petition of Local Union No. 270, International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, of Madison, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called injunction limitation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have several communications addressed to my colleague Mr. GARDNER relating to the parcel post, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RIGHT RELATIONSHIP LEAGUE,
Minneapolis, Minn., July 23, 1912.

Senator O. GARDNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GARDNER: The Right Relationship League of Minneapolis, Minn., has a membership of some 15,000 farmers who are life members of this league and stockholders in some 150 cooperative stores organized and operating on the English Rochdale system, which stores are scattered throughout several States in the Middle Northwest.

So far as we have been able to learn these farmers are unanimously in favor of the passage of the so-called Gardner-Goeke bill, which is now in Congress, providing for the elimination of the express companies and the articulation of the express facilities with the postal facilities in the cities and on the Rural Free Delivery routes. We are confident that if we could see each one of these farmers personally there would not be a single one who would not sign a petition in favor of the Gardner-Goeke bill and against the bill introduced by Senator BOURNE, of Oregon.

Information gained by the writer during the past 60 days in addressing large gatherings of farmers at picnics has led him to believe that the above statements are absolutely true and to hope that our northwestern Senators will refuse to play into the hands of the interests by passing the Bourne bill or any other measure which shall be less adequate for the benefit of the people in the way of parcel-post or postal-express facilities than are provided for in the Gardner-Goeke bill.

Very truly, yours,

RIGHT RELATIONSHIP LEAGUE,
E. M. TOUSLEY,
Secretary and Treasurer.

FARMERS AND TAXPAYERS' ASSOCIATION,
New York, July 24, 1912.

To Senator GARDNER OF MAINE.

DEAR SIR: Reading your speech of yesterday in the New York Times, beg to hasten to sincerely thank you for your attitude regarding the amendments that have been tacked onto Representative WILLIAM SULZER'S parcel-post bill. Will you kindly send us your address if it is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? Last spring our committee united with the 100,336 Patrons of Husbandry in this State to ask for a parcel post. Some of our eyes are dimmed watching for it; some of our ears are impatiently listening to the discordant ideas of some Senators whom Mr. GARDNER of Maine does not agree with and whose ideas, if correctly quoted in the press, more clearly represent the people than many another Senator participating in the present consideration of trying to give the people a parcel post.

The citizens of the United States want and are justly entitled to a decent kind of a parcel post, something that will meet the people's need. It is high time that the people should be served and not railroads nor express companies so exclusively. Trusting that our Senators, one and all, may listen to the universal call from Maine to California for a parcel post and give the people, not the railroads and express companies, what they want, I beg to remain,

Respectfully, yours,

T. GARDNER ELLSWORTH,
Secretary on Legislation.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO.,
Lynchburg, Va., July 25, 1912.

Senator OBADIAH GARDNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I noticed from the papers that you made a speech against the parcel-post bill now before the United States Senate, and I sincerely hope that you will be successful in defeating this bill and in passing your bill.

The more I have thought of the matter the more I am convinced that your bill will meet the demands of the people and be popular legislation, and I am to-day writing Mr. UNDERWOOD and Senator SWANSON, and I hope that these gentlemen will assist you in defeating the parcel-post bill and in passing your bill.

With kindest regards, I beg to remain,

Yours, truly,

C. G. CRADDOCK.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRISTOW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13566) for the relief of soldiers and sailors who enlisted or served under assumed names, while minors or otherwise, in the Army or Navy of the United States during any war with any foreign nation or people, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 986) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7125) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Elias Brant, submitted an adverse report (No. 987) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CRAWFORD, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 223) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 988) thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 6099) to amend section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended June 29, 1906, and June 18, 1910, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 6100) appropriating $100,000 for the use of the Interstate Commerce Commission in addition to the sum or sums already appropriated for their use, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7377) granting a right of way through the Fort Shafter Military Reservation, Territory of Hawaii, to the Pearl Harbor Traction Co. (Ltd.), and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CULLOM:

A bill (S. 7378) for the relief of James E. C. Covel; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 7379) to provide for a site and public building at Coleman, Coleman County, Tex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 7380) for the relief of the States of Massachusetts and Maine; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 7381) granting a pension to Claudia Reid; and

A bill (S. 7382) granting a pension to L. R. Williamson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BACON:

A bill (S. 7383) to increase the limit of cost for the post-office building heretofore authorized at Dublin, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. WATSON (for Mr. CHILTON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed.

CLEARWATER RIVER BRIDGE, IDAHO.

Mr. BORAH. There is on the calendar a brief bill which it is extremely important to have passed as soon as possible. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 7315) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clearwater River at any point within the corporate limits of the city of Lewiston, Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will make an inquiry of my colleague. It is provided that there shall be a draw in the bridge?

Mr. BORAH. The bridge is to be constructed in accordance with the provisions of the act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters of March 23, 1906. It has the approval of the department and of the people of the city of Lewiston.

Mr. HEYBURN. A bridge with a draw is contemplated?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Before closing the morning business I wish to give notice that on Monday, immediately at the conclusion of House bill 16571, Calendar No. 446, the matter of the fur-seal convention, which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has given notice he will call up, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, and I shall try to keep it before the Senate until it is finally acted on.

THE SUGAR SCHEDULE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the unanimous-consent agreement will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Saturday, July 27, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties," etc. (known as the sugar bill), and before adjournment on that calendar day will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Finance reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That six months from and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid the rates of duty which are prescribed in the paragraphs of this act upon the articles hereinafter enumerated, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), and the said paragraphs and sections shall constitute and be a substitute for paragraphs 216 and 217 of section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

First. Sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete, and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75°, ninety-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound, and for each additional degree shown by the polariscope test, thirty-five one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound additional, and fractions of a degree in proportion; molasses testing not above 40°, 20 per cent ad valorem; testing above 40° and not above 56°, 3 cents per gallon; testing above 56°, 6 cents per gallon; sugar drainings and sugar sweepings shall be subject to duty as molasses or sugar, as the case may be, according to polariscope test: Provided, That every bag, barrel, or parcel in which sugar testing by the polariscope less than 99° is packed shall be plainly branded by the manufacturer or refiner thereof with the name of such manufacturer or refiner, and the polariscope test of the sugar therein contained, accurately within one-half of 1°, and a failure to brand any such bag, barrel, or parcel as herein required shall be deemed and taken to be a misbranding of food within the meaning of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes." And the requirements of this proviso shall not apply to any sugar shipped or delivered to a refiner to be refined before entering into consumption.

Second. Maple sugar and maple sirup, 4 cents per pound; glucose or grape sugar, 1½ cents per pound; sugar cane in its natural state or unmanufactured, 20 per cent ad valorem; sugar cane defecated, shredded, artificially dried, or which has been subjected to any manufacturing or other process, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Third. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the Republic of Cuba on the 11th day of December, 1902, or the provisions of the act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same, and that upon the taking effect of this act all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions hereof shall be repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am going to ask first that some graphic tables which I have had prepared, showing various statistics relating to sugar and comparing it with other products, may be reduced to small tables in black and white and printed as a Senate document. (S. Doc. No. —.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be complied with.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is just a hundred years since Napoleon established in France the manufacture of beet sugar. That the beet contained sugar juice had long been known. Olivier de Serres, a distinguished French chemist, had pointed out this fact in 1600. In 1747 a Prussian chemist, Marggraf by name, had demonstrated that a true sugar could be extracted from beets. A pupil of Marggraf named Achard took up the work and made practical demonstrations of the practicability of extracting sugar from beets on a farm near Berlin. Although Achard received royal aid the industry languished and his labors bore little fruit until a letter which he addressed to Van Mons, and which was published in the annals of chemistry, led, in 1799–1800, to the appointment of a committee of the Institute of France to examine and report upon Achard's experiments. The committee reported that Achard overestimated the sugar extraction and underestimated the cost by one-half, but even a cost of 16 cents per pound was only one-half the price at which sugar was then selling, so two small factories were erected in the environs of Paris. Both were financial failures, and public attention was then concentrated on the hopeless plan of making a true sugar from grapes. Public events, however, soon forced active and practical measures which chemical knowledge and experiments, unassisted, had been unable to obtain. The control of the sea passed completely into the hands of England after the Battle of Trafalgar. Then followed Napoleon's continental blockade, and the Emperor's decrees and British Orders in Council between them made neutral commerce hazardous to the last degree and at times well-nigh impossible. One result was a sugar famine which soon prevailed in France and the small amount of sugar which reached the French market commanded fantastic prices. Trelawney, in his autobiography called the "Adventures of a Younger Son," describes his getting into Cherbourg in a fast American schooner which managed to slip through the British cruisers and make a French port. He says that the vessel carried spices, silks, and other articles of both luxury and necessity, then bringing enormous prices, but that the greatest profit was on sugar, which alone made an immense return on the investment. Such a situation as this was obviously intolerable, and on March 25, 1811, Napoleon issued his first decree giving a bounty for the production of beet sugar, and followed it by another in January, 1812, enlarging the reward and founding factories for instruction in the art. Even in the midst of the great events then culminating in the invasion of Russia and destined to result in the fall of the empire, Napoleon gave close attention to the development of this industry, which he was convinced was essential to the military strength and economic independence of France. His efforts were crowned with quick success. In 1813, less than three years after the first attempts, France had 334 beet-sugar factories and produced 3,500 tons of beet sugar. After the fall of Napoleon his plan was, in large measure, abandoned; the beet-sugar industry was neglected, and it was not until the time of the second empire that the policy of the first Napoleon was revived. Since then the industry has grown steadily until in 1900 and 1901 it reached the enormous production of 1,000,000 tons.

The point to which I wish to call attention, however, is not the history of the beet-sugar industry in France, but the reasons which led to its foundation in that country. Owing to the English supremacy at sea Napoleon found that France was dependent on other countries for its sugar supply. He came to the conclusion that this was a serious national weakness, because sugar was one of the important necessities of life. He therefore was convinced that it was a political as well as an economic necessity to make France independent, so far as possible, in regard to her supply of sugar. He took the view that a small and practically unfelt tax, levied on the people of France for the purpose of creating a native sugar industry, was a very trifling price to pay for independence in the production of this important article, and that in the long run the people would pay a great deal more for their sugar if they were left dependent for their supply upon other countries and upon the fortunes of war. It will be generally admitted, I imagine, that the first Napoleon was a man of more than ordinary ability, and I think it is no reflection to say that his intelligence was perhaps as high as the average intelligence of the framers of this House bill, who appear to have overlooked the importance of industrial independence in the production of sugar, which is the fundamental condition involved in this question. The views of Napoleon, moreover, in this matter seem to have been generally accepted by continental Europe. Germany adopted the same policy in the early forties, and we are all familiar with the large proportions which the sugar industry has assumed in Germany, Austria, and Russia, under Government encouragement.

During this development it was found that the production of beet sugar, which it was feared would withdraw too much land from the production of wheat, an objection imperiously disregarded by Napoleon in 1812, had an exactly contrary effect.

It was discovered that the production of the sugar beet, through the necessary deep plowing, thorough cultivation, and removal of foul growth, increased very largely the productive capacity of all other farming land, that it not only made the country independent in the production of sugar, but that it added enormously to its general agricultural capacity.

But the most striking support of the Napoleonic policy really has come from the English, who never accepted the French doctrine and whose policy for seventy years has been one of absolute hostility to the direct or indirect encouragement of industry by any form of legislation. The vast development of the beet-sugar industry in Europe resulted in a large surplus of bounty-fed sugar which the producing countries were enabled to pour into England at prices with which not even tropical cane sugar, unsustained by any bounty, could compete. The first effect of this under the English free-trade system was the practical ruin of her sugar islands in the West Indies. This her free-trade ministers bore with philosophy, pointing out that if those islands could not raise sugar in competition with the bounty-fed beet, it was their duty on the principles of free trade to turn their attention to other crops which they could raise at a profit. They overlooked the fact that there was no other crop in those islands to which the sugar planters could turn with the hope of profit—a fact more impressive, no doubt, to the inhabitants of the islands than to the free traders in London.

The next development was the gradual extinction of the English refineries. England had a very large business in refining cane sugar. A large part of the bounty-fed beet sugar, of course, came into England refined and the English and Scotch refineries began to go out of business. I think I am correct in stating that Glasgow and Greenock, which once had some 18 refineries, now have 6. This destruction of a home industry produced more effect in England than the misfortunes of the sugar islands, and the cherished doctrine of buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest began to look less desirable in this particular case. But that which finally turned the scale was that men of sense and foresight in England perceived that the country was becoming hopelessly dependent for a prime necessity of life upon European powers which were her rivals in trade and might very conceivably become her enemies in war. It was bad enough to be dependent for her wheat upon the United States and the Argentine, with whom there was no prospect of war, but to be dependent upon the Continent of Europe for an article like sugar gave pause even to the most ardent disciples of the doctrine of free trade.

The obvious relief of countervailing duties on bounty-fed sugar was, of course, suggested and was at once laid aside, because it was too clearly an abandonment of the free-trade principles. England then resorted to seeking an agreement among the nations producing a large surplus of bounty-fed sugars by which bounties should be restricted or abolished and the surplus available for introduction to her own markets limited. England labored in this direction for many years, and the result was the Brussels convention of 1902. It is not necessary at this point to go into the details of that convention with which I shall deal. Suffice it to say here that through the influence of England a system was established for the limitation of the artificial beet-sugar exportation. This was not as obvious a disregard of the principles of free trade as countervailing duties, but it was just as real and quite as effective. At the time of the Boer War England also put a small duty on sugar, and thus finally recognized, through her support of the Brussels convention and the imposition of a duty, that Napoleon was fundamentally right in the belief that it was for the best interest of a nation to make itself independent, so far as possible, in regard to this great necessity of life, and that sugar was eminently suitable for the production of revenue.

Therefore, in considering the question of the sugar duties, the first thing to be remembered is that the well-considered opinion of the entire world holds that it is important for a nation to be independent in the production of sugar, and yet it is only of late years that the United States, although its policy for a hundred years has been protective, has really adopted this principle in regard to sugar. During most of our history we have been dependent upon the West Indies for our supply, and it was not until the production of beet sugar began in this country that we realized that we were able to make ourselves entirely independent of the rest of the world in regard to sugar, if we would only give a reasonable protection by import duties sufficient to enable the beet-sugar industry to develop. That industry since its inception has made great strides, although it has been hindered in its progress by the constant threat of adverse legislation. There is no reasonable doubt that if the industry could be assured of sufficient protection for ten years the Nation would be entirely independent of the rest of the world for its sugar supply. These views, which the rest of the world have adopted, have been totally disregarded by the makers of the House bill. Under their scheme of free sugar the Louisiana cane and the American beet sugar would go out of existence, and the supply of tropical cane from Porto Rico, the Philippines, and Hawaii, while it might in part maintain a precarious existence, would be so trifling, compared to the total amount of our consumption, that we should be left dependent upon foreign nations for this great necessity of life.

I now come to the attitude of the world in regard to a tax on sugar as a means of raising revenue. Every civilized nation to-day imposes a tax on sugar. Europe derives over $200,000,000 in revenue from its taxes on sugar, and the United States collects over $50,000,000 from the same source. This fact alone shows that the opinion of the civilized world, without any reference to the question of encouraging or building up the industry, is in favor of raising revenue from sugar. The reason for this is obvious. The tax is easily and surely collected. Although so enormously productive, it is not, except in the case of one or two European countries, a heavy tax. It falls lightly on the people who pay it. It also, as nearly as possible with an indirect tax, distributes itself fairly, according to the paying capacity of the population. Those best able to pay pay most, because they are the principal purchasers of the many articles of luxury into the composition of which sugar enters. The rich and well-to-do households, moreover, consume naturally more sugar than the poorer ones.

Every nation lays a tax upon wines, liquors, and tobacco, and no one questions that they are proper subjects of taxation. In the case of wines and liquors, the subject of taxation is certainly a luxury and one which no man suffers from abandoning if he does not care to pay the tax. It is less easy to draw the line on tobacco, which in its simpler forms comes very near the point of being a necessity to those who work hardest and who lead lives of great exposure. Sugar is, of course, a necessity and not a luxury, but by the distribution of its consumption, to which I have just alluded, it bears a tax with as little injustice as possible and has all the other qualities which commend an article for taxation—ease and certainty of collection, lightness in the individual case, and great productiveness in the mass.

Contrary to the general view of all economists and of all civilized nations, the House of Representatives has thought it judicious to take sugar from the list as a revenue producer. They could not have been moved to this action by any idea that sugar bore an unusually heavy burden in this country, because with the exception of England and Denmark the duty or tax on sugar is less here than in any other beet-sugar country in the world. The following table shows the rates of import duties imposed by various European countries:

	Raw (cents per pound).	Refined (cents per pound).
Austria-Hungary	3.99	4.03
Belgium	1.75	1.75
Denmark	1.22	1.22
France	2.67	2.89
Germany	1.99	2.03
Italy	3.29	4.33
Netherlands (excise tax)	4.93	4.93
Russia	6.82	8.56
Spain	7.46	7.46
United Kingdom (98° or over)	.396	.396

The duty paid in the United States on imported sugar is, for the great mass of our importations which come from Cuba under the preferential duty of the reciprocity treaty, 1.34 cents per pound. Very little sugar comes into this country with the full duty paid, the full duty being 1.68 cents per pound for 96° sugar. The average rate of duty for the past eight years collected on all sugar imported into the United States was 1.4 cents per pound. England collects an import duty just short of 0.4 cent per pound; Denmark, 1.22 cents per pound, but a trifle less than is collected in this country; and all the rest collect more in import duties than here, ranging from 7.46 cents per pound in Spain to 1.75 cents in Belgium. It is also to be noticed that import duties are only part of the taxation which is imposed in other countries upon sugar. The European sugar-producing countries levy an excise tax, a direct tax, on the domestic sugar manufacture, and the amount of this excise tax is only half a cent a pound less than the import duty, so that the consumer in the beet-producing countries of Europe is obliged to pay a heavy tax on domestic sugar, while the foreign sugar is kept out by a surtax of one-half cent per pound. I think, therefore, that we may take it as demonstrated that, in the opinion of all civilized nations, sugar is a proper subject for taxation and that in raising revenue under any system, whether free trade or protection, sugar ought to bear its share.

The theory of the proponents of free sugar as embodied in the House bill, if they had a theory extending beyond the collection of votes, would appear to have been that if the sugar duty was removed the entire benefit of the removal would come to the consumer and that he would receive his sugar, as I have seen it broadly and generously put, 2 cents less per pound than he now pays for it, and that the consumption per capita in the United States being 82 pounds, he would save $1.64 per year. If all the sugar brought into this country came in at 96° and paid 1.68 cents per pound, and each consumer consumed 82 pounds, he would save $1.3776 per year, so that we see at once that we have to abandon the attractive round number of 2 cents and come down from $1.64 to $1.37 as the annual saving, even on the face of the figures. But the proposition has other defects. The average consumption per capita in this country is not 82 pounds per year. According to the report of the Bureau of Labor the yearly consumption per capita is 53.7 pounds, the rest of the sugar consumed in this country being used in the manufacture of confectionery, condensed milk, chewing gum, bread, and other articles, the retail prices of which are not affected materially, if at all, by the price of sugar. Thus, taking the figures of the Bureau of Labor as correct, and my own personal investigation made before I knew them confirms the official statistics, we find that if the whole duty on 96° sugar of 1.68 cents per pound is removed each consumer will save 0.90216 cents per year.

Now, let us take the other factor of the saving. The average duty paid on sugar is not 1.68 cents, but 1.40 cents, as I have just shown, therefore the annual saving to the consumer, if the whole amount of the duty when removed went into his pocket, would be only 0.7518 cents. I will print here, with the permission of the Senate, a table giving the exact annual saving per capita for each tenth of a cent reduction, assuming that the entire duty removed goes direct to the consumer:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Annual gross saving per capita.

On a reduction in duty of:	Cents.
One-tenth of 1 cent per pound	5.37
Two-tenths of 1 cent per pound	10.74
Three-tenths of 1 cent per pound	16.11
Four-tenths of 1 cent per pound	21.48
Five-tenths of 1 cent per pound	26.85
Six-tenths of 1 cent per pound	32.22
Seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound	37.59
Eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound	42.96
Nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound	48.33
1 cent per pound	53.70
Free sugar	72.28

Mr. LODGE. For purposes of comparison I put beside this table another showing the loss of revenue by each tenth of a cent reduction in the duty:

	Loss in revenue.
	Total.	Per capita.
By a reduction of—		Cents.
One-tenth of 1 cent per pound	$3,899,932	4.33
Two-tenths of 1 cent per pound	7,799,864	8.66
Three-tenths of 1 cent per pound	11,699,796	12.99
Four-tenths of 1 cent per pound	15,599,728	17.33
Five-tenths of 1 cent per pound	19,499,660	21.66
Six-tenths of 1 cent per pound	23,399,592	25.99
Seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound	27,299,524	30.33
Eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound	31,199,456	34.66
Nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound	35,099,388	38.99
1 cent per pound	38,999,323	43.33
By free trade	52,496,559	58.33

I desire now to examine more closely the prospect which the consumer would possess of receiving this benefit of 75 cents a year. In the first place, we should remember that sugar has not been involved in the general advance of the prices of the necessities of life which has attracted so much attention and has become a question of so much gravity throughout the world.

In the lower part of table No. 7 hanging next the door, there is shown graphically from the figures of the Bureau of Labor and Statistics the increase in price of articles of daily consumption, of the necessaries of life, such as articles of food. The figures above the line at the bottom of the sheet represent the increases, running up to the highest, which is in pork products. The decreases are below the line. The first and largest decrease is in molasses, the next is in California raisins, and the third is in sugar. Those are the only articles that have decreased during the three decades from 1880 to 1910.

The average wholesale price of granulated sugar per pound in New York in 1870 was 13.53 cents; in 1880, 9.60 cents; in 1890, 6.17 cents; in 1900, 5.32 cents; in 1910, 4.97 cents. It will be observed that there has been a steady decline in the average price of sugar, decade by decade, although during each period of ten years there have, of course, been fluctuations, generally moderate, in the price.

I will insert here, with the permission of the Senate, a table of New York prices of raw and refined sugar during the calendar years from 1890 to 1910; terms, net cash. The table is taken from Willett & Gray's Statistical Sugar Trade Journal. I may say that Willett & Gray are recognized authorities upon this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. LODGE. It will be observed that during the period of 20 years from 1890 to 1910, although, owing to special causes, like short crops, in 1900–1901 when the price of sugar rose to 5 and 5.3 cents, the general course has been steadily downward. In 1911 there was a shortage of sugar in the autumn of that year, and centrifugals in New York touched 5.794 cents in September, 5.896 in October, 5.127 in November, and were down to 4.824 in December; and yet, despite this quite abnormal rise, the average for the year was 4.454 cents, a lower average than for the preceding decade. I print these tables so that they may be examined in detail:

[1] From reports gathered by the State Department from American consuls and published in H. Doc. No. 510, 62d Cong., 2d sess. The marked difference in July and November prices was occasioned by a shortage of over 1,000,000 tons in the 1911 sugar crop of the world, due to drought. In the original report of Consul General Griffith, of London, covering July, 1911, retail prices in London, the following quotations are given in United States cents per pound. In view of these quotations the London figure for July has been placed at 5 cents per pound.

[23] The average New York retail price of 5.69 cents is derived by adding to the New York wholesale price of $4.90, 79 cents per 100 pounds, which was the average cost of distribution and retailers' profit 1890 to 1907, as ascertained by the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. LODGE. There can be no complaint, therefore, of high prices in the case of sugar, and when the special committee, of which I was chairman, was examining into the question of wages and prices a few years ago it was found necessary to explain the fact that sugar had been falling while all other necessities of life had been rising. The explanation, of course, was that the supply of sugar outran the consumption, taking it over a considerable period of time. Even when there had been a shortage and a temporary rise in price the rise had not been enduring and the average price, taken by years or by decades, had been steadily downward. It can not be doubted that one reason for this decline is to be found in the development of the domestic sugar industry of the continental United States, which has reached some 900,000 tons, a very important addition to the world's supply.

Now let us see whether the American consumer has suffered in comparison with other countries. Early in July, 1911, the wholesale price of refined sugar in New York was 4.9 cents per pound, or 5.69 cents retail if we add to the wholesale price the 79 cents per 100 which was charged in New York for profit and cost of distribution during a period of 17 years, as shown by the Bureau of Labor. At the same time European retail prices of granulated as gathered by the State Department were as follows:

Hamburg, 5.9; Warsaw, 7.2; Vienna, 6.5; Paris, 5.9; Brussels, 5.4; Amsterdam, 8.7; Rome, 14; Stockholm, 8; Copenhagen, 5; Madrid, 12.2; Bucharest, 10.1; Belgrade, 8.7; Sofia, 7.2; Zurich, 5.1; Athens, 11.4; Christiania, 6.3; Finland, 8.9; Lisbon, 10.3; Constantinople, 5.1; London, 5.

It will thus be seen that sugar was cheaper in the United States than in the majority of the great European sugar markets. The difference between even London, the lowest, and the United States was comparatively very small—only 69 cents on 100 pounds. I ought to say that the figures for July, 1911, were taken before the great rise in prices, occasioned by the shortage in the world's sugar crop which developed later in that year. The average retail price of sugar in the United States from 1890 to 1907 was only 5.7 cents per pound, and the average price has been lower rather than higher since then. That which has kept the American sugar prices at this low level has been the home production—the cane sugar of Louisiana and the beet sugar of the West.

Now, what are we to gain if we are put on a free-sugar basis? In order to show the exact situation it is necessary for me to trace in some detail the history of the Brussels convention and its provisions, to which I have already alluded, for it is that convention which will govern the prices of sugar in the United States if our own duties are abolished.

The Brussels convention of 1902 was brought about, as I have said, by Great Britain after more than thirty years' effort on the part of the British Government. The purpose of the agreement was to save the British colonial raw-sugar industry and the sugar-refining industry of the United Kingdom from going into absolute decay through the ever-increasing competition of bounty-fed continental beet sugar.

Under government stimulation the production of beet sugar on the Continent of Europe grew from 200,000 tons in 1860 to 6,682,000 tons in 1901–2. Of this amount 3,043,000 tons were exported, and over one-half of Europe's total exports were dumped into the British markets, more than 1,000,000 tons of it being refined sugar ready for consumption. Under this fierce and unfair competition the price of sugar declined from year to year, dropping from 5.83 cents per pound for muscovados in 1860 to 1.91 cents for raw cane and 1.56 cents for raw beet sugar in 1902. The British colonial planter received as much money for one pound of old-fashioned low-degree muscovado sugar in 1860 as he received for three pounds of 96° centrifugal sugar in 1902. Besides receiving a ruinously low price for his product, the British colonial planter was being driven out of the British market. Great Britain imposed the same import duty on the product of her colonial planters that she imposed on foreign products, and under the European bounty system the odds were too great for the tropical planters to overcome. From 1887 to 1902, during which time the annual consumption of sugar in Great Britain increased 400,000 tons, the British imports of colonial sugar fell from 150,000 to 77,000 tons, and unless some change were brought about the extinction of the British colonial sugar planter seemed to be inevitable. The total sugar imports of the United Kingdom in 1901 were as follows:

	Long tons.
Unrefined beet root	500,470
Unrefined foreign cane and other sorts	91,655
Unrefined from British possessions	77,230
Foreign refined beet	1,062,831
Refined from British possessions	214
Total	1,732,400

The condition of the British sugar-refining industry, once great and powerful and ranking above that of any other nation in the world, shared the same fate as the British colonial sugar industry, suffering not only from continental but from British legislation. When in 1849 the British import duty on sugar was reduced from 36½ cents to 5½ cents per pound there still remained a substantial difference in the duty on raw and refined sugar which served as protection to British refiners, and they were happy and prosperous. I could hardly believe, when I first saw it stated that the British import duty in 1839 amounted to 36½ cents per pound, that these figures were possible, but from a very careful and thorough examination of British duties, going back to 1660, I have had compiled a table which shows the rates of duty extending over a considerable period, from 1803 down to 1850. I ask leave to print it at this point, as it is a very interesting and instructive table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection leave will be granted.

[2] 15 per cent ad valorem value, refined, £17 per hundredweight (112 pounds) (73.91 cents per pound), 15 per cent ad valorem=11.09 cents per pound; raw, £7 6s. 8d. per hundredweight (112 pounds) (31.88 cents per pound), 15 per cent ad valorem=4.78 cents per pound.

[3] There is a discrepancy in these figures as compared with the figures derived in footnote 2. The figures in the table are "Rate of valuation on refined," £17, and the duty, 15 per cent ad valorem. Upon this basis the duty would be £2 11s. per hundredweight of 112 pounds (11.09 cents per pound), whereas the figures in the book are given as £2 8s. 5 5/8d. per hundredweight of 112 pounds (10.53 cents per pound).

The "Rate of valuation on raw sugar" is given as £7 6s. 8d. per hundredweight. Upon the basis of 15 per cent ad valorem the rate would be £2 2s. per hundredweight (4.78 cents per pound), as shown in footnote 2, whereas the table in the book gives £1 10 3d. as the 15 per cent ad valorem rate of duty on the valuation of £7 6s. 8d. How the original compiler of the British table arrived at these figures it is impossible to state.

The British pound sterling is figured as equivalent to $4.87 in the above conversions.

NOTE—Prior to 1801 sugar from British possessions was admitted to the United Kingdom at a lower rate of duty than that imposed on foreign sugar. Subsequent to 1801 the rate of duty has been the same, regardless of origin.

Mr. LODGE. In 1850 this difference amounted to 1 cent per pound. In 1864, at the invitation of the French, Belgian, and Dutch Governments, Great Britain joined an international sugar conference which met in Paris. As a result of the agreement reached at that conference Great Britain lowered her sugar duties, bringing the difference between raw and refined down to 26 cents per 100 pounds. The troubles of her refiners began at once, for from that time on her markets were flooded, first with French and later with other continental refined sugar, and by 1877 there was but one loaf-sugar manufacturer left in the United Kingdom. Notwithstanding the fact that reducing the differential between raw and refined had played such havoc with her own refiners and had transferred a large portion of the business to the Continent, so wedded were British statesmen to free trade that they continued to lessen the differential from year to year, and in 1874 placed both raw and refined sugar on the free list. As a result of continental and British sugar legislation British imports of refined sugar increased from 1864 to 1902 by leaps and bounds. In 1860, 98 per cent of the British sugar imports was raw sugar and but 2 per cent was refined. In 1911 but 39 per cent was raw sugar and 61 per cent was refined, the annual imports of refined sugar increasing from 18,000 tons in 1860 to 1,062,831 tons in 1901.

Meanwhile bounty-fed European sugars were displacing tropical sugars in the markets of the United States as well as in Great Britain. Several hundred thousand tons were coming in yearly, and in 1897 the United States importations of these sugars reached 932,000 tons. With the enactment of the Dingley tariff bill, in July, 1897, the United States countervailed against bounty-fed sugars, forcing them to pay into the United States custom-houses an excess duty equal in amount to the bounty advantages they received at home. In 1898 our imports of these sugars amounted to but 70,000 tons. Later they crept up to 350,000 tons, but they gradually faded away, and since our 20 per cent tariff concession to Cuba very little European beet sugar has been imported into the United States. The Indian markets also were flooded with European sugars, and in 1899 India followed the lead of the United States and countervailed against them, with results similar to those obtained here. The British Government considered the adoption of a similar measure, the advocates of it arguing that its adoption would not be a tax on sugar, but a tax on the bounties paid by foreign Governments and hence would not be an abandonment of the British free-trade policy. Their argument was met with violent indignation and heated controversy, and the plan was abandoned, leaving no means of relief save through an international agreement.

As Great Britain could see no other way to save her tropical raw sugar and her home sugar-refining industries without running counter to her policy of free trade, her only recourse was to force the continental Governments which paid sugar bounties to abolish those bounties. It would seem that the British Government could have done this at any time had she persisted, because of the fact that the bulk of the continental sugar exports were consumed in the United Kingdom, and if the continental Governments refused to enter into such an agreement Great Britain could have closed her ports to continental sugar. This she threatened to do, but never executed the threat. The continental Governments frustrated every effort to secure an international sugar agreement until they had so worked out their economies that they could compete with the world. Then they signed the Brussels agreement, under which they abolished their bounties and kartels, and they since have been supplying the British market with sugar just as they were doing before, although the amount of the refined beet sugar imported was less and the unrefined was more. In 1910 the British sugar imports were as follows, the total imports from British colonies being but 130,000 tons:

	Long tons.
Refined beet	841,671
Unrefined beet	311,130
Total beet	1,152,801
Cane and other sorts	569,918
Total	1,722,719

The movement which resulted in the Brussels agreement of 1902 was started in 1872 by the British refiners. In 1875 the British Government succeeded in calling an International Sugar Conference at Brussels, but no agreement was arrived at. Again, in 1876 and 1877, an international conference assembled in Paris, but came to naught. In 1879 the House of Commons appointed a select committee to examine into every phase of the sugar question. This committee worked for two years, but nothing practical was accomplished and the agitation went on, finally resulting, as I have said, in the Brussels Convention of 1902. Under the terms of the convention the signatory powers—Germany, France, Austria-Hungary, Belgium, Holland, Spain, United Kingdom, Italy, Sweden, and Norway—agreed to abolish all bounties, kartels, and so forth, the result being that since that time it has been impossible for European sugars to be marketed at less than the cost of production and have the loss made up by the home government or kartel. Prior to the signing of the agreement British statesmen confidently expected that it would sound the death knell of European sugar exports and that the colonies would come into their own and supply the British people with their sugar. It gave the European sugar industry a temporary check, but that industry soon recovered the lost ground, and the present annual production is 50 per cent, or 3,000,000 tons, in excess of what it was when the Brussels Convention was signed.

British economists estimate that during the latter years of the bounty period the British people purchased their sugar for £5,000,000 less than the cost of production and that now, by reason of having to pay what the article costs to produce, it is costing them an additional $25,000,000 a year for their sugar. As the industry in the colonies has not been stimulated to any important extent, some British statesmen favor withdrawing from the Brussels agreement, believing that if they did so the continental sugar-producing countries would reestablish the bounty system and thus save Great Britain $25,000,000 a year. Other and more farseeing men realized that the main object of the continental statesmen, in paying export bounties was not a matter of benevolence nor was it because they so loved the British people that they wished to provide them with their sugar supply at a price $25,000,000 below the actual cost of production. These English economists perceived that where Europe lost from twenty-five to fifty million dollars a year on their sugar exports they gained several hundred million dollars a year from the increased yield of other crops through rotating them with sugar beets. By repeated experiments the fact has been demonstrated that British soil produces a greater tonnage and richer beets than are produced in Germany, and farsighted British statesmen are in favor of encouraging the establishment of the beet-sugar industry in the United Kingdom in order to build up their agriculture and keep at home the $120,000,000 which Great Britain annually sends abroad for the purchase of sugar. The present British sugar duty is but 39 cents per 100 pounds, but so confident are these men that the British people will change their attitude that within the last few months they have secured contracts for 3,500 acres of beets and have started the erection of a beet-sugar factory ten miles from Yarmouth and will begin producing sugar next autumn.

In 1801 Achard, the German chemist, who, as I have already said, discovered a method of extracting beet sugar and who erected the first beet-sugar factory in the world, asserted that British emissaries offered him $30,000, and later $120,000, if he would declare the process a failure. Shortly thereafter Sir Humphrey Davy, the eminent British chemist, published an article in which he stated that beet sugar was bitter and unfit for human consumption. Having fought the beet-sugar industry continuously for over a century, it would seem strange, indeed, if at last the British people should derive their sugar supply from British-grown beets.

With these facts before us nothing can be clearer than that if we abolish our sugar duties we shall be left at the mercy of the signatories to the Brussels convention. At the present time the United States is conventional territory. The signatories have nothing to do in order to get control of the American market except to declare that the United States is not conventional territory, and thereby permit Russia, which possesses a great surplus of sugar, and other beet-sugar producing countries to pour their oversupply into the United States at any price they please. One year of that process would annihilate the domestic sugar industry of this country and probably reduce the production of our islands to a negligible quantity. Having thus destroyed American competition the signatories to the convention could then declare the United States again conventional territory, divide the sugar necessary for the consumption of the United States among themselves, and sell it to us at any price they chose to fix. It is not to be supposed for a moment that anything so obvious as this would be overlooked. The consumer of the United States might have a short period of slightly lower prices and that would be followed by higher prices fixed entirely at the will of a foreign combination. The price at which bounty-fed sugars can be poured into an unoccupied market is shown by what was done by the bounty-fed sugar of Europe in the English market before the Brussels agreement, and we are not left, therefore, to our unassisted imagination to foretell the outcome.

Who, then, in the United States, is seeking as a matter of personal interest to bring about the results which I have tried to portray? I mean what are the forces outside of Congress which are pressing for free sugar or for a heavy reduction in the rates? Certainly neither consumers, who are conscious of no rise in sugar prices, nor sugar growers, who naturally are not laboring for their own ruin. So far as I have been able to learn the movement for free sugar, outside of Congress, has come from two of the three great sugar refineries of the country, and from that source alone. We are accustomed in speaking of the "Sugar Trust" to mean thereby the American Sugar Refining Co., and for many years that company, having absorbed most of the lesser refineries, was fitly described by that phrase. Since those days of absorption there have grown up, however, two other refineries, those owned by the Arbuckles and the Federal Co., belonging to the Spreckels interests. These independent refineries differ in no respect from the American Sugar Refining Co. except that they are perhaps not so large. Although all three are rivals, their general and essential interests are the same. The American Sugar Refining Co. has not appeared in this campaign for free sugar, but the Arbuckles have warmly advocated free sugar, and the Federal Co. has spent money, employed agents and lobbyists, distributed broadcast throughout the country circulars filled with statements more or less false, and has urged the removal of the duties on sugar. It is therefore not amiss to consider briefly what the purposes of these philanthropists may be in seeking unselfishly and at much expense to benefit, as they assert, the people of the United States by giving them sugar free of duty.

The interest of the American sugar refiners in maintaining a tariff on sugar is confined to the difference between the duty maintained on imports of raw sugar—their raw material—and the duty maintained on refined sugar—their finished product; in other words, that portion of the duty known as the "refiners' differential." The refiners say that owing to the increased volume of business which would be brought about by lowering the price of sugar they gladly would give up their differential if they could but import their raw sugar free of duty. But this is not the whole story, and this consideration is not in itself of sufficient importance to account for the strenuous war which the refiners of the Federal Co. are making on the present sugar tariff. Their assertion that they are actuated by philanthropic motives and a desire to give the people cheaper sugar can be disposed of by a brief account of their methods of business during the past year.

In the summer of 1911 it became apparent that there would be a shortage in the world's sugar crop, and although, according to the records of the United States Treasury Department, American refiners were paying no more or but little more for raw sugar, the American Sugar Refining Co. advanced the price of refined sugar from $4.90 in July to $6.50 in October, the Federal Sugar Refining Co. increased it to $7.25, and Arbuckle Bros. to $7.50. Only in October, when the domestic beet sugar came into the market at $6.50, did these refiners lower their prices in order not to retire from the market. (See Hardwick Hearings, pp. 3362–3363, 3364.) By December the price had receded to $5.53, and Mr. Wallace P. Willett, the sugar expert of Willett & Gray, stated that but for the marketing of this domestic beet-sugar product the price of sugar in America would have gone higher than any other price we have seen. Mr. Willett said to the Hardwick committee:

> The moment our American beet-sugar production became available on the market the rise stopped, and, owing entirely and totally to this American production, refined sugars were a cent and a half lower than they were at the highest point. But for that American production we to-day would be buying sugar at the world's prices. (Pt. 37, p. 3084, of hearings.)

Until the domestic crop of beet sugar invaded the market, the refiners had a monopoly and fixed the price of their product at will. To what figure they would have increased the price of their product and the extra millions they would have made at the expense of the people had not the new crop of beet sugar broken their monopoly, it is impossible to say. It also is impossible to say how many extra millions the Federal, the Arbuckles, and other self-styled philanthropic sugar refiners realized before the marketing of domestic sugar interfered with their plans, but the annual statement of the American Sugar Refining Co. shows that their profits rose from $6,380,302 in 1910, to $14,083,054 in 1911, an increase of nearly $8,000,000, which would not seem to indicate that philanthropy is their sole purpose.

To stop first the growth of and then destroy the present domestic beet-sugar industry is the real purpose of the refiners whether active or passive. The beet-sugar industry produces refined sugar for direct consumption, and therefore the volume of business of the sugar refiners necessarily is curtailed in proportion to the amount of domestic beet sugar produced. This domestic product has increased from 32,000 tons in 1898, to 600,000 tons in 1911–12, which means that the present output of the refiners is 600,000 tons per annum less than it would be if the domestic beet-sugar industry did not exist. But this growth of 1,800 per cent in 13 years, is only the beginning. If left to develop under present conditions, unhindered by constant tariff agitation, our domestic sugar industry soon will supply us with all the $100,000,000 worth of sugar we now import from foreign countries. This is what the refiners see and fear. They fear it, because aside from a small quantity of maple and Louisiana raw, of all the sugar we consume, about one-fifth of all the sugar produced in the world, this domestic beet sugar is the only sugar which does not pass through the hands of the refiners and yield them a profit. For every ton of beet sugar produced for direct consumption, one ton less of imported raw sugar will pass through and pay tribute to the American refineries. A domestic product of thirty to forty thousand tons of refined beet sugar did not arouse the opposition of the refiners, but with an increase of 1,800 per cent in thirteen years the refiners realize that if the tariff on sugar be not disturbed, the domestic product will supplant all the foreign sugar we now consume and for which we pay other countries $100,000,000 a year.

The refiners state that what they desire is free raw sugar, and they acknowledge that in their judgment free raw sugar would ruin the home producing industry. If they can not get free raw sugar, they want such a material reduction in the raw sugar duty as would crush the domestic industry, and do it just as surely as would free raw sugar. But failing to secure either free raw sugar or a material reduction in the duty thereon they desire some reduction, be it ever so small, for while a slight cut might not close our present beet-sugar factories it would discourage new capital from embarking in the industry. A slight reduction would accomplish this important purpose of the refiners almost as surely as would a great reduction.

Last year, according to their published statement, the profits of the American Sugar Refinining Co. amounted to 45.7 cents per hundred pounds of sugar refined. It might be fair to assume that the net profit of operation in refining sugar averages 25 cents per hundred, and the profit on manipulation a like amount, but assuming that the total profits amount to only 25 cents per hundred, the present domestic beet-sugar product of 600,000 tons reduces the refiners' profits by $3,000,000 a year, inasmuch as were it not for the domestic industry there would be 600,000 more tons of foreign sugar to be refined. Furthermore, as the present capacity of American refiners is one-third greater than their meltings, they would add this $3,000,000 a year net profits without having to increase their plant investment and without increasing their margin between raw and refined sugar. In addition to this, there is the constant menace of further expansion of the domestic industry under present tariff conditions.

Our imports of foreign sugar last year amounted to 1,800,000 short tons, and if this also were produced at home the refiners' profits would be curtailed to the extent of $9,000,000 more. The overhead charges of the refiners are the same as though they were running to full capacity, and it follows that if the domestic beet-sugar industry be expanded and the refining industry curtailed the expense of refining will be increased, and if the domestic industry be destroyed and the volume of the refiners' business thereby be increased by 600,000 tons, the expense per hundred pounds on their entire output would be materially reduced. But avoiding an additional loss of $9,000,000 a year through the further expansion of the domestic beet-sugar industry and adding $3,000,000 a year to their profits through crushing the present industry, constitute only a portion of the profits which would accrue to the sugar refiners through placing raw sugar on the free list. With domestic competition destroyed, the refiners, unhindered, could and would increase the margin between raw and refined sugar, and an increase of 45 cents per hundred, such as they made under free raw sugar, would give them on our present consumption of 3,350,000 long tons an extra $33,500,000 profit annually.

A difference of half a cent a pound might not be noticed by the average consumer, but an increase of that amount in the margin between raw and refined sugar means many millions to the refiners, as I will show.

In 1887, 18 of the 21 American refineries were merged into what was known as the Sugar Trust and capitalized at $50,000,000. The New York courts enjoined the Sugar Trust from doing business in the State, and in January, 1891, its successor, the present American Sugar Refining Co. of New Jersey, was formed with $25,000,000 preferred and $25,000,000 common stock. During the evolution from trust to refining company raw sugar was placed on the free list and a bounty was provided for sugar of domestic production. Under this free raw-sugar bill of 1890 the refiners were able to increase the difference in price between raw and refined from 70 cents a hundred in 1890 to $1.15 per hundred in 1893, an advance of 45 cents per hundred, while the American Sugar Refining Co. increased its capital stock to $75,000,000, half common and half preferred. The increase in the margin between raw and refined sugar was reflected in the dividends paid on the common stock of the American Sugar Refining Co., which rose from 4 per cent in 1891 on $25,000,000 to 21½ per cent in 1893 on $37,500,000, their total annual dividend payments increasing from $2,750,000 in 1891 to $10,687,500 in 1893, a net increase of $7,937,500. During the four years, 1890 to 1894, the total amount paid out in dividends by this one company amounted to $27,125,000. This is what free raw sugar did for the refiners' stockholders in four years. Then followed an ad valorem sugar tariff, and during the seven years of free sugar and 40 per cent ad valorem (Oct., 1890–July, 1897) the American Sugar Refining Co. paid out $48,500,000 in dividends. In addition to this, their annual statement of December 31, 1897, shows that they had $25,000,000 in cash and bills receivable on hand, $22,500,000 worth of sugar, and $30,000,000 invested in other companies, a total accumulation of undistributed profits amounting to $78,000,000, with debts of $30,000,000, or a net surplus of nearly $50,000,000, in addition to the distribution of a like amount in dividends during this seven-year period. On the basis of the duties levied in 1897, the loss to the Federal Treasury in sugar duties from October, 1890, to August, 1894, amounted to over $240,000,000, and I have shown where 40 per cent of it went. In 1897 a duty of $1.685 was placed on 96° raw sugar to protect and build up a domestic sugar industry and for the protection of the refineries the duty on refined was fixed at $1.95. As a result of this legislation, while the refiners have not reaped such inordinate profits as they did under free sugar, they have prospered and, as I have stated, the domestic beet-sugar crop has grown from 33,000 tons to 600,000 tons, an increase of 1,800 per cent in thirteen years.

The so-called independent refiners who are denouncing the present tariff on sugar claim that they are fighting the trust, although aside from whatever interest it may have in the domestic industry, the interests of the trust—which refines three times as much sugar as the entire domestic industry produces—are identical with all other refiners.

Eleven years ago, when the domestic beet-sugar product amounted to something over 100,000 tons, the president of the American Sugar Refining Co. attempted to secure control of the domestic beet-sugar industry, for what purpose we can only surmise. He bought an interest in several companies, but death overtook him, and since that time much of this stock has been sold, and it appears that the policy of this corporation is to dispose of its remaining holdings as fast as opportunity presents.

Mr. Atkins, the present vice president and acting president of the American Sugar Refining Co., has been largely interested in Cuban sugar estates since his youth, and he does not approve of our developing a home sugar industry which in time might compel him to seek another market for his raw sugar. Mr. Atkins was a director of the American Sugar Refining Co. at the time its president proposed to secure an interest in some of the American beet-sugar companies, and he declares he opposed the policy from the outset. When before the Hardwick committee last year he gave the following as his reason for objecting (pt. 1, pp. 85–86 of the Hearings):

> The beet-sugar business was a competitive business. It produced in the Western Territories, where our market lay. I say, "our market"—I mean the market of the refiners, the various refiners. As that industry grew—and I foresaw that it would grow rapidly—I believed that it would reduce the volume of business, not only of the American Sugar Refining Co., but of all the refiners on the Atlantic coast; and although we had millions of dollars invested in the business there, we were building up a competitive business, one that would compete with ourselves, and one which was bound to get away from us; we could not control it in the end. I say, "we"—I had no connection with it; that was simply a business man's opinion.

As to the effect which the marketing of the 1911 crop of 600,000 tons of domestic beet sugar had on the price of sugar and on the refining industry, Mr. Atkins told the Hardwick committee (Hearings, pt. 1, p. 49):

> All that beet sugar comes on the market at a certain season of the year. It is all produced in about three months' time. They all want to market it just as rapidly as possible, and in order to do that they come to the eastern points. California sugar comes into Chicago and the Michigan sugar into Buffalo and Pittsburgh, and eastern refineries—not only the American Sugar Refining Co., but the others—have to reduce or close down until the beet sugars are out of the way. Any refining that is done between the 1st of October and the 1st of January is done without any profit, and very often at a loss.

At present the American sugar refiners enjoy exceptionally favorable conditions, and their only fear lies in the further expansion of the domestic beet-sugar industry. So long as Louisiana and our insular possessions produce only raw sugar, which must pass through the hands of the refiners and furnish them a profit, they favor the expansion of these industries, especially because these sugars naturally seek the New York market, and the more that market is flooded the cheaper can the refiners secure their raw material. The pressure to sell these and Cuban sugars has become so great and so constant that the New York raw-sugar market ranges from 50 to 80 cents a hundred below the London and Hamburg markets, thus enabling American refiners to purchase their raw material at a lower figure than can British refiners. Naturally, the refiners welcome a glut of raw sugar, and just as naturally will they do everything in their power to discourage the expansion of a competitor which manufactures sugar for direct consumption, as does every beet-sugar factory in the United States.

In 1910, of the total meltings of 2,800,000 tons of raw sugar in American refineries but 72,000 tons were purchased at world sugar prices and in 1911 but 199,000 tons, the increase in 1911 being due to a shortage in the Cuban crop. These are all the foreign sugars on which the full rate of duty was assessed. Over two and one-half million tons of raw sugar with which our refiners are supplied either is free or comes in under a 20 per cent tariff concession, and for that reason seeks no other market. As a consequence, the New York market is glutted with sugar and the price ranges far below that of Hamburg and London.

On June 27 of the present year the London price of 96° Java sugar (c. i. f.) was $2.61 per 100 pounds, while the New York price of the same grade of nonconcessionary sugar was but $2.10 to $2.13 per 100 pounds, a difference of half a cent a pound. The New York price of the same grade of Cuban sugar was higher by 34 cents, the amount of the 20 per cent tariff concession, and hence while the Cuban planter was receiving 34 cents a hundred more for his sugar than would a Javan or Santo Domingan planter in the same market at the same time, he still was receiving 16 cents a hundred less than the prevailing London price. By reason of having these free and concessionary sugars our refiners are able to maintain a difference in price between raw and refined of from 85 to 90 cents per 100 pounds, which is nearly double the difference maintained between these sugars by the refiners of foreign countries.

It might be said that if we were to have free raw and refined sugar it would be impossible for the American refiners to maintain a greater difference between raw and refined than is maintained by foreign refiners, even though the domestic industry were destroyed and the refiners had a complete monopoly of our market, as otherwise the foreign refined product would be shipped into our market, thereby displacing American refined sugar. With this theory I can not agree. In October, 1901, when the New York wholesale price of granulated sugar was 5 and the price of raw was 3¾ cents per pound, the Missouri River price of refined was dropped 1½ cents per pound in one day, and for a time the extraordinary trade condition existed of refined sugar selling in interior markets at a less price than raw sugar was selling for in New York, where the price of granulated was maintained. The domestic beet-sugar crop had entered the market and the object of the localized cut was to compel the domestic producers to sell their sugars below the cost of production, and the probabilities are that any considerable imports of foreign sugar would be met with a temporary reduction at the port of entry, and if the cargo were shipped inland a localized temporary reduction would trail it wherever it might go. The American refiners, with a complete national marketing organization, would be able to discourage foreign shippers not possessed of marketing facilities and their shipments would cease.

It is a business proposition, pure and simple, and in antagonizing the interests of the domestic sugar industry and endeavoring to prevent its expansion the refiners are doing what most men would do under like circumstances, though they might not claim to be actuated by philanthropic instead of selfish motives, and they might not stoop to pose under the name of an imaginary committee of wholesale grocers.

Some advocates of free sugar assume that such action would injure the refiners, but the only action Congress could take which would be inimical to their interests would be to raise the duty on raw sugar and thus stimulate the more rapid development of the domestic industry. As to tariff agitation looking to a lowering of the duty on raw sugar, the refiners not only welcome it, but instigate and conduct it, aware that even if the duty be not touched, such agitation will prevent millions of dollars from embarking in and expanding a competitive business. A slight reduction in the tariff would discourage other millions and a material reduction or free trade in sugar would ruin the domestic industry and fortify them in their monopoly.

Grouping the several advantages which would accrue to the refiners by materially reducing the duty on raw sugar or placing it on the free list, we have the following seemingly good reasons for their activity:

(a) The construction of new beet-sugar factories would cease, thus removing their fear of losing $9,000,000 a year, which they now make on refining 1,800,000 short tons of foreign sugar.

(b) The present beet-sugar factories would close, thus increasing the volume of business of the refiners by 600,000 tons a year and increasing their annual profits by $3,000,000.

(c) As the refiners' overhead charges would not be increased by reason of the increased volume of business, the cost per 100 pounds on their entire output would be decreased.

(d) They would save the interest on the $50,000,000 they now have to pay into the customhouses in duties.

(e) The removal of their only competitor which now forces them to operate their plants at a loss or close them down for 3 months out of 12, would give them a complete monopoly and enable them to fix and maintain prices at will throughout the year.

(f) It would enable them materially to increase the margin between raw and refined sugar without increasing the price of refined.

Considering the decreased cost of production, the increased volume of business, the lowering of interest charges, and the increased margin the refiners would be able to maintain between raw and refined sugar by reason of regaining a complete monopoly of the sugar industry of the United States, it is fair to assume that a favorable outcome to the war they are waging against the domestic beet-sugar industry will add $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year to their net profits, and our Federal Treasury would lose $50,000,000 a year in revenue. A return to free raw sugar, a complete monopoly of the sugar business, and 21½ per cent dividends are the natural desires of the refiners. If we are to judge by the mass of free-sugar literature with which Congress and the country generally is being deluged, no one knows better than do the refiners that, however many millions they expend in their efforts, they will reap ample reward if they win. The beet and cane producing sugar industries are scattered through a large number of States and through our insular possessions. It is impossible for them to organize under one general head to maintain their position. The refining industry is operated in large units, and six men can form a cohesive body which will map out every detail of their business, from shaping tariff policies to regulating the price which 96,000,000 people shall pay for their product. It should be plain to the most simple that when the heads of an industry which turns out an annual product valued at over $300,000,000 a year attacks a competitor, which forces it to run at a loss or close down for three months of the year, it is not done from philanthropic motives; and that permanently cheaper prices to the consumer are not to be secured by establishing a complete monopoly in the production of an article like sugar. As stated before, with such legislative conditions as enable American sugar refiners to purchase their raw material far below the world's price, their conditions are ideal, barring only the output of the domestic beet-sugar industry and its anticipated expansion, which can be stopped by securing even a modest reduction in the duty on raw sugar.

There seems, then, to be but one way by which the American refiners can be kept within bounds, and that is to maintain the duty on raw sugar and thus develop an independent home producing industry which will deprive the refiners of a monopoly of the business and a consequent control of prices. That, of course, which would be best for the refineries would be a heavy reduction of the duty on all sugars, sufficient to destroy the Louisiana cane and the beet-sugar industry and at the same time secure to the refineries an unassailable position in the American market. But, although less advantageous than this situation, it would still be highly profitable to them to get rid of the domestic industries, even at the price of absolutely free sugar. Their margin of profit might be cut down by foreign competition, but the difference in ocean freights, the nearness of the Cuban sugar fields and the enormous increase of the gross sales would enable them to withstand European competition unless it was backed by bounties, which are now rendered impossible under the Brussels agreement. The control of the market of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific would be more than worth any sacrifice that they might be obliged to make if the refined sugars of Europe came in free. It is to be doubted, however, whether they would in reality be obliged to make any such sacrifice, for the industry is in so few hands that it would not be difficult for them to come to an agreement with the foreign syndicates.

Free sugar, therefore, and still more largely reduced duties on sugar, would be for the benefit of the American sugar refining companies and could by no possibility benefit anybody else. To give up the great domestic industry and throw away a large revenue without any sensible reduction in the price of the commodity seems a large price to pay for the purpose of increasing still further the profits of the three great refining companies of the United States.

Let me now recapitulate the propositions in regard to duties on sugar which seem to me clear:

First. That it is sound policy and has been recognized as of the highest importance for nearly one hundred years by the civilized world that a country should be at least measurably independent in regard to its supply of sugar and should have the means to furnish itself with that essential article.

Second. That it is the universal opinion of all civilized nations, of all economists and financiers, that sugar is an eminently suitable subject for taxation, providing a large revenue, easily and fairly collected, with the least possible pressure upon the individual consumer.

Third. That sugar is perhaps the one article of general consumption, the one great necessity of life, which has not shared in the general advance of prices which has taken place during the last fifteen years and which has been so much accelerated during the past five years.

Fourth. That the price of sugar in the United States is lower than in any other country in the world except England, Switzerland, Denmark, Belgium, and Turkey, and that the competition of the domestic industry is the principal cause of the low prices of sugar maintained within the United States.

Fifth. That the industry is of great value to the country, particularly the beet-sugar industry, which not only employs many thousands of people directly, but which is of incalculable benefit to the farmers, enhancing the value of their lands and increasing the general agricultural capacity of all those regions where the beet is raised for the purpose of making sugar.

Sixth. That the maintenance of the duties enables us to keep out the cheap surplus sugars of Russia and other countries which, if admitted free, would abnormally depress the price of sugar here and lead to the extinction of our own industry, and which at the same time would take from us the Cuban market, because we could no longer give the Cubans a preferential on their sugar. The removal of the sugar duties would also destroy to a large extent our trade with the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, which has now reached the enormous amount of $182,000,000 a year. We sell to Cuba products to the value of $62,000,000 a year and take from her products to the value of $106,000,000 a year, of which $76,000,000 is sugar. Our total trade with the four islands amounts to $351,000,000 a year, and that trade will be very largely lost, certainly very greatly reduced, by the removal of our sugar duties. In the face of such facts as these it is difficult to characterize the folly of such legislation as is proposed by the House bill or to portray the injury which it would bring to the people of the United States.

In dealing with this question I have not given any space to the consideration of labor costs, which have played such an important part in all our tariff discussions as to rates of duty, and my reason for this is that the question of labor cost is not a dominant factor in the case of sugar, although our costs, especially our labor costs, are far higher than anywhere else. I believe that there should be a duty on sugar, because, as I have tried to show, it is one of the best subjects for raising revenue that modern economists and financiers have been able to devise. I believe that this duty should be sufficient also to give reasonable protection and encouragement to the production of sugar within the United States, so that we may develop a home industry capable of supplying all our needs. It seems to me clear that it is of the utmost importance to the well-being of the Nation to be independent in regard to the production of this great necessity of life. I think the duty ought to be maintained at a point under which cane sugar can be grown profitably in Louisiana and Texas and beet sugar can be made with reasonable profits throughout all the vast region adapted to the culture of the sugar beet. It seems to me that the reasons for a sufficient duty to attain these ends rest upon far broader grounds than most protective duties, strongly as I believe in the system of protection. Upon the evidence submitted to the committee and from such study as I have been able to give to the question, and from such examination of foreign and domestic authorities as I have been able to make, I am satisfied that the present rate of duty can not be materially lowered without seriously injuring the production of sugar in the continental United States. It is to that protection that we owe the very moderate prices at which sugar has been sold during many years, a price which has not shared in the advance common to almost all other articles in our food supply. I am satisfied for the reasons I have already given that the destruction of our cane and beet sugar industries in the continental United States would result not only in an advance in the cost of sugar to the American people, but would put us at the mercy of a foreign combination among the beet-sugar producers of continental Europe. If we lower the present duty below 1.68 cents, we bring the Cuban rate, which is really the rate with which our production has to compete, below 1.34 cents. If we go much below 1.34, we shall, in my opinion, destroy our cane-sugar production in Louisiana and prevent its development in Texas. If we go still further we shall arrest the development of the beet-sugar industry, and in the course of a very few years of progressive reductions we shall begin to diminish our beet-sugar production until it is finally extinguished. If we should adopt the 33 per cent reduction suggested by the Democratic minority in the Senate, we should destroy the cane-sugar and the beet-sugar production of the United States as completely, if not quite as quickly, as by the absolute abolition of duties proposed by the House.

But I draw the line at the rate needed for the protection of the Louisiana cane sugar. That is an American industry carried on for many years under much difficulty and discouragement, but now, in my opinion, at the point of improvements which will enlarge it and make it more profitable than it has ever been in the past. I am against any reduction which will seriously endanger that Louisiana industry. The State of Louisiana has never given any support to the party to which I belong, but I can not bound the policy of protection, in which I believe, by State lines or by political or geographical divisions. The people of Louisiana are my fellow citizens. They are Americans. I believe they are entitled, no matter what their political views may be, to the same protection in their industry that every other industry should have, unless the protective system is to be destroyed. I confess that at the present moment I feel for those people a peculiar sympathy. The appearance of the boll weevil has proved almost fatal to the production of cotton in certain parts of Louisiana, where, if I am correctly informed, owing to climatic conditions, it is less easy to combat that pest and less possible when it appears to raise even a partial crop of cotton than in other regions which have been afflicted by the ravages of the same insect. Undismayed by their misfortunes, many of those people, obliged to abandon the cultivation of cotton, turned to the production of sugar. They found at once that they were not sufficiently supplied with factories to extract the sugar from the cane, and nearly one-third of that crop was consequently lost. With a courage and determination which does them the greatest credit they went to work to raise the money required to build the necessary factories. While they were thus engaged the present House of Representatives passed the bill placing sugar upon the free list. The blow fell upon those people in Louisiana with crushing effect. It became impossible to go on with the construction of the necessary factories and more than that it demoralized, for the time being, many industries which depend upon sugar production, for which they furnish tools, machinery, and supplies. Many hundreds of men, according to the testimony before the committee, were in this way thrown out of employment. While they were staggering beneath this blow the terrible flood from the rising Mississippi came upon them. The Federal Government, I am happy to say, stretched out its strong hand to aid them in that hour of distress, but Mr. President, it would be a far greater aid if we did not select this moment to take from them even the hope of reviving the industry upon which they depend. To pass legislation of this kind at this moment, whether in our opinions we are free traders or protectionists, is nothing short of cruel. I am utterly opposed to any serious reduction of the sugar duties, moderate as they now are, at any time, and if I were able I should like to give to the sugar makers of the United States the assurance that there should be no change in the rate for a period of at least ten years. If that could be done the sugar industry would advance with leaps and bounds, unless all facts and all evidence are false. But apart from this policy, in which I believe, it seems to me that at this time, under these conditions, to smite down that struggling people by removing the duties which give them their only hope of recovery is a wrong which we ought not to inflict upon any community of Americans, and especially upon a community which is bravely fighting against a succession of adversities rarely experienced by any people. I venture to think that in urging the Senate to leave the sugar duties as proposed in the bill of the committee, whether it is right economically or not, upon which men may differ, I am pleading for a broader principle—that of ordinary humanity to a great body of American citizens, weighed down by misfortune and striving with brave hearts to retain their homes and maintain their industry. It may be illogical to make this appeal for the planters of Louisiana. I had never thought of their condition down there until it was brought to my attention in the Finance Committee and I heard the facts, heard their voices, heard their story, and found what they were suffering. My plea may not be in accordance with the doctrines of that free-trade political economy which Carlyle called the "dismal science," but it is in harmony with that human sympathy without which this world of men would indeed be dark and grim to all who dwell within its confines.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have listened, as has everybody within the Senate Chamber, with a great deal of pleasure to the elegant diction of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I have listened with interest to the pathetic picture which he drew of the demoralization of people and the destruction of their property in Louisiana, not by the passage of a law putting sugar upon the free list but by the passage of a bill through the House of Representatives which has never gone upon the statute books. I am at a loss to see how it could have produced any demoralization or suffering under those circumstances.

The minority of the Senate Committee on Finance have submitted an amendment to be proposed as a substitute for the House bill which sought to place sugar upon the free list. I want to explain briefly the characteristics of that bill and make a comparison between the duties proposed under it and the duties which now constitute the sugar schedule of the Payne-Aldrich bill. Before doing so, however, I shall answer some few things said by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator from Massachusetts has told how the cultivation of sugar beets improves the soil for other crops. There is no doubt about that proposition. There is also no doubt about the fact that where sugar beets have not been raised, to wit, in England, the production and the increase in the production per acre of wheat and of all other crops is greater than it is upon the Continent—in Germany, France, Austria, and Russia—where sugar beets have been raised, showing that, so far as intensive farming, diversified farming, and the improvement of the soil are concerned, there are other methods of farming which improve the soil very much more. The yield of wheat in Great Britain is 32 bushels to the acre; in the United States during the year when that yield was made in Great Britain the yield was about 13 bushels to the acre upon the average throughout this country; the yield in France was next to that of Great Britain; and the yield in Germany next to that of France.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that if sugar were placed upon the free list—and, by the way, there is not the slightest anticipation in the mind of any intelligent man that it will be placed upon the free list, not even if a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House and a Democratic President come into power—but he says that if sugar is placed upon the free list certain dire results would follow. He drew a picture of the result to the industry itself. In that, I presume, he is partially justified. Then he went on to say that after sugar was placed upon the free list the American people would enjoy a short period of cheap sugar or low-priced sugar, and that then they would be handed over to the mercy of the signatory powers to the Brussels Convention, which would raise the price of sugar to any figure, however great, that they might choose to fix. It is strange how plain a statement of obvious facts will put that conclusion down.

Great Britain has no duty upon sugar, and the signatory powers to the Brussels Conference have never been able to demand "any price that they choose" in Great Britain. On the contrary, as a rule, sugar has been cheaper in Great Britain than anywhere else. It follows, of course, that if the fact of free sugar could enable the parties to the Brussels Convention to rob and exploit the American people, the same conditions would have enabled them to rob and exploit the people of Great Britain.

Mr. President, we are not attempting to put sugar upon the free list at this time. I myself agree that it ought not to be placed there. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts when he says that sugar is one of the best subjects upon which to raise revenue. It has been found so not only in this country, but in all other countries, and, as a tariff-for-revenue Democrat, I would not be willing to surrender it as a subject for raising revenue for the Government. I think a mistake was made when the House proposed to surrender totally the fifty millions now raised in that way.

I shall refer to one other statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts, and after that I shall go on with the discussion of the bill which we propose. Not he alone, but many people make misleading statements as to the protection extended to their sugar producers by foreign countries upon sugar. For example, it has been stated here frequently that Germany gave a protection to her producers on raw sugar of $1.98. This is not the case. The conclusion is arrived at in this way: They add to the 47 cents German rate of duty the consumption tax levied both on foreign and domestic sugars of $1.51, and they get $1.98; but they neglect to tell you that the German producer and, ultimately, the German consumer also pay the consumption tax of $1.51; so that that is not a protection in any sense at all, and the real protection is only 47 cents per 100 pounds, this being the surtax. Not only does the imported sugar pay the consumption tax, but the home producer of sugar, as well, pays the consumption tax in Germany.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts and I, in replying to one another here, will be largely fighting windmills, because his argument has been made mainly against free sugar. The minority members of the Finance Committee——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I may have misunderstood what the Senator said with relation to the German duty upon sugar, but I understood him to say that the German duty upon sugar was only 47 cents a hundred.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said that that was the real protection. The duty is $1.98, but $1.51 of that is a duty which is also levied upon sugars of German production.

Mr. SMOOT. That, Mr. President, is only the consumption tax. The 47 cents is the surtax. The consumption tax of $1.51 applies to all sugar that may be imported into Germany——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and to all sugar produced in Germany, too.

Mr. SMOOT. Making the duty upon German sugar $1.98, exactly as the Senator from Massachusetts has said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the rate of protection is only 47 cents, because the home production of sugar also pays the $1.51 tax.

Mr. SMOOT. The protection is $1.98.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not; the rate of the tax on imports is $1.98, but, as $1.51 of it is not only paid as a tax on imported sugar but is also paid upon home-produced sugar, it is not fair to count it as a protection to the home producer.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, if they did not have the $1.98 protection, foreign sugars could enter Germany at 47 cents; but the fact is that no sugar can enter Germany without paying a tax of $1.98.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely; and I have stated that three or four times.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, the actual protection is $1.98.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the actual protection is not, because $1.51 of the $1.98 is a tax which is paid by the home producer of sugar himself, and therefore the difference between that and the $1.98 is the real measure of real protection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi would have a hard time convincing of that fact the German people or any one exporting sugar into Germany.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, Mr. President, when the Senator from Utah thinks he is thinking sometimes he says things that have very little weight. I am not talking to the German people, and it is not a question of convincing them of anything. I am talking about the real measure of protection which the German sugar producer receives. Now, it follows necessarily—a school boy can see it—that if a part of the import duty is countervailed, compensated, and equaled by a tax at home upon the home production, there is no advantage to the producer in that much of the tax. The German duty upon imported sugar is $1.98. One dollar and fifty-one cents of that amount is a tax upon consumption, which is paid also by the home producer of beet sugar, and therefore as to this $1.51 tax his sugar has no advantage over the sugar of foreign production imported into Germany. I do not know whether I would have a hard time convincing the German people of that or not, but if I did have a hard time to convince them of that they would have to be more stupid than they were when I used to associate with them when I lived and studied among them.

The bill which we offer, and which I wish to explain, as an amendment in the nature of a substitute to House bill 21213, which is the House free-sugar bill, differs from the existing law in these respects: First, it abolishes the No. 16 Dutch standard test entirely; it also abolishes the differential entirely.

I want to congratulte the Republican Party, and especially the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], upon the fact that it has finally dawned upon the Republican mind that the Dutch standard is a legislative joker and a fraud, and that the differential is an unfair special privilege granted to a great trust. It has dawned upon their minds so impressively that they have themselves to-day brought in a bill abolishing the Dutch standard and abolishing the differential. The country may well congratulate itself that they have come to that position. The country can regret that they took so many years to find it out, but it is better late than never.

Now, if I understand the bill proposed by the majority members of the Finance Committee, it makes no change in existing law, except to abolish the number 16 Dutch standard test and the differential and to introduce the following provision, which is new legislation.

We abolish in our bill the differential and the Dutch standard and do not substitute for it this provision. This provision is in itself a legislative joke. That provision in the Lodge bill, the bill of the majority members of the Finance Committee, is this:

Provided, That every bag, barrel, or parcel in which sugar testing by the polariscope less than 99° is packed shall be plainly branded by the manufacturer or refiner thereof with the name of such manufacturer or refiner, and the polariscope test of the sugar therein contained, accurately within one-half of 1°, and a failure to brand any such bag, barrel, or parcel as herein required shall be deemed and taken to be a misbranding of food within the meaning of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes."

Then follows this language—and I call the careful attention of Senators to it:

And the requirements of this proviso shall not apply to any sugar shipped or delivered to a refiner to be refined before entering into consumption.

Here is a burden laid upon the entire sugar business, except that it is carefully not laid upon the sugar refining company—the Sugar Trust. Whatever that burden may cost sugar producers, little or great, the Sugar Trust and the great refining companies are exempt from it.

In addition to that, it is unfair in this, that it favors beet sugar at the expense of cane sugar, because no beet sugar is ever bought for the purpose of being sent to a refinery to be refined in the United States. In some other countries it is the case, but in the United States the beet sugar is turned out in a refined condition from the factory itself. So you burden the Louisiana raw cane sugar; you burden cane sugar generally. It does not burden beet sugar because beet sugar is not sold to be refined. You burden cane sugar with this provision from which by the nature of the case beet sugar is exempted, and then, furthermore, in the proviso you exempt all sugar bought by refiners. While abolishing the differential, they have been careful to put in another unfair advantage to the great refining companies, instead of this unfair differential which they abolish and for the abolition of which they claim great latter-day credit to themselves.

The Senator from Massachusetts, in calling attention to his measure, did not call attention to this proviso and exemption of the measure itself, but engaged in a general discussion of the measure outside. The bill proposed by the minority members——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wanted to call attention to what may be termed the branding provision that the Senator just spoke of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just read it to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. It says:

And the requirements of this proviso shall not apply to any sugar shipped or delivered to a refiner to be refined before entering into consumption.

Now, that is not to lay a burden upon the cane grower of this country, because if his sugar is shipped to a refinery to be refined he is not required to brand it under the provisions of this law. He does not have to brand it if it goes to a sugar refinery to be refined, and I can not see what burden we are laying upon the cane grower under that provision.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The language of the provision is this. I will read it again:

Provided, That every bag, barrel, or parcel, in which sugar testing by the polariscope less than 99°—

Shall be plainly branded, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator know that all Louisiana cane raws are less than 99°?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that, but sugar above 99° is not required to be branded.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor is any other, where it is to be shipped to a refinery to be refined.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate any longer than I am compelled to. Everybody is tired. I read the language to the Senate, and I trust to the intelligence of each Senator to understand it.

Now, the bill introduced by the minority members of the Finance Committee differs, as I was going on to say, with existing law in certain particulars. Two of those I have mentioned.

I come now to the tax itself. The reductions of duty under the proposed substitute are 33⅓ per cent upon sugars and 40 per cent upon molasses.

Under existing law sugars not above 16 Dutch standard in color, tank bottoms, and so forth, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75 degrees, are taxed ninety-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound. Under the substitute, if it become a law, the same sugars would be taxed sixty-three one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound. Under existing law for every additional degree shown by the polariscope test the tax is thirty-five one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound; under the proposed substitute the tax would be twenty-four one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound.

This tax of twenty-four one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound upon each additional degree of polariscope test continues under the substitute clear through to the end. Under the existing law when sugar which has gone through a process of refining was reached a tax of 1 cent and ninety one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound was levied.

Our increase per polariscopic test is uniform and continues throughout and makes no jump, and it is in that way that the so-called differential is abolished.

Under existing law molasses not above 40 degrees is taxed 20 per cent. We tax it under the proposed substitute 12 per cent ad valorem. Molasses testing above 40, and not above 56 degrees, is taxed under existing law 3 cents per gallon. We would tax it 1⅘ cents. Maple sugar and maple sirup under existing law is taxed 4 cents per pound. We would tax it 2⅘ cents per pound. Glucose or grape sugar or sugar cane in its natural state or unmanufactured is taxed under existing law 20 per cent ad valorem, and we would tax it 17 per cent. Sugar candy and all confectionery, and so forth, not provided for especially under existing law, valued at 15 cents per pound or less, and sugars after being refined, when tinctured, colored, or in any way adulterated, are taxed 4 cents a pound, and we would tax it 2⅘ cents per pound; in addition to that, there is on all those articles an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent which we reduce to 10 per cent, and where they are valued at more than 15 cents per pound the existing law fixes a tax of 50 per cent, which we reduce to 33⅓ per cent.

Now, a few words generally in explanation of why the minority members of the Finance Committee were not willing to put sugar upon the free list and thought that this reduction was about right. That it is not too little of a reduction both factions of the Republican Party confess. One of them confesses it by contending that there ought to be no reduction at all and the other faction will confess it by offering a bill which will make a reduction of about 22 per cent instead of a reduction of 33⅓ per cent. Both factions, therefore, of our political antagonists confess that we have made a reduction sufficiently ample.

In fact, both of them contend that our reduction is too great. We did not think that it was just and right in carrying out Democratic doctrine as expressed in Democratic platforms, which have demanded that we should proceed toward a revenue basis gradually, to make at one fell swoop overnight a reduction upon this particular product of 100 per cent. We were reenforced in that conclusion by the action of the House of Representatives with regard to all the other schedules concerning which they have sent us tariff-revision bills. They have made a reduction upon the other schedules of about what we propose to make upon the sugar schedule. We have followed their footsteps with regard to other schedules and therefore have paid more real heed to their own convictions—if these bills express their own conviction—than the House itself did.

I do not believe in the doctrine some Democrats seem to believe in, that because somebody somewhere by legislation robs the consumer for his benefit we ought to keep upon a ground of equality with the wrongdoer by robbing the consumer of our products for our benefit; but I do take the position that in reducing tariff taxes, as in doing anything else in this world, people ought to deal fairly. I have not seen why it was right or why it was necessary or fair to single sugars out rather than woolens or cottons or chemicals or anything else for the purpose of putting it upon the free list.

I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that sugar is an absolute necessary of life. People can live without it. But I do agree that it is a comfort which enters into every household, and for that reason it ought to be taxed as little as possible, consonant with revenue necessities and consonant with existing conditions.

I have sympathized somewhat with the view of the Senator from Massachusetts that this peculiar moment, while the people of Louisiana are suffering from the Mexican boll weevil and recently trying to recover from sufferings by the devastation of floods, was not a particularly happy moment to select for putting sugar upon the free list even if it would otherwise have been just and wise treatment.

But we have been led to our conclusion mainly by the consideration that with a reduction of 33⅓ per cent from present duties we then will be upon a revenue basis as to sugar.

We believe that after five or six years with that reduction—in a few years, at any rate—the United States Government will be collecting even more revenue than it is now collecting from sugar duties. We will be untaxing the consumer and at the same time supplying revenue for the Government. This increase of revenue will follow because the reduction in the duty will cheapen the price of the product. Cheapening the price of the product will increase its uses, increase the demand, and will result in increasing its production as well as its importation.

Another reason moving us was, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, that sugar is peculiarly a good subject for revenue. We put $50,000,000 a year into the United States Treasury from sugar. Whatsoever import duties return an actual revenue to the Government can not be said in a certain sense to have been taken away from the people, because the Government's Treasury is the people's Treasury, and what the people have paid upon their consumption is still at their behoof for military, naval, interior improvement, and other governmental purposes. A great majority of the tax levied upon sugar—the major part, I should say—goes into the Treasury, and only a minor part of it goes as largess by operation of law into the pockets of the producer; whereas the statute book is full of import duties upon other articles, in some cases where all of it, the duty being prohibitory, goes into the pockets of the producers as a favored class, and in some cases where nine-tenths goes into the pockets of the producers and only one-tenth into the Treasury of the United States for the use of the people who pay the tax. In a vast number of cases—I very nearly said a majority of the cases, but I am not sure that would be correct—the major part of the tax goes into the pockets of the producer and a minor part goes into the Treasury of the United States. That is the next reason why, as tariff-for-revenue Democrats, we have thought this bill preferable to the House bill.

Mr. President, I hope this bill will pass the Senate. I hope it will be concurred in by the House. I hope it will be signed by the President; but if the bill does not pass the House I hope that some bill reducing the duties upon sugar may pass.

I understand that a Republican Senator has a bill reducing duties about 22 per cent. If we can not get the 33⅓ per cent reduction, which I think is fair and which I think would not hurt anybody, we should like to have the 24 per cent reduction in the interest of the great consuming public. Even the Lodge bill offered by the majority members of the Finance Committee is a real improvement on existing law, and is welcome as a demonstration of a late but promising change of heart.

I do not believe that a reduction of 33⅓ per cent of the present sugar rate will hurt a single beet-sugar enterprise in the United States. I believe that any man who will study the hearings before the Finance Committee and will study the public statistics and records of beet-sugar production, the business having grown enormously, showing that it must be highly profitable—in some cases it has been reported that some of the sugar factories paid for themselves within five or six years after they were erected—and who will study the enormous profits which many of them have been making, because those factories are well equipped and well managed and well administered—and the reason most men do not make money in their business is because they do not manage their affairs well—would conclude that this legislation would not seriously hurt any fair business.

I am a little bit afraid that so far as the Louisiana cane producers of sugar are concerned, when you come to those producers out on the outer edge, who are not handling their affairs well, who are not up to date, some of them may be hurt.

I am sorry that that should be the case, but laws ought not to be made for the ragged edges of an industry. They ought to be made, even by protectionists, for the industry taken by and large and not for its exceptions. If we had a duty of 100 per cent on sugar and were to reduce it to 75 per cent, I have no doubt that some few people, managing their business very badly and barely managing to live with 100 per cent, would have to go out of business. I have no doubt that that is true of every other industry as well as sugar, of wool and cotton and everything else. But to carry the doctrine of protection to the absurd point of wanting it to be high enough to protect the carelessly and ill managed enterprises is carrying it too far.

I do not think it will hurt any well-managed Louisiana cane-sugar producer. If it did hurt some of them, if in hurting them—and they were few—it had benefited a vastly greater number of American citizens, it would stand justified according to my political philosophy. But I do not believe it will, and I am confident that it will not hurt any of the others.

I think we ought to follow the precedent, time honored, when we have got a good revenue subject of keeping a duty upon it for the purpose of raising revenue for the use of the people, to be expended from their Treasury, and we ought to pay some heed not only to the recently announced Democratic platform, but to the one announced at Denver. Both of them say that we shall proceed toward and to a revenue basis gradually.

No man who has good sense, no man who has good feeling, will refuse, when undertaking any great reform, to consider present conditions, nor will he neglect to note in many cases that present conditions, if they are bad and to be remedied by legislation, were produced by legislation. People were induced by law—tariff laws—into artificial, naturally unprofitable pursuits. I mean by that pursuits that would not have been profitable save for the operation of law. They have been induced into them, and some regard, I think, ought to be paid by any sensible man to that fact, as some regard ought to be paid to all facts. So far as I am concerned, a fact is about the only thing in the world that I reverence. I never try to tunnel under it. I never try to jump over it. I never try to walk around it. I just bow to it and confess that it is there.

This is the condition of the sugar industry now. It seems to me it is a great pity that the duties have been kept so high for so long a time. So far as the Louisiana cane-sugar producer is concerned he, years ago, by insisting upon this high duty, cut his own throat—that is to say, if his throat is to be cut at all.

Now, how did he do it? You can not take cheap, inefficient, unintelligent colored labor and compete with the most intelligent, enterprising, energetic, and inventive white labor of the world. You can not do it. If the sugar duty had been fairly right and not too high, the Louisiana cane planter could have gone on forever making a reasonable profit in the sugar production, but the Republican Party and the cane men together managed to make it so high that it hothoused into existence a sugar-beet business, and the beet-sugar business, without the aid and operation of law, would have had difficulty in finding a beginning.

They have by this course built up for themselves, therefore, a competitor—that which will devour them. It is as certain as two and two make four that intelligent, enterprising, thrifty go-ahead, energetic, inventive white labor raising sugar beets in an American country can compete with any labor anywhere in the world engaged in that sort of business after they once get a foothold. They have now got that foothold and could stand to-day, so far as they are concerned, without a dollar of tax and make money and continue to make it; and they will stand as day follows day in a better and better condition, because they will improve the beet itself as to its saccharine contents, and they will improve their machinery. They are making their own machinery now, not buying it from abroad, and some people abroad have come here and bought it from us. American invention has gone to work upon it. They are not only able to stand by themselves in competition with the world, but at the same time in the future Louisiana will find that she has to change either the character of her labor or she will find her task of entering into competition with the American beet-sugar producer a hopeless task—absolutely hopeless. American white labor can raise sugar beets just like it does potatoes, like it does corn, like it does wheat, or any other farm product, in competition with anybody on the surface of the earth. They have demonstrated that they could do it. It is a farming process after all.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And I want to add that it is very unlike the product of corn and potatoes. They deplete the soil. The cultivation of the sugar beet adds to the fertility of it. So it is a benefit, even.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have noted that point before. But sugar-beet raising is not the best way of keeping up the soil.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It will keep up and add to its fertility.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does undoubtedly add to the fertility of the soil, but not as the raising of alfalfa or cowpeas, I mean any leguminous product, that puts enrichment into the soil does. The fact that it is not the cheapest and best way of enriching the soil is demonstrated by what I said some time ago when the Senator from New Jersey was not here. In Great Britain, where they do not raise any sugar beets at all, the production has increased per acre more than it has either in France, Germany or Russia, and the actual production per acre of every product is greater than it is in any of those countries which are raising sugar beets. But the sugar beet does enrich the soil.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did I understand the Senator from Mississippi that the raising of beans also enriches the soil?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said any leguminous plant enriches the soil. It puts nitrogen into the soil, taking it out of the air.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is an agricultural fact that I think the country generally has not come to appreciate. We have felt that the raising of beans perhaps impoverished the soil about as much as any plant or product that we could produce.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is an old and familiar fact known to every farmer that any sort of leguminous plant, and among them are cowpeas, alfalfa, red clover, anything of that sort, does take nitrogen out of the air and put it into the soil.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Infinitely good products are clover and cowpeas if they are plowed under as a fertilizer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to get into a general agricultural argument, but I every year and my people have been enriching their soil by planting cowpeas and then cutting the peas off for hay, and the roots and the little that is left have enriched the soil because the little bug or microbe that is on the tubercle of the pea brings nitrogen into the soil.

When you cut off the peas the soil has been enriched both chemically and mechanically; that is, chemically by the process of putting nitrogen into the soil and then mechanically by the pea roots going away down and making the soil to a large extent porous so it takes the water down and gives the water up more easily to other plants.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I quite agree with the Senator from Mississippi if the products raised are given back to the soil, but that is not true of the bean crop. When the bean crop is produced the beans are pulled root and branch and so everything has to be taken off, and there is nothing that destroys the fertility of the soil so much as the raising of beans, at least no crop with us, because no part goes back into the soil.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps I have been misunderstanding the Senator. Is he speaking of beets?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of beans.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all right. We will leave that out because it makes no difference. It is not relevant to this anyhow. I do not want to deliver an agricultural lecture. The way in which beets improve the soil is not owing to the fact that they put anything in it, as legumes do, but it is owing to the fact that there must be such splendid cultivation for beet raising, such intensive cultivation, such splendid care given to the soil, that it improves the character of the soil mechanically, and not in the way that cowpeas or alfalfa do, by direct addition of chemical properties.

Mr. President, I am very anxious, and I know all of us are, to get through with the question and the session. I feel like I have occupied more time than I ought. I have occupied more than I would have done but for these agricultural dissertations, and I shall surrender the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I share the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that Senators are very desirous of getting through at an early hour to-day. I could address the Senate for the next two hours upon this question, but I hardly think it is necessary. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has covered the subject pretty thoroughly, and I shall therefore not undertake to go into a detailed discussion or argument of the sugar schedule at this time.

I did intend to answer some of the statements that have been made recently by circulars sent every day or so to Members of the Senate by a Mr. Lowry, representing an association formed by Mr. Spreckels, of the Federal Sugar Refining Co. The expense and maintenance of the organization is paid for by Mr. Spreckels alone. But I have concluded that it is unnecessary, and am informed by Senators that the statements made are not such that require an answer.

I believe, Mr. President, that Senators pretty well understand what it really costs to produce beet sugar and cane sugar in this country.

I have made a number of speeches in the past on the subject, showing what it actually costs to produce sugar in this country, both cane and beet. There is no change in those costs. They were taken from the books of the companies, showing the absolute cost at the time I addressed the Senate the last time upon the subject.

As far as I am personally concerned, all the protection that I desire for the sugar industry of this country is sufficient to enable it to hold its own against increased importation of sugar of foreign countries and enable it to develop in the future, and no more. The amount of protection required to accomplish this has been a somewhat disputed question. The sugar hearings in the House, in which the books of most of the sugar companies of the United States were produced, demonstrated that the cost of producing sugar in this country was $3.54 per 100 pounds, without depreciation charges. I believe that it is generally admitted that the production of beet sugar in this country costs about $3.75 to $3.80 per hundred, and it costs a little more to produce cane sugar in the South. All the protection that the sugar producers of this country desire is enough to measure the difference between the cost of producing sugar in this country and in foreign countries.

I believe, Mr. President, if it had not been for the attempts that have been made nearly every year for the last 10 years to reduce the prevailing rates on sugar there would have been sugar factories in all parts of this country, and in numbers sufficient to produce twice the amount of sugar that is being produced to-day.

Mr. President, if it were understood that the present duty imposed on sugar would remain unchanged for the next 10 or 15 years, every pound of sugar consumed by the people of this country would be produced in this country before the end of that period.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts asked the question: "Who is back of this move for free sugar?" That was demonstrated beyond a question before the hearings in the House and Senate. It is not the people who are crying for free sugar, but it is the great sugar refineries of this country. They want free sugar; and why? If they had free sugar, every producer of sugar in the United States would be destroyed, and when destroyed the few sugar refiners would have the absolute sugar market of this country in their control. They would name the price that the people would pay for sugar, just the same as they named it in the fall of 1911, when they purchased sugar from $3.86 to $5 a hundred and sold it as high as $7.50 a hundred. They were not then looking after the dear people of the United States. They were looking after their own coffers and charging all they thought the people would pay.

The statements of all the companies that are now so interested in the reduction of the price of sugar to the people show they did not make money by the hundreds of thousands, but by the millions of dollars, when they had it in their power to do so, and if it had not been for the fact that beet sugar produced in this country entered the market in the month of October the excessive prices would have continued and the refiners would have continued making their millions monthly.

So, Mr. President, I believe that if anything should happen to destroy the American manufacture of sugar and the great sugar refiners of this country had absolute control of the distribution of sugar, with the power to make the prices for all the sugar that was sold, in the end the American people would pay more for their sugar than they do now with the tariff added.

I shall not take any more of the time of the Senate to-day in discussing this question, because I believe that every Senator has made up his mind—as each Senator no doubt has studied the question—what rate of duty, in his opinion, is necessary for the preservation of the sugar industry in this country.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I move that, on page 4, line 2, the word "thirty-five" be stricken out and the word "twenty-six" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 2, in the amendment reported by the committee, strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert the word "twenty-six."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall be glad if it should not be reduced to that point. I am very anxious that we should pass a proper sugar bill in the Senate to-day. So far as I have the power to do so, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the acceptance of the amendment makes the bill, as reported by the majority of the committee, satisfactory to me, but probably I should explain just what the amendment does.

As will be remembered by Senators who are present who were here three years ago, when the Payne-Aldrich bill was before the Senate, I offered an amendment to paragraph 216 which struck out the language in the first line as printed in the tariff bill—

Not above 16 Dutch standard in color.

And also the following provision I moved to strike from the bill:

And on sugar above 16 Dutch standard in color, and on all sugar which has gone through a process of refining 1.90 cents per pound.

The effect of these amendments, if adopted, would have been to reduce the duty on refined sugar from $1.90 to $1.82½ per hundred, and to remove the Dutch color standard, which imposed the same duty on light-brown sugar that was imposed on refined.

The bill, as reported by a majority of the Committee on Finance, omits these provisions in the law which I then moved to strike out. I think I held the attention of the Senate for about three days at that time in explaining what the Dutch standard was, and what I considered the iniquities of its incorporation into the sugar-tariff law, and explaining as best I could the reasons why no differential was needed.

Prior to the Payne-Aldrich law the Dingley law provided for a differential of 12½ cents per hundred pounds on refined sugar over the duty on pure sugar that had not gone through the process of refining. That 12½ cents, in my opinion, was purely a protective duty to a refining company that did not need any protection whatever. The Payne-Aldrich law reduced that from 12½ cents to 7½ cents per hundred pounds. I contended for the striking out of that 7½ cents differential, because, in my opinion, it was not needed and was purely a gratuity to a refining company that had proved itself to be a criminal organization.

In my judgment the provision relating to the Dutch standard was also in the interest of this same refining company, because it placed so high a duty on the light-brown sugars as materially to increase their price, so that they could not be successfully sold in competition with the refined. I was unable at that time to convince the Senate that these provisions should be stricken out, and they remained in the bill.

Last year, as Senators will remember, I again sought to have these provisions stricken out. Three years ago, if the amendments that I had offered to the bill had been adopted, the duty would have remained then on pure and refined sugar $1.82½ per hundred pounds.

Last year, in addition to striking out the differential and the Dutch standard, I sought to reduce the duty, making the maximum duty $1.75 per hundred; that is, reducing it 7½ cents per hundred pounds lower than the amendments I offered two years previously would have reduced it. I failed then to convince the Senate that such a reduction ought to be made.

I want to say that I was exceedingly gratified when the majority of the Committee on Finance reported this bill to find that the provision relating to the Dutch standard had been taken out of the law and that also the differential had been taken off, leaving the duty on pure sugar at 1.82½ cents per pound. I felt that in itself was a great advantage to the people and a very desirable step in our sugar tariff legislation, and I was very much gratified because it was the accepting by the committee of the identical amendments to the law that I had proposed in 1909. But I believe now that the duty can be still further reduced without endangering the sugar industry, especially the beet-sugar industry, that has been built up, in my opinion, as a result of the protective duty that was imposed in 1897 in the Dingley law.

I would not reduce the duty to a point that would endanger the successful operation or the normal and natural growth of the beet-sugar industry of the United States. I am desirous that the Louisiana cane-sugar industry should have the protection that is justified in undertaking to develop the sugar production of this country; but I do not believe that we are justified in maintaining an excessive tariff duty on sugar in order especially to encourage the development of the production of cane sugar in Louisiana, because the territory which can be utilized in the production of cane sugar is limited; so that a high protective duty could not give the country any great production of sugar. There is, however, opportunity for a very large development of the sugar-beet industry in the United States, and I believe we are justified in maintaining a protective-tariff duty in any reasonable degree to encourage the development of such production. In this respect I fundamentally differ from the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; but the difference is one of economic view. I believe that when duties are imposed for the collection of revenue to defray the expenses of the National Government, if they can be so fixed as to result in the development of an American industry that will give diversified employment to our people, it is not only justified but desirable to so fix them.

The Dingley bill was passed in 1897, and I want to call attention briefly to the result brought about by the duties imposed by that law in the development of the beet-sugar industry. In 1895-96—that is, the year previous to the enactment of the Dingley law—there were produced in the United States 32,000 tons of beet sugar. Last year—that is, for the sugar year 1911-12—there were produced 606,000 tons of beet sugar. There has been a gradual development in 15 years from 32,000 tons to 606,000 tons. I believe that the stimulus given the beet-sugar industry by a tariff of $1.95 per hundred pounds on refined sugar resulted in the enormous and unprecedented development in that industry. In my opinion that was wise legislation. The result has been that last year we produced approximately $50,000,000 worth of sugar in the United States. Even if we could have purchased sugar at the same price somewhere else, I am reminded of the illustration which Lincoln once gave and which always comes to my mind when discussing this subject. If this sugar had been produced abroad and we had bought that 600,000 tons last year—that additional amount—from the foreigner, he would have had the money and we would have had the sugar; but since it was produced by our own people in our own country, within the boundaries of our own Nation, we have got not only the sugar but also the money. That is one of those homely illustrations that furnish an unanswerable argument of the advantage of the protective policy. But whenever the tariff duty rises above the point that is necessary for a proper and normal stimulation of the industry, then it becomes an evil instead of a benefit. The fight I have been making since I have been in the Senate against the present tariff has not been against the policy or principle of protection, but against the excesses which selfishness and greed have incorporated into the law. When those excesses are removed, then I stand as a defender of protection as a national policy.

The bill before us provides that there shall be a duty of 95 cents a hundred pounds on sugar that tests 75 degrees pure by the polariscope test, which is a scientific test used by the civilized nations of the world, and adds 3½ cents per hundred pounds for each additional degree of purity, making the duty on 100 per cent sugar $1.82½ per hundred pounds. My amendment strikes out the 3½ cents per hundred and inserts 2.6 per hundred for each additional degree of purity above the 75 degrees, making the maximum duty on pure sugar $1.60 per hundred pounds, or 22½ cents per hundred pounds less than the bill as reported by the majority of the Committee on Finance. The amendment which I submitted to the House bill some time ago provided for a maximum of $1.52½ per hundred on pure sugar. The amendment I now offer and which the committee has accepted imposes a maximum duty of $1.60—7½ cents more per 100 pounds than the amendment as I originally presented it. I increased the maximum duty from $1.525 to $1.60, in the hope that the Senator from Massachusetts and the majority of the Committee on Finance would accept it, and that we might get a law passed that would substantially reduce the duties.

I might contend for exactly what I want in tariff legislation and fail to get anything, but I feel that when the Republican majority eliminates from the law the Dutch standard, which I have been fighting since I have been in the Senate, removes the differential, which I think is unnecessary, and reduces the duty on refined sugar from $1.90 per hundred pounds to $1.60, and on pure unrefined sugar from $1.825 to $1.60, that I am getting substantially what I have been fighting for. I believe that is approximately as much of a reduction as it is safe to make at this time, considering the importance of the beet and Louisiana cane-sugar production.

In this connection I think I should refer to the Cuban reciprocity treaty that was entered into some years ago, because that brought about a material reduction in the protection which the sugar producers in the United States were receiving under the Dingley law. The iniquity of that measure from my point of view is that it reduced very materially—20 per cent—the duty on raw sugar which the sugar refiners bought and left the duty on refined sugar, which they sell, the same as it was before. The result has been that the refiners entered the Cuban market, purchased their supply for their refineries at practically 20 per cent less than they had been paying before, and had the same protection for their product which thus sold in the American market.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me, the benefit which they derived was in no way shared by the people who produced the sugar in the field.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would not say that it was in no way shared. It was shared to some extent, but very little. I think the Cubans got some advantage, but nothing like 20 per cent. They got a very slight advantage, and the American public got a very slight advantage. I figured it out once at about $1\frac{7}{10}$ per cent in the reduction of the price which they paid for the refined product.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very much less, if the Senator will permit me, than the advocates of Cuban reciprocity so enthusiastically represented it would be.

Mr. BRISTOW. Very much less, that is true.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And the effect of that act was most detrimental to the development of the beet-sugar industry in our country.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think I ought to say it was detrimental in this, that the uncertainty and the instability of the American policy was such as to discourage rather than encourage the normal and natural growth of that industry.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, I can hardly agree fully with the Senator in that respect. I think that the beet-sugar industry, in spite of the handicap then put upon it, has grown in a very gratifying way. My criticism is not of the reduction that was made on raw sugar by the Cuban reciprocity treaty, but on the failure to reduce the duty correspondingly on the refined product. If that duty had been reduced correspondingly, then it would have amounted to a reduction of 20 per cent in the sugar duties; but as it was, it was a reduction of 20 per cent in the protection which the sugar producer received and no reduction in the protection which the refiner, the purchaser of the product of the American cane-sugar producer, received.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from Kansas state that quite accurately? I understand the Cuban reciprocity legislation gave the Cubans a reduction of 20 per cent in our tariff duties, but it was not in terms confined to raw sugar; it applied to all kinds of sugar.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true; but there are no refineries in Cuba and never have been.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is correct; but in practical application it applied to both. While I am on my feet, following out the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan, with whom I quite agreed when this legislation was pending in the House, I think there has been a very gratifying development in the beet-sugar industry in this country, but I feel quite sure—and my opinion is based upon some observations of my own—that it would have been still further developed if it had not been for that legislation, because I think I know of instances in the West where people were prevented from putting their money into the building of additional sugar factories by the passage of the Cuban reciprocity bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I agree with the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Utah that the passage of the Cuban reciprocity law checked for a time the development of the beet-sugar industry. That is shown by the production during the years immediately following the passage of the reciprocity bill, due, I think, as the Senator from Michigan has suggested, to the uncertainty and the doubt in the minds of investors as to what effect that law might have upon the sugar market.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me, I will make the further observation that that uncertainty followed very closely upon the withdrawal of the bounty which was promised in different States to the beet-sugar industry in its early stages and which, indeed, was part of the policy of the Federal Government at that time; but, notwithstanding all of these trials and tribulations, the suitableness of our soil to that product has increased the output tremendously, until to-day, as one of those who originally advocated it in the House of Representatives and who has been its constant friend since, I am indeed very proud of the domestic beet-sugar industry. I hope that it will go along and continue to grow and develop, and that it will stand upon its own feet and keep itself clear from the organizations which are viewing it with such a jealous eye and whose very touch would tend to blight and possibly to destroy it. I do not hesitate to say that I think that has been their object.

The sugar industry in the United States is absolutely dependent upon the tariff. The Senator from Kansas, the Senator from Utah, myself, and other Senators who have given it study, know that the island of Cuba, lying only 90 miles from the American coast line, has a sugar productive capacity of nearly twice the ability of the people of the United States to consume. According to a French statist, who has given the matter very careful thought, it is not beyond the realm of possibility that Cuba could produce annually upward of 6,000,000 tons of sugar and almost have it grow seven times with one planting. In a situation like that, with a crop produced by cheap labor—peons who wear little clothing and whose necessities seem to be small—it would be little less than suicidal to place the American beet-sugar producer upon the same level with sugar producers in this territory so near our coast.

I am glad that the Senator from Kansas by his persistence and his devotion has finally succeeded in bringing into agreement apparently discordant elements upon this question. For him to say that this industry is dependent upon protection, that it is one of the fruits of protection, and that it has his support and good will, is a great encouragement to the beet-sugar industry of this country, which will retain in the circulating medium of our country hundreds of millions of dollars that will flow through other avenues of commerce and trade and employ labor and diversify production, and which will add to the aggregate wealth of our country and to the individual prosperity of its citizens.

Mr. BRISTOW. Referring to the check in the production of sugar during the years immediately following the enactment of the Cuban reciprocity law, I have just been looking at the statistics which I have here. The law was enacted in 1903. In that year there was produced in the United States 218,000 tons of beet sugar, an increase from 1897, in the six years after the Dingley law was enacted, from 32,000 tons for that year to 218,000 tons. That was the increase in the first six years of the operation of the Dingley law in the production of beet sugar.

Prior to 1897, before the enactment of the Dingley law, there had been a very slow development in the beet-sugar industry. The first beet sugar that was produced in the United States was in 1861, which was simply an experiment. The entire production from 1861 to 1870 was only 448 tons, and from 1870 up to 1897, a period of 27 years, it only increased to 32,000 tons, while, as I have stated, in the first 6 years after the enactment of the Dingley law it increased from 32,000 tons to 218,000 tons. In 1904 the production was 240,000 tons, or an increase of 22,000 tons. In 1905 it was but 242,000 tons, an increase of only 2,000 tons, showing that the enactment of the Cuban reciprocity law had a retarding effect; but as soon as the industry recovered from the first effect of that law it began to advance by leaps and bounds. In 1906 there were produced 312,000 tons, an increase of approximately 70,000 tons for that year. Then it continued to increase until, as I have said, last year we produced something over 600,000 tons of beet sugar in the United States.

In this connection I submit a table showing the production of cane and beet sugar in the United States from 1852 to 1912:

In addition to Cuban reciprocity, the beet-sugar industry, as well as the cane-sugar industry in the United States, has had to contend against free sugar from Porto Rico. Prior to the annexation of Porto Rico, which occurred as the result of the Spanish-American War, sugar from Porto Rico had paid the same duty as sugars from other parts of the world—a maximum duty of $1.95; but with the annexation of Porto Rico its sugar came to the United States free. The annexation occurred shortly after the Spanish-American War, and our importations from Porto Rico in 1900 were 36,000 tons. The importation from Porto Rico has increased, as the result of free sugar, from 36,000 tons in 1900 to 322,000 tons last year—showing the enormous amount of free cane sugar that is brought into the United States from Porto Rico to compete with the American sugar producers.

Then, there has been a large increase from Hawaii. The increase from these islands has been from 252,000 tons in 1900 to 505,000 tons last year.

I submit another table showing the importations of sugar from Porto Rico and other countries:

NOTE.—From Senate Document No. 15, Sixty-first Congress, first session, pp. 2–3, letter from Assistant Secretary Commerce and Labor.

Figures, 1898, compiled from Statistical Abstract, 1907, p. 719, also 1904; figures for 1901, Porto Rico, Statistical Abstract, 1907, p. 719; Porto Rico, 1899–1900, Statistical Abstract, 1904, p. 351; Cuba, 1899–1905, Statistical Abstract, 1904, p. 351; Philippines, 1899–1903, Statistical Abstract, 1904, p. 353; other countries, 1899–1904, Statistical Abstract, 1907, p. 719; all figures for 1909 from Foreign Commerce and Navigation of the United States, 1909, pp. 965, 1092, 1214, 1236; all figures for 1910 from Foreign Commerce and Navigation of the United States, 1910, pp. 1093, 1117, 1136, 1137, 1387, 1407; figures for Cuba, 1911, from Report on Commerce and Navigation of the United States, 1911, No. 15; other figures for 1911 furnished by Bureau of Statistics and computed therefrom.

In the face of these handicaps during the 15 years that the beet-sugar industry has been in process of development, with the exception of a few years immediately following the reciprocity treaty, it has made a normal, rapid, and desirable advance. During recent years, because of improved methods of extracting the saccharine from the beet and the improvement and development of the beet so as to get a beet richer in saccharine contents, there has been a gradual decrease in the cost of beet-sugar production in the United States; and I am thoroughly convinced—and there can be no doubt in the mind of anyone who will examine carefully and impartially the statistics of the development of this industry—that the tariff reduction suggested in the amendment that I have offered, and which the committee has been good enough to accept, can be made at this time without detriment to the development of the beet-sugar industry in the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Has the Senator from Kansas made any calculations as to the amount of revenue that will be sacrificed by this reduction?

Mr. BRISTOW. About five and a half million dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it the expectation of the Senator that the reduced duty will stimulate importations, and that we shall make up the revenue in that way?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I do not think we shall make up the revenue. I do not think it will stimulate importations. My judgment is—many of my protection friends will disagree with me on this—but my judgment is that it will result in a reduction in the price which the American people pay for the sugar they consume and that that reduction can be made without any detriment to American producers. The protective duty will still be high enough to enable them to compete successfully in the American market with any foreign producer, whether it be the beet-sugar producer of Germany or the cane-sugar producer of Cuba.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of course the motive of the Senator from Kansas is to keep the duty sufficiently high to enable them to compete.

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is the reason I oppose the substitute offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], because I think the reductions provided in that amendment would be very detrimental to the beet-sugar industry and particularly detrimental to the cane-sugar interests of Louisiana.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if I do not interrupt the Senator from Kansas——

Mr. BRISTOW. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am going to observe right there that if the rates of duty embodied in the proposition of the Senator from Kansas could be made permanent, if it were certain that those duties would not be interfered with by a political party whose policy is toward free trade, I venture the assertion that the beet-sugar industry would grow as it has never before grown, and that within a very few years at the outside the American people would not spend outside of the country a dollar for sugar, but would retain all that vast supply of money among our own people and in our own industries.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Michigan that it is very desirable, when a great industry, such as this is, is affected so materially by a tariff duty, that there should be stability in the amount of duty levied, and that the rate should not be changed from year to year, because that causes a degree of uncertainty in the minds of men who seek investments or whose fortunes are involved in the production of this commodity. I believe that the doubt as to the effect Cuban reciprocity would have on the development of the beet-sugar industry had as much to do with the retarding of its growth during the years 1904, 1905, and 1906 as the actual reduction in the duty.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It had. That was the first step.

Mr. BRISTOW. And I believe that this duty of $1.60 on refined sugar, which in effect is a deceptive duty, because practically no sugar will be imported that will pay $1.60 a hundred pounds—the real actual protection to American sugar to-day is the duty on the Cuban product; that duty to-day is $1.34 on 96° sugar, and 95° and 96° sugar constitute the great bulk of our importations——

Mr. BACON. Why does the Senator say that is the controlling duty? I ask for information.

Mr. BRISTOW. Because the sugar we import comes in at that duty. We imported last year from Cuba 1,800,000 tons of sugar, while we imported from all other countries but 48,000 tons which paid the full duty, showing that 1,800,000 tons came in under the Cuban reciprocity agreement—that is, at a duty of $1.34 on 96° sugars—while there came in but 48,000 tons that paid the full duty.

Mr. BACON. I may be wrong about it, but does not the Senator think that as long as the lower rate of duty does not furnish importations to supply the demand, the higher rate of duty, under which there must be some importations, is the controlling rate of duty?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator is right, in a sense. If he will permit me, I will explain.

The real competitors of the American beet-sugar producers are the American refiners of tropical or cane sugars; that is, this 1,800,000 tons that came from Cuba was purchased by the American refiners at this reduced duty. So the American producer of sugar is competing with the Cuban producer, and the protection which the refiner has is the protection imposed upon his refined product, and that is the point at which this reduction on the duty which I suggest is made, and where I think it ought to have been made years ago.

Mr. BACON. The Senator may be correct, but I will ask him this question: Suppose that all the sugar that comes from any country from which we receive sugar without any duty, and those countries or that country from which we receive sugar at a reduced duty, was produced in the United States, and that we produced all the sugar consumed in the United States except 48,000 tons, and that the 48,000 tons came from Germany, would not that be the controlling rate of duty?

Mr. BRISTOW. If all sugar was refined sugar that would be true, but imported sugar is not refined sugar, and therefore the duty on the sugar that is imported is not $1.90.

Mr. BACON. The Senator then recognizes the general proposition as I state it, but thinks the peculiar conditions—the influence of the refiners of sugar is the influence that makes the condition that the Senator says results from the Cuban——

Mr. BRISTOW. That is my judgment. If sugar was all refined, and we produced here all but 48,000 tons, and we had to import that, the natural tendency of the market price in America would be to reach the foreign price, plus the duty.

Mr. BACON. Does it not always do so?

Mr. BRISTOW. That is the tendency, and it approaches it very nearly, but it does not always do it, as a matter of fact.

So, as I was saying, the protection which the American sugar producer receives is really in fact the Cuban duty, and that is $1.34 instead of $1.90, as it has been heretofore. But this amendment of mine reduces the Cuban duty to approximately $1.20.

Mr. BACON. I suppose the Senator recognizes another thing, and that is that if the sugar that is produced, for instance, in Hawaii, upon which there is no duty, was produced by plants which were owned by the sugar-refining industries of this country, the increased price of those sugars coming from Hawaii resulting from the duty imposed on sugars coming from Germany, for instance, would be that much bonus to the sugar refiners, would it not?

Mr. BRISTOW. If the production of Hawaii was refined; yes; but if unrefined, then the competitor is Cuba, and their profit would be controlled by the Cuban duty and not the German duty.

Mr. BACON. I see the point.

Mr. BRISTOW. But they do not produce refined sugar. They produce raw sugar. Their competitor is Cuba, and the duty that protects them is the Cuban and not the duty on the German sugar.

Mr. BACON. The point I am after is this: So far as Hawaiian sugars are concerned, if the production there were owned and controlled by the sugar industries of the United States, they get the price which the controlling duty, whether it is the Cuban or German import duty, influences and controls?

Mr. BRISTOW. They get the price which the Cuban duty creates.

Mr. BACON. Exactly.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is true.

Mr. BACON. And the fact that we import the Hawaiian sugars free of duty does not decrease the price of sugar in this country to the consumer.

Mr. BRISTOW. Not on the refined sugar. I agree to that. I have so contended for years.

I was very much interested and very much pleased at the criticism which the Senator from Massachusetts made upon the sugar refiners. I think that the American sugar refiners have been a gang of pirates, and I am glad that they will no longer have undue favors after this bill becomes a law, as I hope it will, of the American Government.

The reason I am anxious for the bill as amended to become a law is because we will be receiving the fruits of a legitimate reduction in what I consider excessive tariff duties. A number of us have been fighting here for a good many years contending with Senators belonging to our own party for a reduction of these duties.

I have voted with the Democrats on tariff votes a great many more times than I have voted with the majority of the Republicans, because I have been contending for a reduction in existing duties, and the Democrats have voted with us, as the amendments have usually been amendments that the Republicans who have been contending for lower duties have offered.

Now, I want to say to my Democratic friends that we have an opportunity of getting a substantial reduction in duty on one of the most important, I believe the most important American commodity. I have no doubt, and I do not think anyone here will have doubt, that if this bill passes the Senate and the House accepts it, it will meet the Executive approval and become a law, and if it does we—and in this connection I refer to the progressive Republicans and the Democrats—will get legislation embodying the things we have been voting for now for over three years, and if we want legislation along the lines we have been advocating, then this bill ought to pass, because it means legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that this morning, while I was absent from the Chamber, the Senator from Kansas changed his amendment, and that it was accepted by the Senator from Massachusetts as an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. My amendment, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina, made during his absence, was to strike out the word "thirty-five," in line 2, page 4, of the bill as reported by the majority of the committee, and insert the word "twenty-six."

Mr. SIMMONS. Is that the only change?

Mr. BRISTOW. That is the only change made.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the only change you make in the Lodge bill?

Mr. BRISTOW. In the Lodge bill. That reduced the duty as provided in the Lodge substitute from 1.82½ to 1.60; that is, 7½ cents higher than the amendment was when I introduced it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am asking for information.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood from the Senator, in private conversation, that his original amendment would have reduced the sugar duties upon an ad valorem basis probably about 22 per cent.

Mr. BRISTOW. I never figured that out exactly. It would have reduced the duty from 1.90 to 1.52½. This reduces it from 1.90 to 1.60.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am trying, if I can, not being as familiar as is the Senator from Kansas with the technique of this business, to get at something like the ad valorem of the proposed reduction. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if his original amendment would not have resulted in an ad valorem reduction of somewhere from 20 to 22 per cent?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say that I have never figured it out, but I think, from a conversation with the Senator or somebody else who had figured it out, that is approximately true. I never have figured it from the standpoint of the ad valorem, but I think that is approximately correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that be so, if the original amendment would have reduced it upon that basis from 20 to 22 per cent, how much would the amendment which has been accepted reduce it?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator that I have not figured the ad valorem reduction.

Mr. SIMMONS. Could the Senator approximate it; about how much?

Mr. BRISTOW. I should think if the former was 22 this would be 18 or 19. That would be my guess; about 18 per cent, so I am advised.

Now, as I was saying when interrupted by the Senator from North Carolina, I am anxious that the bill as amended shall become a law, because it gives us legislation and a substantial reduction. It gives what we have been contending for, not so much as our Democratic friends desire, but as much as, in my judgment, it would be safe to make at this time, and it seems to me that it is time we were getting some fruits in this tariff controversy, and we now have the opportunity to get them.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] criticized the provision in the bill as reported by the Senator from Massachusetts which provides for a marking of the package—stamping the name of the manufacturer and the degree of purity. That amendment simply provides that the pure-food law shall apply to bags and barrels of sugar that are put upon the American market and sold to the consumers, and it also provides that this proviso shall not apply to sugar that is being imported for refining. It makes no difference how impure is sugar that is being imported for refining, because the refining takes the impurities out of it and when it is put upon the market it is refined or pure sugar. So I see no objection to that provision.

There is no occasion for sugar to be marked as to its purity if it is immediately going into a refinery. That is a question between the refiner who purchases it and the producer who sells it. But if that refiner purchases it to put it upon the American market unrefined, or if the producer who imports it into this country imports it for the purpose of putting it upon the American market, I see no objection to its being stamped as to the degree of purity, but I think the provision ought to apply to everybody alike.

The objection that has been made to the removal of the Dutch standard is that it would give opportunity for foreign sugar producers to import into the United States impure sugar highly colored by some mechanical process. That has never had any weight upon my mind. I do not think it is practical to color sugar artificially. You can crush large grains of sugar and pulverize them into smaller grains and make them appear whiter than if the crystals were larger, but the sugar is no purer. I have no objection to stamping the purity of the sugar upon barrels or sacks any more than I would object to stamping the degree of purity of any other article upon its container. I have no objection to a refiner's purchasing sugar in bulk to refine without having any stamp on it as to its purity, for that is his business. But if he purchases it to put on the American market in the condition in which he purchases it, without passing it through his refinery, I think he ought to stamp it, the same as anybody else ought to who imports or manufactures sugar.

So I see no objection to this provision of the bill. I do not think it is necessary. Some people think it is. I am perfectly willing that it should go in, because it simply requires that the package be stamped for just what it is, and the barrels and sacks of sugar that are put upon the open market come under the supervision of the pure-food law the same as other commodities do. The only objection I can see is the inconvenience of stamping.

If the refiner has to refine the sugar he purchases before he puts it on the market, we have no interest in what the purity of that sugar is; but if he has to stamp those packages with the degree of purity, the same as other producers, when he buys it and puts it on the market without refining, the public is protected from any dishonesty which he might attempt to practice on the American people.

I do not believe I have anything more to say. I have taken up more time on the sugar question in the last three years than possibly I ought to have taken, and I believe I can be pardoned for saying that I feel very much gratified, after these three years of controversy with my Republican friends, that at last the measures which I have advocated have been accepted by those who at times have radically differed from me, and that these measures I hope are soon to be incorporated into the law and a larger reduction made in the tax upon our sugar consumption. I am glad that my amendment was accepted by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I sincerely trust that the bill as amended will pass the Senate and soon become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to know if I understand exactly what the vote is on. As I understand, the vote is upon the substitute offered by the Senator from Massachusetts as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment as amended on motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I got permission of the Senate yesterday to file the views of the minority, and I desire to do so at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the views of the minority (Rept. No. 763, pt. 2) will be received and printed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, inasmuch as everybody will be called upon to vote on this amendment, I desire that the RECORD shall leave no question as to the motive actuating me.

I am still in favor of a protective tariff that protects. I am not in sympathy with any proposition to reduce the existing tariff on sugar for two reasons—first, that it will cost the Government from seven to ten million dollars in revenue. As I estimate it, it will cost it $9,000,000. Some Senators on this side estimate it at $7,000,000, and I do not know whether any estimate it above $9,000,000 or not.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator refer to the amendment I offered to the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say to the Senator that I figured it out quite carefully, and it is about five and a half million dollars.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have had varying figures submitted to me. I, to the best of my ability, made some figures in regard to it, with the result that in my judgment it would cost the Government about $9,000,000 in revenue. That is an important consideration which would go a long ways with me in determining how I would vote upon this amendment.

Then, again, the reasons that are given for making a reduction by the other side of the Chamber do not appeal to me. Confessedly, according to some of the remarks of Senators on the other side yesterday, their purpose is to clear the way for the creation or substitution of another source of revenue to pay the expenses of the Government. It is proposed by the Democracy—and I will make it broad enough to cover Democrats in and out of Congress—to substitute direct taxation for the system of indirect taxation, if it is taxation, in providing for the revenues of the Government. I am unalterably opposed to making a condition in order that an undesirable condition may be brought about.

Of course it must be admitted that a reduction, whether it be five million or nine million or eleven million, is at the expense of our own producers. It is a fair deduction that if we reduce the duty we increase the imports of sugar or the opportunity to import sugar, and it will exert a pressure upon our own producers to compel them to accept less profit and less favorable conditions of production. I can not bring my mind to accept a proposition that will result in doing that thing.

It is probable that with this amendment adopted the legislation would still fail of enactment into law. If I were to vote for this amendment it would be because I believed it would be futile and that the legislation would fail, and I would vote for it if at all in order to defeat what is, in my judgment, a more dangerous and disastrous piece of legislation, namely, the House bill.

One of the most treasured resources of this Government for the production of revenue for the payment of the expenses of our Government has been the sugar tariff. It has been beneficial not only in protecting our market as it exists to-day, but it has been beneficial in building up the sugar industry in this country from a very small production 14 years ago to a very large production to-day, and an ever-increasing production, not only of sugar, but of the prosperity incident to an enlarged use of our land, our labor, and all that pertains to the growth of that industry.

It is conceded that within a very few years under existing conditions the United States would produce all the sugar it would consume, and as the years come after that would produce a surplus for sale in other markets that would add to the wealth of the people of this country who are interested in the production of sugar, the development of the industries that are dependent upon it, and an enlarged use of the lands of the country.

The State I represent is one of the large sugar-beet producing States of the Union. It has grown within a very few years from the beginning to the existing conditions of production. We have large counties in our State that had no substantial existence prior to the introduction of this industry which are to-day among the largest and most prosperous counties in the State. One of those counties is as large as some States in the Union. I have known it since it was in the primitive condition of sagebrush and cattle ranging. I have seen it developed into a fertile, thickly populated county, with large and growing towns, all because of the advantages offered to the American producer by reason of Republican tariff legislation.

I not only am not willing to strike down that industry, but I am not willing to diminish the prosperity of those people to the extent of a single dollar in response to a cry that comes from nowhere, that has no responsible thing behind it except a political scare based upon a desire to win in political controversy. Outside of the Chambers of Congress there are many millions of people who think upon this question. Heretofore their thoughts have led them to support by overwhelming majorities the party of protection, the party that gave us the tariff under which we now live. I do not believe that those people have changed their minds. I know that no responsible call has come up from them for change in legislation.

In the Republican platform there is a short paragraph suggesting that some duties are too high. It should not have been in a Republican platform. Some of those who were instrumental in making that platform tell me they did not know that it was to be contained therein. But it is there, and the question presented by it is one that seems to be considered of general application. Three days we have sat here considering reductions in the duties upon imports, and there have been found during those three days advocates of reduction in the several schedules that have been under consideration. I wonder when going down the list of schedules we would find one that would be considered an exception to that irresponsible statement that some duties are too high. We have not found one in three days, and perhaps if we were to go down the whole line of schedules we would find some one, perhaps many, admitting that all schedules were too high.

Can that possibly be the condition that exists in the minds of the Republicans of the United States? I do not say in the minds of the Republicans in Congress. I am inquiring as to the condition of the minds of Republicans in the United States. That is a larger question, and one more important to be given consideration than is the question as to the condition of the minds of Senators and Members of either House of Congress.

If the proposition contained in the amendment under consideration is one intended to defeat the enactment of a law placing sugar upon the free list, then if I were to vote for it it would be merely as a weapon used in that great and good cause. There are conditions under which a person might conscientiously vote for an amendment that they would not willingly see enacted into a law. Should I vote for this amendment, I propose that it shall be known here and everywhere that I do not vote for it because I approve of a reduction of the duties and a reduction of the revenue of the country at the expense of legislation providing for a substitute in the production of revenues of such a measure as was considered in this body yesterday. Yesterday the Senate of the United States voted in favor of substituting direct taxation upon the people of our own country for indirect taxation upon the people of other countries.

This is the hour of political madness. Men's minds have been wrought up by the discussion and consideration of questions of Government that are fraught with danger to the stability of our institutions until they seem to have lost sight of the old landmarks and to have broken away from the moorings of safety, tried and found to be safe. I deplore the condition. I do not expect to stem the tide to-day, because it is not the first time in the history of this Nation, or of other nations, that we have been forced to submit for a time to conditions of which we could not approve. Our hope is in the present until that hope is shown to be fruitless and without foundation; but still beyond that we have a further hope and an abiding faith that when the hour of sanity returns to the people the wrongs of to-day will be swept away before the wisdom of to-morrow.

I want it to be understood that if I vote for this amendment it will be only that we may use it as a weapon for the destruction of a greater evil threatened us, should the consideration of this question pass beyond the vote upon the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho permit me? I should like to ask him a question. I understood him to say just a few moments ago that he knew of no duties that were too high. I wish to read him what the President said in his message transmitting the Tariff Board report on wool. He said:

> On cheap and medium grade cloths, the existing rates frequently run to 150 per cent, and on some cheap goods to over 200 per cent.

Would not the Senator consider that too high?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am willing to accept the responsibility for my own judgment and my own act. I believe that every man in the party to which I belong is entitled to his own judgment upon these questions. I would like to believe that the wisdom of the question was to be found in the composite judgment of all Republicans. I am not to be led away or driven away from the doctrine of protection, to which I subscribe, to which I have subscribed during all the years of my responsible life, before the quotation of the opinion of any single man in the party. The Republican Party has many mansions. All Republicans do not dwell in the same house. It is the composite wisdom of the party that constitutes the lodestar that directs my course and not the wisdom of any one man. It must be indorsed and subscribed to by those who constitute the Republican Party.

I have the very highest personal regard for the views of the President of the United States. He speaks as an individual and not as a party. The Congress of the United States speaks more directly than does any man in the party, whatever his position may be. I intend to support loyally in the coming contest the nominee of the Republican Party. I intend to do it without apology or without defense. I have more than one reason for doing so aside from my confidence in the ultimate wisdom of the President of the United States in connection with the representatives of the Republicans of this country. I am not going to question it in this hour, neither am I going to cease to strive for the recognition of the principles that I believe to be sound and true.

There is another great reason why I am going to support the nominee of the Republican party, and that is that it will, I hope, prevent the Democratic party from obtaining the control or assuming the administration or legislation of this country.

That is the greatest evil, in my judgment, that can befall the Americans. I do not expect Senators on the other side to agree with me—that is, not spontaneously, nor do they expect me to agree with their policies, but, Mr. President, anything that will keep the Democratic party out of power is a worthy thing to do, and in this is involved the welfare of the American people.

I heard statements upon this floor yesterday which would indicate that some Members seem never to have discovered the boundaries of the United States or to have learned what the boundary of a country such as ours means. They seem not to understand that it marks not only the geographical line, but the line of interest and the line of rights of the people. Senators who talk about the spirit of brotherly love, unbounded and undivided by geographical lines, are talking poetry and not reason. The American people, a nation distinct from every other nation in individual and personal character, necessity, ambition, and destiny, must not be confused with a country, even though inhabited by a like citizenship that exists under different laws and is governed under different principles.

I would make the boundary of our great country mean something not only upon the map, but in the transactions in the world between men. I would make it mean something to be an American citizen. I would make it stand for something that places the American citizen and his rights above the citizenship of any other country in the world. That is what it is to be an American citizen, entitled to participate in the counsels of the American people, to live under the laws of the American people, that are different in principle and application to the citizens than are the laws of any other country.

For that reason no conditions could arise under which I would advocate or support any proposition of legislation that would place the citizenship of any country upon an equal plane with the citizenship of our own country, either from a patriotic standpoint, a business or a personal standpoint. That is the standard that was set up by the founders of the country. That is the standard that was marked out by the Constitution of the United States. It was the purpose of the founders that we should be a distinct and separate nation, and that our citizenship should stand upon a better and higher plane than that of any other country.

I would never bring into competition with our own citizenship in the struggle for prosperity the citizenship of any other country. The rights of all men equal before the law are not equal in the great field of controversy and struggle. I would give the weakest American citizen higher rights and better protection than I would give the strongest foreigner, whether at home or abroad. I would not allow the most highly skilled and best equipped foreigner to compete at the expense of the less equipped American citizen. We legislate in order that all men can be equal before the law. Then we must give them all an equal opportunity before the law. In enacting tariff legislation we must give the weak the protection that will make him stronger than the strongest foreigner. That is the principle, that is the object, that is the purpose of our Government.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to say that somewhere and somehow I want to vote for free sugar. Whether I shall have the opportunity or not I do not know, but I believe the time has come for free sugar and a free breakfast table to the American people.

I agree thoroughly in many ways with what is expressed by the Senator from Idaho, particularly where he says it means something to be an American citizen. I have no doubt from his standpoint and point of view the Havemeyers, sugar refiners, multimillionaires, of New York, who have robbed this country of millions of dollars, will think so, too.

I think the Senator will agree with me that Henry T. Oxnard is a pretty good authority on the question of sugar beets and sugar raising. It was his testimony that it cost not more than $2.80 a hundred to raise sugar beets. This was in 1898. At that time the sugar content of the American beets was no more than 8 to 9 per cent, and the yield per acre no more than 7 or 8 tons. At the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House in 1909 Mr. Oxnard declared that when we attained the German average of sugar content and yield per acre we could stand against the world without any further assistance from the tariff. It developed before the Hardwick committee that this country had equaled, if not surpassed, the German average, the content of our beets having reached above 15 per cent and the yield per acre 14 tons, while in favorable localities of California, Colorado, Utah, and Michigan there had been as high as 22 per cent content and 20 tons' yield per acre.

If he was right about the cost to produce in 1898, how much more cheaply should his company be able to produce now, under these improved conditions? The Spreckels Beet Sugar Co. of California returned a cost of $2.70 per hundred pounds in the report to the trust, which owns a half interest, of its earnings for 1910. The Hardwick committee, in a unanimous report, placed the average maximum cost of all factories, good, bad, and indifferent, at $3.54 per hundred pounds.

Now, Mr. President, I am satisfied, and it seems to me fair-minded and impartial men must be satisfied, from this testimony that the public has been robbed in order to enrich the sugar refineries of the country, and their greed and avarice have not yet been satisfied. They are asking for more, and the pressure on all sides in legislation is for further privileges.

The Michigan Sugar Co., after sweating the people, paid a stock dividend in 1910 of 35 per cent in addition to regular dividends of 1¾ per cent upon both preferred and common, and transferred $1,025,000 to surplus. The Great Western of Colorado had a surplus of $5,500,000 in 1910, after paying 7 per cent upon $15,000,000 preferred and 5 per cent upon $10,000,000 common stock. It has lately been testified by Chester Morey, president of the latter company, in the suit brought by the Government to dissolve the American Sugar Refining Co., that he and H. O. Havemeyer, to use his term, "cut melons" at the rate of $52.25 per share.

Mr. President, I am unwilling, by my vote, to further swell their dividends, through burdening every breakfast table in the land. No other country in the world would have tolerated such a system of tariff a day. It is robbery pure and simple.

Last year the American Beet Sugar Co. earned $9,000,000, gross, upon a capitalization of $20,000,000. Mr. President, to foster through tariff such results and profits at the expense of the American consumer and toiler is brutal. I can not vote to continue such extortion.

Mr. President, I insist that the sugar-refining companies have reached their limit in fairness and common decency; and when I recall the method only a year or two ago, or less than three years ago, when the great refiners of Brooklyn, N. Y., and of Jersey City were found with their hands in the public purse, in the method of manipulating the scales on the wharves and docks in order to falsify the weight of sugars that came to them, they forfeit all respect and consideration at the hands of a fair people.

I believe the zenith of protection in the sugar schedule has been reached, and I shall vote with all earnestness and with a sense of patriotic duty to give the people of this country free sugar. I am as anxious as is the Senator from Idaho to build up industries, but when industries cease to maintain themselves upon proper lines of business methods, when they simply ask the extra pound of flesh in order that their purse may be better filled with the riches and toils of the people, I say it is not patriotism nor good citizenship to sustain them longer. I shall vote for free sugar if the opportunity shall be given me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina raises the question of a quorum, and the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bailey	Dillingham	Massey	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	du Pont	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Fall	Newlands	Smoot
Bourne	Foster	Overman	Sutherland
Bradley	Gallinger	Page	Swanson
Brandegee	Gronna	Paynter	Thornton
Bristow	Heyburn	Penrose	Townsend
Bryan	Hitchcock	Perkins	Warren
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Poindexter	Watson
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Jones	Reed	Williams
Clapp	La Follette	Root	Works
Crane	Lodge	Sanders
Crawford	McCumber	Shively
Culberson	McLean	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. CHILTON] is absent from the city on account of illness. He, however, is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). As has just been stated, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I transfer the general pair I have with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is unavoidably absent. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHIVELY (when Mr. KERN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS]. I am authorized to say that were he present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I understand he is absent. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is absent from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when Mr. RICHARDSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] is absent from the city. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present and free to vote, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. However, under the transfer as stated by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

I desire also to state that my colleague [Mr. LIPPITT] is unavoidably detained from the Senate and is paired. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER. I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN. My colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] is absent from the Senate and is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making the same announcement that has just been made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. SHIVELY. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. I am authorized to say that if the senior Senator from Maryland were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am authorized to announce that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. If the Senator from Oklahoma were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am authorized to announce the pair existing between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. I make this announcement for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—37.

Borah	Dillingham	Massey	Smoot
Bourne	du Pont	McCumber	Stephenson
Brandegee	Fall	McLean	Sutherland

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. Is the bill now in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. And the amendment concurred in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not as yet. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following section:

That the revenue derived from the special excise tax imposed by the act entitled "An act to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations to persons and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special excise tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships" shall constitute a special fund in the Treasury to be applied to making up any deficit in existing revenue caused by a reduction of customs duties, and any surplus derived from such excise tax above the amount necessary to make up such deficit shall be reserved and applied to the regulation of the navigable rivers, including the prevention of and protection against floods, and the improvement of post and interstate roads in cooperation with the States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in in the Senate. The Chair hears none.

Mr. BACON. I understand if the amendment is concurred in that that will practically cut off amendments to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would not think so.

Mr. BACON. There is no objection to that, if the Chair will so rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hold that any amendment to the substitute will be in order in the Senate.

The question is upon the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, my understanding is that the bills which have heretofore passed the other House reducing customs duties, outside of the sugar bill, will produce a deficit in the revenue of about $16,000,000. I understand that whilst the free-sugar bill as it passed the House makes a reduction of about $53,000,000 more, that the reduction caused by the Lodge substitute, which will probably pass the Senate, will be about $16,000,000. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether that is correct?

Mr. LODGE. That this bill will do that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. So I understand.

Mr. LODGE. It is estimated that this bill, as it now stands, would reduce the revenue about five and a half million dollars.

Mr. NEWLANDS. All these bills united, then, will reduce the revenue a little over $20,000,000. We have passed an excise tax bill which, if it becomes a law, will probably raise $60,000,000, and our purpose in passing that bill was to make up any deficit caused by a reduction in customs duties. The intention of the Democratic Party is to gradually transfer a portion of the great burden of taxation now imposed upon consumption to wealth, such transfer to be accomplished as the customs duties are reduced. Thus as the burden on consumption is diminished the burden on wealth is to be increased. Naturally that will be a moderate and slow process, inasmuch as the Democratic Party expects to continue to obtain a very considerable portion of the national revenue from customs duties.

Mr. President, the situation then will be this: We will have a revenue of $60,000,000 from the excise tax to apply to a reduction in customs duties of a little over $20,000,000. The purpose of my amendment is to guard against employing that money in mere administration, in enlarging the expenses of administration, in, perhaps, wasteful administration. The purpose is to create in the Treasury a fund so that this money derived from wealth shall be applied either to a reduction of customs duties or to the permanently substantial and constructive work of the Nation.

We shall need additional moneys for the constructive work upon which the Government is about to enter. Public opinion is now formed with reference to the development of our waterways as instrumentalities of commerce and not as mere instrumentalities for the waste of public money. Public opinion is demanding continuous work, speedy work, and a large fund for that purpose—at least $50,000,000 annually for the next 10 years. Public opinion has also determined upon taking the public buildings out of the spoils system and putting them upon the merit system as our civil service has been.

In addition to river development, public opinion is demanding the expenditure by the National Government of a considerable portion of the public funds in post and interstate roads in cooperation with the States. Doubtless before long a bureau of architecture or a board of public works will be organized which, under the advice and with the aid of the best architects, artists, engineers, and constructors of the country, will enter upon a scheme of public buildings adapted to the use and the necessities of the public in the various localities, and doubtless that work will be conducted continuously and without the spasmodic breaks in legislation of which we have had experience in the past. There will be ample need, therefore, of taxing wealth in order to take care of this constructive work, apart from any question of supplying any deficit in the revenue caused by a reduction of customs duties. We will find that the wealth of the country will be less disposed to resist placing an additional burden upon them if they find that the money derived from the tax is to be applied to some substantial and useful purpose. So, Mr. President, in view of these facts, I ask for the adoption of the amendment, and I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, upon which he demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

That on the 1st day of January, 1913, a reduction of 10 per cent shall be made in the duties now imposed by law on articles imported into the United States from foreign countries, and that on the 1st day of January of each year thereafter for the period of four years a further reduction of 5 per cent shall be made on such duties until a total reduction of 30 per cent in such duties shall be made: Provided, however, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles which have been specifically fixed by law at this session of Congress or shall be hereafter specifically fixed by law: And provided further, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles the importations of which during the previous fiscal year have equaled one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I suggest to the Senator that, since we will import about two and one-half million tons of sugar and only produce about 800,000 tons, his amendment is wholly inapplicable to this bill.

Mr. CLAPP. The provisions of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada do not apply to any duties fixed at this session.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course, Mr. President, this amendment will not apply to sugar, because sugar is an article of which more than one-tenth of the total domestic consumption is imported from abroad. The purpose of the amendment is to confine the reduction by a graduated scale only to duties that are in a greater or less degree prohibitory of importations, and from which no adequate revenue is at present derived. The purpose is to bring every item in our tariff law gradually to a revenue basis. It is not intended to prevent special legislation upon gross abuses such as now exist with reference to the sugar tariff. We can legislate, as we are about to do, definitely and specifically with reference to such excessive duties as have assumed the form of an abuse of the taxing power.

This amendment, I admit, will not reach adequately such extortionate duties as that imposed on sugar, but, on the other hand, it does not prevent action upon such extortionate duties. Cotemporaneous with the reduction which will take place under this amendment, action can be taken by Congress upon each one of the great abuses that now exist under the tariff act, and meanwhile, if such action is not taken, such excessive and extortionate duties will be at least reduced within the period of five years 30 per cent by the action of this amendment.

Mr. President, the reason I urge this amendment now is because it is probable that the only revenue bill that will pass at this session of Congress and be signed is the one now pending. The President of the United States can not, in my judgment, refuse to sign a bill which reduces a duty of nearly 100 per cent only a moderate amount. It is extremely probable that all the other bills which we will pass will be vetoed. In that event, if this bill passes and is signed by the President, accompanying it should go this amendment making a gradual and substantial reduction in the tariff during the next five years and operating automatically without further legislation.

I have already suggested, Mr. President, that after four years of tariff discussion, after all the parties have declared themselves for tariff reduction, after each party to legislation, the House, the Senate, and the President, has declared in favor of reduction, we are about to adjourn without any substantial reduction in tariff duties. I can imagine no more lamentable indictment of representative government than such a contingency. We can not wonder that the people will lose confidence in their Representatives if they ascertain that the three parties entitled to participate in legislation, all agreeing that some reduction should be made, are unable to agree upon any reduction; and so far as I am concerned, I am not ready to stand in that position before the people of the United States without protest.

This amendment is objected to by some on this side of the House because it was what I have termed a "brake." Some Senators on this side have indicated to me that they would sustain the amendment if I would take off this brake. In other words, they want an absolute reduction of 30 per cent provided for, without guarding against any contingency of large importations which may endanger American industries. Let me say to them that they are more scrupulous, in my judgment, than the great party assembled at Baltimore was, for that party has declared that this reduction toward an ultimate tariff for revenue will be accomplished without injury to or destruction of any legitimate American industry.

Now, will such injury and destruction come? None will come except through excessive importations—through a flood of importations.

Many of us believe that the fear of these importations is an exaggerated one. I believe it is; but there is no question about it that in previous elections the imagination of the voters has been impressed by the fear of radical tariff reduction, and the vast body of the employees in the protected industries, naturally affiliated with the Democracy in sympathy, have been persuaded by their employers to vote against the Democratic ticket and for the Republican ticket by reason of such alarm.

Then, again, it will be impossible to get any Republican support for this amendment unless such a brake is applied, for Republican support is necessary to pass it, and the Republican stands for protection. He stands candidly for the protection of American industries. Whilst some, and perhaps all of them, desire a reduction in the tariff, they want to stop short of the point where such a reduction will imperil or destroy an American industry. And so I found upon inquiry amongst my Republican friends that they will not support an amendment making a gradual reduction unless it also provides that where you reach the importing level, when the duty is changed from a prohibitory or a highly protective duty into a revenue duty, at that point the reduction shall cease until at least the judgment of Congress shall be taken upon the subject. It seems to me, judging from their standpoint, that that is a rational demand.

So we find that Republican principles require such a brake, and the Democratic platform in its platform declaration justifies it. This brake is not an indorsement of the protective principle by Democrats. It is simply a recognition of the fact which our platform recognizes that the industries of the country have unfortunately become adjusted to a high protective tariff, and that in the process of readjustment we should be so moderate in our movements as not to destroy or impair the industries that are the creation of years, that have been built up upon the faith of the existing law, for which Congress is responsible and for which the people themselves are responsible, and that whatever may have been the exactions, whatever may have been the oppressions under the law, no vindictive, no compensatory action for past wrongs is justified.

Mr. President, I hope that this amendment will receive the support of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I know the hour is late, and the Senate is impatient to have a vote upon this bill, but I am going to put on the record of the body a protest against the prevailing method of tariff revision, as I have often done before, and as other Senators in their experience in the House placed on the record theirs when they were Members of that body.

That the American people are agreed that we shall protect our industries I think goes without saying, and whether you call it a protective tariff or apply the appellation of a revenue tariff, it makes little difference, so long as it sufficiently protects. I believe in calling it a protective tariff, for this reason: If a man stands for protection and goes too high, his motive is readily detected, while if he stands assumedly for revenue he may go higher than he ought to and there is no method of detecting his motive. So, Mr. President, whether we call it a protective tariff or a revenue tariff, in the last analysis the subject reaches its settlement at the customhouse. The question of how much importation, as against our own products, must be finally settled by the result at the customhouse.

While the amendment of the Senator from Nevada may not have been worked out to its last analysis and refinement, I believe it is a start in the right direction. I have taken his amendment and gone over the subject until I am thoroughly satisfied that if the amendment went into operation it could at least do no harm to any American industry.

Mr. President, there is another reason why I am going to support the Senator's amendment. If it were not for the misery that comes to this country from panics, it would be utterly grotesque—the picture of a great Nation like ours alternating from panic to monopoly and back from monopoly to panic again through the radical changes to the extremes of tariff. The idea that we must swing the pendulum ever so far one way or the other as to produce a reaction will never bring about that stability in the subject of customs which ought to be established finally in this country, and established upon a reasonable unit alone relieve us of the effect of going from one extreme to the other.

I believe there is a great deal of unnecessary hysteria over this subject, and yet if hysteria produces on the one hand a panic or on the other a reaction which carries protection to the extreme of monopoly again resulting in a reaction to the other extreme, the fact of the panic or the fact of the monopoly is just as absolutely a fact, although it is a psychological condition or a condition of hysteria which produces it.

Now, Mr. President, I believe and I claim no originality in this suggestion; it was embodied in a bill offered in the House some years ago by the Senator who now very ably represents Michigan in this body, Mr. TOWNSEND, and by the senior Senator from Washington, Mr. JONES, three years ago in the Senate—I believe that sooner or later the American people are going to force us to stop making light of men and measures because they may be novel or supported only by a few, and will compel Congress to adopt a system of dealing with the tariff that will relieve it from this extreme of high tariff, then a reaction in favor of low tariff to the point of business depression, and then a swing upward again to monopoly.

We have established an Interstate Commerce Commission. Of course Congress can not delegate authority to fix rates, but Congress can prescribe a rule for railroad rates, and authorize a commission to ascertain the facts and apply the rule, and that is the spirit of our Interstate Commerce Commission and the law under which it acts. There the rule is a shadowy one. The rule is that the rate must be reasonable. It is difficult to ascertain. It is difficult to lay down. It is difficult to define, and it is somewhat shadowy, but answers the constitutional requirement that Congress must lay down a rule for the commission to act under.

I understake to say there is not a legal proposition involved in the creation of a Tariff Commission and the establishment by Congress of a rule for tariffs, and leaving to that commission the ascertainment of the facts and the application of the rule. That is not involved in that law under which we created an Interstate Commerce Commission and laid down a rule for the rate, and left it to the commission to ascertain the facts and apply the rule. While it would require more care to fix the rule, having regard to revenue and protection, yet the rule itself could be more clearly defined in regard to tariff rates than in regard to railroad rates.

I believe the time will come when the sentiment of the American people will drive Congress—if Congress can not go of its own motion—to that point where it will prescribe a rule for the tariff, create a commission, and leave it to that commission to ascertain and apply the rule.

That because the duty, for instance, upon mercerized cotton or upon any particular article is too high or too low 90,000,000 people should be thrown into the hysteria of a general tariff revision is to my mind absolutely absurd. That is a question which under this plan of a commission and this plan of a law could be settled by that commission, while the other great activities of this country could go on just as to-day a railroad rate from St. Paul to Spokane, for instance, can be settled and the other transportation activities of this country go on.

I believe that time is coming, and believing that the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is a step in that direction, I for one shall most heartily and cheerfully support it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, and the Chair declared the amendment rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Some Senators around me doubt whether there were not sufficient hands up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again ask those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays to raise their hands. [After a count.] Nine have seconded the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There are Senators here seconding it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not one-fifth.

Mr. LODGE. Not one-fifth, or anything like it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is rejected. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS. By direction of the minority members of the Committee on Finance, I offer the following amendment as a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That on and after the day six months after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid the rates of duty which are prescribed in the paragraphs of this act upon the articles hereinafter enumerated, when imported from any foreign country into the United States, or into any of their possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), and the said paragraphs and sections shall constitute and be a substitute for paragraphs 216 to 219, inclusive, of section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

1. Sugar, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 75 degrees, sixty-three one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound, and for every additional degree shown by the polariscope test, twenty-four one-thousandths of 1 cent per pound additional, and fractions of a degree in proportion; molasses testing not above 40 degrees, 12 per cent ad valorem; testing above 40 degrees and not above 56 degrees, 1.8 cents per gallon; testing above 56 degrees, 3.6 cents per gallon; sugar drainings and sugar sweepings shall be subject to duty as molasses or sugar, as the case may be, according to the polariscope test: Provided, That sugar imported from the Republic of Cuba, being a product of the soil or industry of the Republic of Cuba, shall be admitted into the United States at a reduction of duty equal to 20 per cent of the rate of duty hereinbefore provided for.

2. Maple sugar and maple sirup, 2.6 cents per pound; glucose or grape sugar, 1 cent per pound; sugar cane in its natural state, or unmanufactured, 17 per cent ad valorem.

3. Saccharine, 65 cents per pound.

4. Sugar candy and all confectionery not specially provided for in this act, or in the first section of the act cited for amendment, valued at 15 cents per pound or less, and sugars after being refined, when tinctured, colored, or in any way adulterated, 2.6 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 15 cents per pound, 33⅓ per cent ad valorem. The weight and the value of the immediate coverings, other than the outer packing case or other coverings, shall be included in the dutiable weight and the value of the merchandise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire simply to say that the substitute which I have offered on the part of the minority members of the Finance Committee upon an ad valorem basis reduces the present duty upon sugar 33⅓ per cent. The amount of money which will be saved by the taxpayers if this amendment is adopted, upon the basis of the importations of 1910, according to a statement furnished the minority members of the committee by an expert in the Treasury Department, will be $17,292,945.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I withhold my vote because of a pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when the name of Mr. CLARK of Wyoming was called). I again announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CLARK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. CULLOM (when has name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present and I was allowed to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD (when Mr. GAMBLE's name was called). I again announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and will allow this announcement to stand during the other roll calls on this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is absent from the city and under the transfer just made he is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], and transfer it to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when Mr. PERCY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PERCY] is necessarily absent on business. He is paired, but if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer it to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer that I did on the previous vote, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). I make the same announcement that I did on the previous vote in regard to my colleague and myself. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay," and if my colleague were present and free to vote, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. STONE] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I will state that the Senator from Missouri is necessarily absent from the city.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with whom I have a pair not having voted, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. How am I recorded, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is recorded in the negative.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I make the same announcement that I did on the last roll call with respect to the transfer of that pair, and will let my vote stand.

Mr. BRADLEY. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and withhold my vote. I would vote "nay," if it were not for the pair.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I again announce that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. If the Senator from Oklahoma were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Martin, Va.	Reed	Swanson

Chilton	Gamble	O'Gorman	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Gardner	Oliver	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Owen
Culberson	Guggenheim	Paynter

So the substitute offered by Mr. SIMMONS was rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to ask permission to incorporate in the RECORD some tables I quoted from during my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act there shall be a duty of $2 per ton paid on the paper described in section 2 of said act.

Mr. BACON. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I had no information that the matter was going to be brought up and I have had no opportunity to prepare it. I wish to offer the same amendment that I offered to a similar amendment yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the proviso of the amendment and in lieu insert:

Except so far as the same concern the provisions of said act relating to pulp wood, wood pulp, or print paper.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say one word about this matter. I have heard some Senators on the other side of the Chamber speak in regard to the reciprocity law as a great menace to some of the industries of this country. I have heard Senators speak most earnestly on that subject and advocate it with all the eloquence and all the vehemence, I might say, of manner which their sincerity and conviction would prompt, and yet on yesterday, when the opportunity was offered to practically do away with all the part of the reciprocity law which did furnish such a menace, such Senators voted against the amendment which would bring about that state of affairs.

Mr. President, as I have understood it, the part of the reciprocity bill which has excited the opposition of Senators—and I will be free to say that no one could criticize them for their opposition to it from their point of view and such dire and injurious effect as they thought would result from the operation of the law—the part of the law, I repeat, which I have understood was the part which furnished the menace which excited their opposition was the part of the law which, when agreed to by Canada, if it should ever do so, would afford the opportunity for the reciprocal interchange, according to the terms of that bill, of the products of Canada and the products of the United States. It has been most earnestly and most eloquently presented within the last few days that there was this menace, which menace might be a reality at any time when Canada should see fit to accede to our proposal for reciprocity; a menace so grave and serious that we should hasten to repeal the law.

Mr. President, I assume that the purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is to get rid of that part of the reciprocity pact, if I may so call it, which would give the opportunity for this interchange of products, Canadian and American. The amendment which I have offered to the amendment of the Senator does not interfere in any manner with the repeal of so much of that law as relates to reciprocity. On the contrary my amendment leaves untouched so much of the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota as relates in any manner to reciprocity. My amendment only seeks to retain so much of that reciprocity law as refers to wood pulp and wood connected with that class of products, and print paper. Nobody will say there is any menace in that part relating to wood pulp and print paper which actuates and prompts the earnest opposition of those who object to the reciprocity law. If the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is adopted with my amendment and it becomes law every particle of the reciprocity law which relates to the reciprocal interchange of Canadian and American products free or at reduced rates of duty will be absolutely repealed, and that will be the end of the law. I should like to know, Mr. President, if that is so, why we should hesitate with it. Why do not those who are opposed to the reciprocity law accept my amendment and repeal the law at once? Why trifle with it longer?

I said yesterday, when a similar amendment was proposed, that, so far as I was concerned—I had not then the opportunity to consult with my colleague—if this amendment were adopted I would join Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber in the effort to forever rid ourselves of this menace, as the Senators who are opposed to the reciprocity pact consider it, to the industries of this country in the proposed reciprocal interchange of Canadian and American products. When the vote was taken the large majority of Senators on this side voted that way, and if they were met with a proper spirit on the other side they would do so again, and with an increased majority.

I want to say that while I am not a protectionist, I recognize the foundation upon which Senators have rested their apprehension in regard to the effect of this law as it might affect the industries of the people along the Canadian border or in the neighboring States. I myself do not like the idea of a law resting upon our statute books which those we sought to have reciprocal relations with have repudiated, and I am ready to join with them in its repeal; and I know the majority of Senators on this side are ready to join with them in the repeal of every part of that law which provides for reciprocal interchange of Canadian and American products.

Mr. President, the two Houses of Congress are not now of the same political complexion; there are differences between them; but here is an opportunity which I honestly believe is one which will enable them to get together on this important matter. If Senators are in earnest when they say they believe this reciprocity law is a menace to the industries of the country, and that it is so great a menace that at every opportunity which offers this amendment repealing it is to be presented for action, why will Senators now hesitate to meet us upon this proposition when we present it and say to them that we are ready to join with them in wiping out this reciprocal arrangement?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BACON. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to be put right upon this matter if I am wrong with regard to my understanding of the situation or the facts. Does the Senator from Georgia understand that if the amendment proposed yesterday from this side, and now again proposed, were to become a law the duty upon print paper would be $2 per ton from the whole world?

Mr. BACON. I am not prepared to go into that matter. I confess I have not looked at the details of the law recently. But the Senator will pardon me; I shall not elaborate what I said on yesterday, that so far as that part of it is concerned, if there is any change needed it can be dealt with at another time. However, the pressing and the important matter, one which agitates Senators and prompts them to propose this amendment as one which disturbs the people on our northern border, is not the matter connected with wood pulp or print paper. They are not disturbed about wood pulp or print paper, and we are ready to join with you and absolutely and finally repeal every part of this reciprocity law except the part which relates to wood pulp and print paper. Now we have the opportunity to get rid of it. The question as to the particular rate of duty which shall remain on wood pulp should not stand in the way of getting rid of it if it is a matter of such importance as Senators on the other side and some on this side, for that matter, have heretofore recognized it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I supposed the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia related only to section 2, which concerns paper and the material out of which paper is made. We are getting now from a little part of Canada—I do not know just how much—free paper, free wood pulp, but the rest of the world is paying $3.75 and $6 a ton for these same materials. Now, does the Senator from Georgia think that it is an approach toward a revision of the tariff and a reduction of duties to maintain free paper from a small part of Canada rather than to get $2 per ton on the same material from the whole world and from a large part of Canada, as I understand it, as well?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I repeat, the Senator may be right about that and his inquiry may be a most pertinent one to be considered at another time. But here is a simple question, and will you stop on details of that kind? If the general importance of the riddance of ourselves of this reciprocity law is of such magnitude as has heretofore been represented, will you now stop on a question of detail as to what will remain of this law concerning only wood pulp and print paper? If you have the opportunity, as I assure the Senators I have the utmost confidence they have the opportunity, by joining with us in the adoption of this amendment and leaving the question as to the regulation of those details as to wood pulp and print paper for future settlement, ought we not to act now and get rid of this matter of that reciprocity agreement?

Mr. President, I am in favor of getting rid of it. I am in favor of getting rid of it because we have done our part. Canada has refused it, and I do not want a law remaining upon the statute books in which we are in any such position.

Mr. President, there are a great many thing that could be said upon this subject, but I want to appeal to Senators. Are you in earnest in the desire to get rid of this reciprocity pact, which you say is a menace; which may become not only a menace, but an actuality, whenever Canada sees proper to consent to it? If you are in earnest, I have the utmost confidence that here is the opportunity to get rid of every feature of that reciprocity agreement which furnishes the menace which you fear and which you wish to destroy. Suppose Senators refuse to take advantage of this opportunity now presented and in the meantime Canada should make the mach-dreaded reciprocity a living actuality by passing a law agreeing to the reciprocity. What would Senators then say to their constituents who are demanding its repeal by Congress?

Mr. President, it is said that the question of the annexation of Canada had a good deal to do with the support of this measure by some people in the United States and the opposition to it by some people in Canada. I want to say for myself, Mr. President, and I want to say it in this presence, and I want to say it where it can reach beyond our borders, that I do not believe the people of the United States want the annexation of Canada. I want to say for myself that if the opportunity were furnished me this afternoon to acquire Canada I would vote in the negative. I do not want Canada. I confess the time was in years gone by when I had a feeling that I should have liked for our Government to be extended over a people similar to ourselves in language, in race, and in laws, but I have had occasion to absolutely and utterly change my mind on that subject. I do not believe it is to the interest of the people of the United States ever to have Canada as a part of this Government, and so far as I am concerned every power that is in me would be exercised against it if there was an issue raised on this subject.

I am against it, Mr. President, for two reasons. In the first place, I think this country is big enough. If the essential features of our dual system of government could be preserved as originally designed, the Union could with safety be extended to include an indefinite number of States, each in the exercise of its proper power of local self-government; but if the progress and the tendency toward concentration of all powers in a central government is to increase, it is of the utmost importance that it should grow no larger than it is now. The laws which are suitable to one part of a large country will be unsuited to the local conditions of a distant part of the same country. I will not elaborate that.

But I have another reason, which is a stronger reason with me than that. It is that the people of Canada are a people who, while springing from the same race as ourselves, a people having our language, in a measure our laws, are a people utterly out of sympathy with the nature and the character of the institutions of this Government. They have no possible sympathy with the nature of our Government. They have been trained in a different school of politics. When I say politics I am not referring to party politics; I am referring to governmental policies, to governmental structure, entirely different divisions with altogether different functions and resting upon altogether different principles of the departments of the Government. I believe it would be utterly unsafe to the preservation of our institutions, with our dual system of government, of which they know nothing and with which they have no sympathy, and with our separate divisions of governmental powers, of which they know still less, to incorporate them as a part of our Government.

While I will not take the time of the Senate to discuss this question now, I want to say, in order that our action might not be misunderstood, I did vote for the reciprocity agreement. It is not necessary for me now to state what the reasons or motives were that actuated me in doing so, but I am as earnestly to-day in favor of the repeal of the law as any man who sits on the other side of the Chamber.

I am in favor of it for two reasons. In the first place, I believe that the large majority of people in the tier of States on our northern border, who would be most directly affected by it, are unalterably opposed to it, and I think they are the people whose wishes should be considered in this matter.

In the next place, I am opposed to it because Canada itself has repudiated it, and it is not becoming in us to allow a law to stand upon the statute books which they have declined to avail themselves of and which they will have the opportunity to avail themselves of, if it remains there, whenever they see fit to do so.

Now, Mr. President, let us leave party politics out of this matter. Here is a difference between us, and here is an opportunity to reconcile that difference, and in reconciling it to secure everything of material import which prompts Senators on the other side of the Chamber to favor the repeal of the reciprocity law.

I am in earnest about it, Mr. President, because I think it is important. I do not wish the law to stand upon the statute books when there is an opportunity, as the Senator from Michigan eloquently and forcibly presented to the Senate the other day, for them at their own sweet will to say to us what shall be the law or shall not be the law, according as they may choose to have it one way or the other.

I am ready, Mr. President, not only here, now, to vote for the repeal of so much of that law as relates to the reciprocal interchange of products, but I am ready to say I am opposed to it hereafter. Why? Because I have changed my views as to the advantages to be derived therefrom? No; but because, as stated, I believe I am convinced that the people all along that northern tier of States, who would be most directly affected by it, are opposed to it and believe that it would be a great injury to them, and I think their wishes should be consulted in the matter regardless of party.

Mr. President, I hope this amendment to the amendment will be adopted and that we may get rid of this excrescence of a reciprocity law, for such it is, on our statute books.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, unlike the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], I do not object to Canadian annexation. They are a very good class of people; they have an excellent country, and I would be very glad to have both the people and the country a part of the United States. But, Mr. President, when I make them a part of the United States I want their allegiance. I want to bring them in under the American flag, and not under a foreign flag. I do not want to give them all of the American opportunities, and at the same time have a foreign allegiance. I do not want to give them the complete opportunities of our better markets, and at the same time impose upon them no obligations to support the country by taxation or in time of war.

I differ entirely with the Senator from Georgia as to the benefits that might be derived had we all that vast territory and that excellent population to add to our own. They are law-abiding citizens; their history is practically the same as ours; their institutions are practically the same as ours; their idea of law and order is certainly as good as ours. With those qualifications they would make excellent American citizens, and with their added territory we would certainly have the accession of a section of country that would for a hundred years, if not longer, banish the bogy of our not being able to produce sufficient food products for the American people.

But, Mr. President, that is neither here nor there at the present time. I agree with the Senator that all of the people in the northern section of the United States are opposed to the Canadian reciprocity law, and we ought to get rid of it. A year ago we extended the hand of reciprocity across the border line to the Canadian people. They refused to grasp the proffered hand, and it is still extending there, waiting until the time arrives when they may see fit to meet us. It does not seem to me that that comports with the dignity of a great nation. The Canadians having once rejected the proposed agreement, we ought to withdraw it now, and not wait until they get ready to determine whether they will change their mind and accept the propositions which have been made to them.

As to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, I will say that some time ago a committee was appointed to investigate the question of the production of paper and wood pulp and what would be a proper duty for those articles. That committee made what I presume it considered a very thorough investigation, and, if I remember rightly, it reported as a proper rate of duty to be imposed upon print paper $2 a ton. Many Senators in the Senate of 1909 thought that was too low, and a higher duty was imposed; but I have heard no one claim that, taking all the importations and considering all the matters which would affect the trade, a duty of $2 per ton ought not to be levied. That being the case there has been inserted in this amendment just what the committee referred to recommended.

Personally I should be willing, if I could accomplish that, to repeal the reciprocity offer with everything that was connected with it. Part of that agreement went into effect without any action on the part of Canada; and I would say that it would be perfectly proper to withdraw that; but that would bring up again the question of what a great many considered an excessive rate upon print paper, wood pulp, and so forth, and I would prefer to avoid that.

Mr. President, I want to say a word further. If it were proper to adopt this amendment two weeks ago, as it is written here to-day, it is proper to adopt it to-day in that form. If it were proper to adopt it yesterday, it was equally proper, in my opinion, to attach it day before yesterday. I do not know that there has been any change in the conditions between yesterday and to-day that would justify our reversing our vote upon that proposition. It ought to pass.

Senators argued here the other day that they did not wish to place the amendment upon the bill which we had before us at that time because some thought it would jeopardize the bill; and others argued that we had already placed it upon one bill, and that we had better wait to see what would be done with it; but, Mr. President, the matter is pressing and ought to be disposed of. I would sooner vote directly upon a bill specifically repealing the reciprocity law, if I thought I could get it through both Houses, but I am very doubtful if we would have a right under the Constitution to originate in the Senate a bill repealing the reciprocity law, certainly not so far as it had already become effective. That being the case, I want to deal with it in the only way in which it can be dealt with, and I do not want to take any chance. If there is any bill that may possibly become a law during this session upon which we can attach this repeal, I am in favor of attaching it. If the Senator would withdraw his amendment so that we might place the amendment on this bill as we did upon the other bills, I should be perfectly willing that the matter should go to conference, and, of course, the conferees can modify it if after consideration they think they stand a better chance of getting it through both Houses in modified form; but I do insist that we ought to attach a repealing provision as an amendment to every bill that comes over from the other House for the raising of revenue. If the House would send over a bill that dealt with the question of reciprocity alone, I would not then ask that it be attached to any other bill, but, as I can not do that, I hope that it will be placed upon this bill as an amendment and go to conference.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say a few words in response to what the Senator from North Dakota has said. So far as the people of Canada are concerned, I certainly do not think anything I said reflected upon their character.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from North Dakota pays a tribute to the people of Canada, every word of which I will echo. What I said had no relation to their character, their intelligence, or their desirability in every way as neighbors. What I said related simply to two features; one was that I thought it was unwise to extend the size of this Government, though I am willing to correct a few border lines that ought to be straightened or extended in some instances; and the other was, that the Canadian people, from their political education, were not properly fitted to take part with us in the support, the maintenance, of our Government and the carrying on and development of our institutions.

I want to say, Mr. President, that my final conclusion upon that subject was largely confirmed by an article which I read last year in September or October from one of the leading newspapers published in Toronto. It was published after the vote in Canada on the reciprocity question and was therefore not written to influence that election. I have no doubt it reflected the views of the people of Canada. I can not now recall the name of the paper, but I wish I had it here that I might read the article to the Senate, in which there was a general assault upon the political institutions and form of government of the United States. That is not a little paper, but it is one of the principal papers in Canada.

There was a general assault upon our form of Government, upon our method of administration, drawing the contrast between the features of this Government and the features of the Government of Great Britain which have been so closely copied by the Government of Canada, and showing such an utterly radical disagreement with the recognized ideas and policies of our institutions that the idea which I had previously conceived along the same line before that as to the governmental views and prejudices of the people of Canada was largely accentuated and intensified. Of course the utterances of one newspaper could not alone influence my conclusions on so grave a subject, but my previous personal observations and information received through others caused me to recognize and believe the views expressed in that article reflected what are really the views of the larger part of the people of Canada. If so, it is to our interest that they remain on the outside of our northern boundary, and, so far as I am concerned, I hope they will continue to be our good, friendly neighbors, and never a part of us.

I am satisfied, Mr. President, that the political education of that people has unfitted them as a people to come in and be a part of this Government and to be in sympathy with and promotive of the development of our institutions under our peculiar Government, founded upon the lines laid down in the Constitution of the United States.

I believe, Mr. President, that their differences with us on those lines go to an extent that amount to a prejudice which it would take generations ever to reconcile or to eradicate. For that reason I hope never to see the day when Canada will become a part of the United States. Unless I should most radically change my view, if the issue were raised and depended upon my single vote, she would certainly not be permitted to become a part of our sisterhood of States.

But, Mr. President, to come immediately to the question of reciprocity, the question of what we shall do to-day. The Senator speaks in earnest terms of the utmost importance that the reciprocity pact shall be abrogated so far as we are concerned; that our proposition for a reciprocity pact with Canada which has not been accepted should be recalled and the law upon which it is based should be repealed. I repeat, Mr. President, that every part of that proposed pact and every part of that law which is so objectionable and distasteful to the people on the northern border will be repealed if the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is adopted with the amendment which I have proposed to it.

The Senator says a provision repealing the reciprocity law should be attached to every bill, but does the Senator wish to attach it in a way to accomplish no result, or does he wish the accomplishment of the great result of the repeal of that law? The Senator knows by the fact that such an amendment has been attached to a bill which has gone to the other House and to which the House will not agree. The Senator has every reason to know that so long as it stands in that shape, while the Senate may put it on every bill it is not going to pass; and the Senator has every reason to believe that if the amendment repealing the reciprocity law is put on with the amendment which I have proposed—and such an amendment will accomplish all that is desired in repealing the reciprocity law—it will pass and be agreed to and become law. Now, what is the proper course, if the repeal of the reciprocity law is the real purpose?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me to ask a question, is there a greater probability of the amendment passing the House if it repeals all of the reciprocity agreement, leaving the duty on print paper at $3.75 per ton?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not prepared to go into details as to the rates of duty upon print paper.

Mr. McCUMBER. But does not the Senator agree that if the reciprocity law is repealed as a whole it reinstates the old duty of $3.75 per ton?

Mr. BACON. I mean to say that the Democrats are in favor of the retention, for the present at least, subject to future changes whenever it shall be shown that they are proper to be made, of that part of the reciprocity law which relates to wood pulp and print paper. I mean to say that if you will remove that from the contention at the present time, I have the utmost confidence that a provision repealing the other features of the reciprocity law can receive the support of both branches of Congress, and I have the same confidence that unless that is done it will not receive the support of Congress. If it is a matter of great, prime importance that the part of the reciprocity law which relates to the reciprocal interchange of products shall be repealed and there is an opportunity to do it and Senators will not avail themselves of that opportunity, upon whom rests the responsibility?

I want to say to Senators now that, unless we are disappointed as to the political control of this country in the near future, in my opinion, the reciprocity law will be repealed by the next Congress along the lines proposed by my amendment, and that Senators on the other side now have the opportunity to join in. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned—and I know I echo the feelings of a great many others—if Senators on the other side maintain their opposition to the repeal of the reciprocity law with the restriction which is suggested by my amendment, the time is not far away, if our anticipations are realized, when we intend to repeal it along those lines. I say we intend to repeal it—I judge so from what Senators and Representatives have said to me—and if we now give you an opportunity to join with us in accomplishing that result, and you will not now accept it, the responsibility is upon you; and when it is done hereafter by ourselves, when we have the power without your aid, you will have no part of the credit for assisting in doing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have the yeas and nays upon that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, is the bill in the Senate or as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. If we are going to have the yeas and nays on the main amendment, I hope we may be allowed to have the yeas and nays on my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia demands the yeas and nays on his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). In view of my pair, which I have already announced, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is absent. Through a transfer he is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] and the transfer of that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] has been called from the Senate by important matters. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I withhold my vote because of the absence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM], with whom I have a general pair.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when Mr. PERCY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PERCY] is necessarily absent and is paired. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his named was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], which I transfer to the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and allow my vote to stand. While I am on my feet I desire to make the same announcement as on previous roll calls in reference to the pair of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. REED. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. STONE] and the fact that he is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. WARREN. I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CLARK] and his pair, as just stated by the Senator from Missouri, with the colleague of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. RAYNER]. The Senator from Kentucky requested me to announce that if he were present and not paired he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Poindexter	Smith, S. C.
Bacon	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Swanson
Bankhead	Martine, N. J.	Reed	Watson

Clarke, Ark.	Guggenheim	Owen	Works
Culberson	Kenyon	Paynter

So Mr. BACON's amendment to Mr. MCCUMBER's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I desire to announce again my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). In view of my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], in his absence I withhold my vote. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). In view of my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (when Mr. GARDNER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GARDNER] is necessarily absent from the city. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair, and transfer it to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I again withhold my vote by reason of my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM].

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as upon the previous vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I again announce the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] and his pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. If present, the Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] has been called from the Senate by very important business. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. REED. I desire to make the same announcement with reference to the absence of my colleague, and the fact that he is paired that I heretofore made.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Borah	Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Burton	Gronna	Massey	Smoot
Catron	Heyburn	Page	Stephenson
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Thornton
Crane	Jones	Perkins	Townsend
Foster	La Follette	Sanders	Warren

NAYS—31.

Ashurst	Cummins	Myers	Simmons
Bacon	Fall	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Fletcher	Overman	Sutherland
Bourne	Hitchcock	Poindexter	Swanson
Bristow	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Watson
Bryan	Lodge	Reed	Williams
Chamberlain	McLean	Root	Works
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Shively

NOT VOTING—39.

Bailey	Cullom	Kenyon	Percy
Bradley	Curtis	Kern	Rayner
Brandegee	Davis	Lea	Richardson
Briggs	Dillingham	Lippitt	Smith, Ga.
Brown	Dixon	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Burnham	du Pont	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Chilton	Gamble	O'Gorman	Stone
Clark, Wyo.	Gardner	Oliver	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Owen	Wetmore
Culberson	Guggenheim	Paynter

So Mr. MCCUMBER's amendment was rejected.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word before the bill is put upon its passage. If I had had the opportunity in the parliamentary changes which have been presented I should have voted for the House bill and would still vote for the House bill if given an opportunity to do so.

I voted for the amendment proposed by the minority members of the Finance Committee, because it reduced the rate below the present rate. I voted against the substitute proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], because while it reduced the rate of duty it was not so low as the rate in the bill for which it was proposed as a substitute.

I wish to say that now that the substitute of the Senator from Massachusetts has been adopted over my vote to the contrary, and stands in the place of the House bill, and now that the alternative is between voting for the bill as it has been perfected by the adoption of the Lodge substitute on the one hand and the sugar duty of the Payne-Aldrich law on the other hand, I shall vote for the bill as now amended by the substitute, not because the rate of duty provided therein is satisfactory to me, but because that rate is lower than the rate in the existing law.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to indorse the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. I shall vote for the bill as a makeshift; it is by no means what I desire or that which I feel the American people have the right to expect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HEYBURN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair, as heretofore announced, and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I transfer the general pair I have with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENYON] is necessarily absent. By transfer he stands paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If my colleague were here and free to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and transfer it to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] has been called away from the Chamber on very important matters. He desired me to say that if he were present he would vote "yea," giving as a reason that this bill is a reduction on the present law.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and I myself feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when Mr. PERCY'S name was called). I again announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. PERCY], the fact that he is paired, and that if he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SANDERS (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). Upon this vote I am reliably informed that the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] would vote "yea." I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] stands paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. If the junior Senator from New Hampshire were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I make the same announcement as on the previous vote in regard to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. If he were present he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. He is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

Mr. REED. I desire to make the same announcement in reference to the absence and the pair of my colleague [Mr. STONE] that I have heretofore made.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] on this vote.

Mr. WARREN. My colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. He stands paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 3, as follows:

YEAS—52.

Ashurst	Cummins	Massey	Shively
Bacon	Dillingham	Myers	Simmons
Bankhead	Fall	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Fletcher	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Gallinger	Page	Smoot

So the bill was passed.

STREET RAILWAY IN SOUTH HILO, HAWAII.

Mr. CLAPP. I entered yesterday a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, was ordered to a third reading and passed. The bill has been returned from the House, and I ask for action on the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 3, line 1, after the word "passengers," I move to insert the word "freight."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the House amendment the words "July 1, 1913," and insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "otherwise provided by law"; and the House agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,
C. D. CLARK,
GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
F. W. MONDELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that there be printed for the use of the Senate document room 200 copies each of the amendments offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the bill known as the wool bill. At the document room there are no copies of the amendments left, and there is no authority to print them, as they were offered from the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 29, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 27, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Be very near to us, O Father; we need Thee every moment. Thou art infinite, we are finite. Thou knowest all things, we know only a little. Thou art almighty, we are very weak. Thou art divine, we are human; sometimes our zeal displaces judgment, sometimes our desires dethrone reason. Sometimes our egotism makes us forget our dependence upon Thee and we wander far afield. Control our thoughts, direct our ways that we may be profitable servants unto Thee our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WOOL AND MANUFACTURES OF WOOL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 22195, an act to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, have a reprint of the same ordered, printing and numbering the Senate amendments, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and send the bill to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent to take the wool bill from the Speaker's table and have it printed with the Senate amendments numbered, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I suppose the bill will go to conference eventually anyway. It has been suggested to me to offer a motion to agree to the bill with the amendment offered to it which I offered before, and which was voted unanimously on this side as a substitute for the Senate bill. Having had a record vote on that, I am disposed to let it go to conference without any vote this morning and not make any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Speaker refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit, so that there may be no question about it, a request to extend and revise the remarks that I made the other day. I think I made the request, but the manuscript I have from the reporters does not show it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks which he made the other day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE RECORD.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning there appears a speech of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. During the delivery of that speech I made some interruptions, and I particularly requested that I might see the RECORD before it was printed, but it was not sent to me. In the speech as revised there are some mistakes which I wish to correct.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman claim that his remarks are not properly set forth?

Mr. WARBURTON. Just a moment. I have requested the official reporters to give me a copy of the official report; and next week I desire to make some corrections of the speech as printed and also possibly to make a few remarks in reference to the subject then under discussion.

ALASKA.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 38) providing for legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, and ask that it be printed, with the Senate amendments numbered, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 38, and that the same be printed, with the Senate amendments numbered, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are several amendments to this bill, introducing entirely new matter, which I think ought to be considered in some shape in the House. I think the gentleman ought to let the bill go to his committee and report it back in the usual way. I shall, therefore, have to object.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee on the Territories.

CONTINUATION OF COAL MINING IN WYOMING.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 100.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 100, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1052).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution No. 100, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out of the House amendment the words "July first, nineteen hundred and thirteen," and insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "otherwise provided by law," and that the House agree to the same.

JOS. T. ROBINSON,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
F. W. MONDELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
C. D. CLARK,
GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the House on the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate joint resolution No. 100 report that the conference agreement leaves the legislation as it passed the House, except that the time limit during which the Secretary of the Interior may arrange for the continuation of the coal-mining operations is stricken out and the termination of the operations is left to the discretion of Congress.

JOS. T. ROBINSON,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
F. W. MONDELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, there was a time limit in this resolution as passed by the House?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; July 1, 1913.

Mr. MANN. Yes; fairly restrictive; and that, under the conference report now, there is practically no time limit at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the gentleman will permit me, I will make a statement. The original bill, as passed by the Senate, authorized the continuance of these operations under the order issued by a Federal court in Wyoming. The Interior Department suggested that in lieu of that bill there should be enacted a provision authorizing the continuance of mining operations on all lands where mines have been established and where the claims to the lands had been rejected. The Committee on the Public Lands of the House did not think it proper under a bill of this character to consider legislation of that general kind, but on account of the necessity existing in that peculiar locality we did decide that it was necessary to authorize the continuance of the operations by the Owl Creek Mining Co., and therefore we provided that they might be continued until July 1, 1913. The Senate agreed to that amendment, with an amendment providing that the operations might be continued until further action by Congress. The House conferees agreed to that amendment, for the reason that to refuse to do so might make necessary action by Congress again concerning the subject matter, and because under the amendment Congress can take action on the matter at any time it desires under the amendment suggested by the Senate. We did not believe it desirable to enact a general leasing provision in a bill like this.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the original bill as it passed the House provided that a certain company should have the right to mine coal on terms to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior until July 1, 1913.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That was to tide over an emergency situation. Under that bill, when passed, if the company desired to continue operations after July 1, 1913, it would have to secure additional legislation from Congress, either general or special. Now, the conference committee strikes out that limitation and puts in a provision that means nothing—that they may have this right until Congress shall otherwise provide. Of course Congress can otherwise provide at any time. Regardless of that, Congress can legislate upon the subject, whether it is in this bill or not. That provision does not confer any rights upon Congress. We already have the authority to legislate. This provision is a mere subterfuge, a mere throwing of sand in the eyes of Congress. It means nothing except to give this company an indefinite right to mine coal on property which we claim does not belong to it; and then the company, instead of seeking to encourage legislation from Congress, will do everything it can to prevent legislation by Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. And it also settles a lawsuit that has been pending for some time, and is now pending in court?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois wants to be fair, and——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have heard that so often that I am tired of it. I am fair.

Mr. MONDELL. I presume the gentleman is. The time limit fixed in the provision in the House bill is so brief that there was no way of determining whether the cases between the Government and the company could be settled in that time or not. They may not be settled for a year or more. The cases are not determined at this time, and until they are determined these operations ought to continue; and we simply provide that they shall continue until otherwise provided by law.

Now, if the cases are settled, the Secretary of the Interior can at any time call the attention of Congress to the matter, and action can be had. The idea was simply to avoid the necessity of coming to Congress again within a year.

Mr. MANN. In the one case the company, having its right expire, will want to bring it to the attention of Congress; and in the other case the company, having an indefinite right, will use all its powers to prevent its coming to Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand that the coal company would have any power or influence to prevent a matter from coming to Congress. I want to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior reported favorably upon a proposition indefinite in time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, under the bill, if this amendment is agreed to, the Secretary of the Interior has the power to prescribe any regulations or any rules that he sees fit to make, and impose any reasonable charge for rental that he may desire. There is ample power to safeguard every interest of the Government. The objection to the suggestion for general legislation made by the Secretary of the Interior comes from those who oppose the establishment of a leasing system.

There are many members of the committee who believed that that ought to be done. Others objected to it very strenuously, and we regarded it as impracticable to inject a question of that importance into the consideration of a bill of this kind. But the bill does recognize, in a sense, the right of the Government in this particular case to lease these lands, although that term is not used in the bill; and I submit to the gentleman from Illinois, who I regret is not now listening, but who says he is always fair, and who is always so prompt to approve himself and to confirm his own judgment, that there can be no objection on the part of the Government to this proceeding, unless it be that the legislation is not general enough and does not extend far enough.

I have already stated the reasons that moved the committee not to report a general leasing bill affecting all lands on which mining operations are being conducted and the title to which is in litigation. It would effect no useful purpose to fix a time limit unless it can be known when the litigation will end, and the committee could not determine when the litigation will end.

There is nothing to indicate that it will be determined by the 1st of July, although when the House committee reported our amendment we thought probably it would terminate by that time. But upon the termination of the litigation, if it terminates in favor of the United States, Congress will then undoubtedly act further in the matter. Until the litigation is terminated there ought not to arise any necessity for further legislation.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the petition which was presented for the passage of this bill set out as a reason for passing it that the litigation would probably be determined last winter during the cold weather, when the miners would be thrown out of employment in the wintertime and have no opportunity for any other employment? Now, the gentleman says that although they were then alleging as a reason for passing the bill that the litigation would be determined last winter, it will probably not be determined by a year from the 1st of July.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman knows that the litigation was not determined last winter, so that that statement in the petition, if it was contained there, is now immaterial, and it merely emphasizes the necessity for not placing a restriction in the bill that will make further legislation necessary before the litigation is finished.

Mr. MANN. The reason stated in the petition for passing the bill has fallen to the ground, because the litigation was not determined last winter.

Mr. ROBINSON. There are other reasons that must be apparent to the gentleman, who is evidently acquainted with the situation there. There are hundreds of persons employed in that mine. The operation of the mine is almost of absolute necessity to that community, as well as to the people who are employed in the mine, and it would be absurd and ridiculous for the Congress to legislate twice on the same proposition and be compelled to legislate on it again before the litigation is determined. I believe the proposition is thoroughly tenable; that the Senate amendment improves the bill and does not in any sense injure the Government.

Mr. MANN. Why did not the conferees then provide that this right should be granted until the litigation was determined, instead of granting it indefinitely, so that it will continue, and will not be interfered with, probably, for the next 50 years?

Mr. ROBINSON. That amendment came to conference in the terms that I have suggested, and I submit to the gentleman that it is adequate to carry out the purposes of the legislation, which is to permit the operations to continue until Congress stops them. I ask that the conference report be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

NAVAL MANEUVERS, NARRAGANSETT BAY.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is very short and will only take a minute.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 644.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the House of Representatives a complete report of the naval maneuvers held this month of July, 1912, in and around Narragansett Bay, in which maneuvers, according to press reports, six battleships have shown themselves to be helpless against the attack of submarines.

Mr. EVANS. The only reason why I ask——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire respectfully whether it is the policy of the Speaker to recognize gentlemen to ask unanimous consent to pass bills or resolutions before they have been introduced regularly?

The SPEAKER. The policy of the Chair has never changed. That is, that under the rule these resolutions go to the basket; but occasionally there is a resolution of pressing necessity that the Chair has taken the liberty of entertaining by the general consent of the House.

Mr. MANN. Disagreeing with the Chair about the pressing necessity of this resolution——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not talking about the pressing necessity of this one.

Mr. MANN. I am asking about this one. I do not think it is of pressing necessity, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The regular course will be for the resolution to go through the basket.

UINTA INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH (H. DOC. NO. 892).

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a House document the reports of E. P. Holcombe and James M. McLaughlin, special Indian inspectors, on the conditions found by them existing on the Uinta Indian Reservation in Utah.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document a report on the Uinta Indian Reservation in Utah. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of it? Is it to help get through this $3,500,000 judgment, or steal, or whatever you call it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has some relation to that matter. These inspectors have made a recent report upon irrigation conditions there.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman would present a request to have printed as a public document the history of the legislation resulting in that judgment, which ought to cast a blush of shame over honest Members of Congress, I would not object, nor will I object to this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I gave notice that on Tuesday next, July 30, 1912, I would call up for consideration the conference report on the naval appropriation bill. A number of gentlemen say they can not be here at that time. I desire to give notice now that I shall call it up for consideration on Thursday, August 1, 1912.

STEEL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a very short statement with reference to the minority report of the Stanley steel committee.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Only about a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement respecting the minority report of the Stanley steel investigating committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the views of the minority of the Stanley steel committee went to the printer three days ago, and yesterday at 1.30 p. m. were given to the press for future release.

I make this statement for the reason that the view on the steel industry given out by Col. Roosevelt last night singularly correspond in two respects with the conclusions of the minority. These two respects relate to the labor situation and to that part of the Stanley bill which deals with corporations which control over 30 per cent of the domestic product of a given article. Of course Col. Roosevelt has made an error in confusing a rebuttable presumption of unreasonableness with an absolute prohibition in the case of corporations of that sort, but that is a mistake which any man might make on a superficial examination of the Stanley-Brandeis bill.

I know that the world is censorious, and I fear lest it might say that the minority of the Stanley steel committee had purloined the colonel's views, if I were to neglect to point out that we gave our views to the press several hours earlier than the colonel gave out his advance statement.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25970, the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill, with Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to complete the examination and classification of lands within the limits of the Northern Pacific grant under the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stats., 365), as provided in the act of February 26, 1895 (28 Stats, 683), such examination and classification when approved by the Secretary of the Interior to have the same force and effect as a classification by the mineral land commissioners provided for in said act of February 26, 1895, the unexpended balance, not exceeding $4,500, of the appropriation of $10,000 for the fiscal years of 1911 and 1912, provided in the deficiency act approved March 4, 1911, is hereby continued and made available for expenditure in the examination and classification of said lands during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I propose to speak for a few minutes on the subject of trusts and the Sherman Act, and in that connection it will be necessary for me to refer to remarks hitherto made by me in reference to the same matter. On May 4, 1911, I addressed the House of Representatives as follows:

"Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not allude to the size nor the intelligence of this audience. The one is apparent and, I trust, the other will become as evident as I proceed with my discourse. I do not speak, however, merely for the information of this House, but for that far wider audience which reads the daily newspapers and occasionally dips into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Before commencing upon the subject matter of my talk I wish to say a few words to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], who preceded me. He says that a great many of his Democratic friends hold their seats in this House on account of the abstention of the Republican voters. That may be true of some, but for my district I will say that the vote cast in this last election was over 1,000 larger than that cast in 1908, and that is true of all the vote in Massachusetts. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

"The gentleman from Pennsylvania also alluded to the expense which we would incur in this extra session. Now, the Democrats are not responsible one whit for this extra session, but it was the contumacy of the other branch of the Republican Legislature, the Senate, that caused it. But for my part I welcome this session, and I say that the slight expense to which we are putting the Government of the United States is well repaid by the relief which this House, at least, will offer to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

"Yesterday the House listened to the able and eloquent speech of my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], a colleague whose district is adjacent to my own and whose district was enriched in redistricting in 1900 by several safe Democratic towns from the third congressional district, my own, trusting in the assured Republican strength of his and in the weakness which would come to the third district; but the Democratic incumbent at that time was successful in retaining the seat for the Democracy for the two terms which he occupied. He then voluntarily retired, and in this last election the calculations of the Republicans were again upset and the third district became again Democratic. Surely the Lord tempereth the votes to the shorn district. But I bespeak from my Republican colleague in this redistricting, which happened on account of the Massachusetts Congressmen being increased from 14 to 16, a redistricting which I opposed—I bespeak from him the return of my Democratic ewe lambs, and I trust he will not give me back some of those deserted shoe villages with which his county, as well as my own, is so much encumbered. I would ask his reasons for the decadence of these shoe towns, if it is due to the high tariff which has been put upon their products.

"In his discussion of the altruistic business methods of the United Shoe Machinery Co., I asked him if he had in mind the act which was passed by the Massachusetts Legislature in 1907 forbidding a clause of their lease which restricted the lessees from buying or leasing any other machinery from any other vendors or lessors except the said company, and he said he had that in mind, but when I asked him to have that act read from the Clerk's desk he said he could not take up his time to do that. I will ask the indulgence of the House, in the performance of my public duty, to have read this act of 1907 and the supplementary act of 1908 against monopoly. I will ask that the Clerk read act 469 of 1907.

"The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the act in the gentleman's time.

"The Clerk read as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

"SECTION 1. No person, firm, corporation, or association shall insert in or make it a condition or provision of any sale or lease of any tool, implement, appliance, or machinery that the purchaser or lessee thereof shall not buy, lease, or use machinery, tools, implements, or appliances or material or merchandise of any person, firm, corporation, or association other than such vendor or lessor; but this provision shall not impair the right, if any, of the vendor or lessor of any tool, implement, appliance, or machinery protected by a lawful patent right vested in such vendor or lessor to require, by virtue of such patent right, the vendee or lessee to purchase or lease from such vendor or lessor such component and constituent parts of said tool, implement, appliance, or machinery as the vendee or lessee may thereafter require during the continuance of such patent right: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the appointment of agents or sole agents to sell or lease machinery, tools, implements, or appliances.

"SEC. 2. Any person, firm, corporation, or association, or the agent of any such person, firm, corporation, or association, that violates the provisions of this act shall be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $5,000.

"All leases, sales, or agreements therefor hereafter made in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be void as to any and all of the terms or conditions thereof in violation of said provisions."

"An act relative to monopolies and discriminations in the sale of articles or commodities in common use.

"Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

"SECTION 1. Every contract, agreement, arrangement, or combination in violation of common law in that whereby a monopoly in the manufacture, production, or sale in this Commonwealth of any article or commodity in common use is or may be created, established, or maintained, or in that thereby competition in this State in the supply or price of any such article or commodity is or may be restrained or prevented, or in that thereby, for the purpose of creating, establishing, or maintaining a monopoly within this State of the manufacture, production, or sale of any such article or commodity, the free pursuit in this State of any lawful business, trade, or occupation is or may be restrained or prevented is hereby declared to be against public policy, illegal, and void.

"SEC. 2. The attorney general, or, by his direction, a district attorney, may bring an action in the name of the Commonwealth against any person, trustee, director, manager, or other officer or agent of a corporation, or against a corporation, to restrain the doing in this Commonwealth of any act herein forbidden or declared to be illegal, or any act in, toward, or for the making or consummation of any contract, agreement, arrangement, or combination herein prohibited, wherever the same may have been made. The superior court shall have jurisdiction to restrain and enjoin any act herein forbidden or declared to be illegal.

"SEC. 3. In such action no person shall be excused from answering any questions that may be put to him, or from producing any books, papers or documents, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him, but no person shall be prosecuted in any criminal action or proceedings, or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify, or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, in any such action.

"SEC. 4. Nothing in section 1 of this act shall be construed as impairing, repealing, or superseding any statute of this Commonwealth.

"Approved April 28, 1908."

"The discussion of this farmers' free-list bill has already been worn almost to attenuation, but this phase has not been extensively dwelt upon. The gentleman from Indiana has already referred to the fact that at the time my colleague was defending this trust at the Senate end of the Capitol its methods were being pitilessly disclosed. 'Thus the whirligig of time brings about its revenges,' but not often so quickly. It is more like that incident in the New Testament where, while one disputant was protesting against the facts, the feet of those who had borne out the other protestant were already at the door, and in this matter I refer not to the protagonist but to the principal. The conditions of shoe manufacturing in Massachusetts had become so scandalous that in 1907 a movement was started to restrain the abuses which the United Shoe Machinery Co. had injected into its methods. There were long and acrimonious hearings at the statehouse, in which the most eminent and expensive counsel took part.

"The proponents of this act were represented by Hon. Herbert Parker, a former Republican attorney general of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Instead of business men of small means having the opportunity to engage in business with leased machinery, the United Shoe Machinery Co. was but the controlling power in a long line of manufacturers, compelling tribute of a greater part of the profits and owning the body, soul, and brain of the hapless men who have been entangled in its net, a slavery as absolute as that of the Incas of Peru. These acts were passed, after a hard struggle, as a measure of relief to the manufacturers, but subsequent events have shown their futility. Recently an opponent named Plant attempted to start an independent organization and began operations on a great scale and with every prospect of success, but suddenly, almost before the promise of relief had been presented to the manufacturers, the Plant system was absorbed by the United Shoe Machinery Co. It transpired that in order to finance his factory Mr. Plant had been obliged to borrow largely from the banks, which had, indeed, solicited his custom, but in some mysterious way all of Plant's notes had found their way into the possession of the United Shoe Machinery Co., and suddenly he was met by the demands for their payment.

"There was no option but that which the United Shoe Machinery Co. offered, and this independent organization was absorbed by the monopoly. This is instructive in itself as showing for what purposes the accumulated deposits of the common people are used, like the pinions of the eagle, to their own destruction. It is unnecessary to ask 'Upon what meat has this our Cæsar fed that he has grown so great?' There has been competent testimony that a machine which the United Shoe Machinery Co. leases for $1,200 a year it sells outright to foreign purchasers for $400—a difference of $19,600 computed on a 6 per cent basis, of $23,600 computed on a 5 per cent basis, and $29,600 computed on a 4 per cent basis. And then we are asked not to remove the duty from the product because, perforce, the foreign manufacturer is using American machinery and will undersell our own manufacturers. If there are more elevated heights of impudence it remains for some Peary to discover them or some Cook to assume to. As to the reliefs we are entitled to, there are several. First, the removal of all duties from all products of monopoly, whether machinery or product. Second, the invocation of the United States law. I am inclined to agree with Senator BAILEY and the United States Supreme Court as enunciated in Continental Wall Paper Co. against Lewis Voight & Sons Co. (148 Fed. Rep., 939, 950) as pertinent:

"The consumer, at last, is the only real victim. It is the consumer who makes up the public, which it is the object of the law to protect against undue exaction through illegal combinations in restraint of freedom of commerce and fair play in commercial transactions.

"It ill becomes monopolies like the United Shoe Machinery Co., which is throttling independent manufacturers and has become the arbitrary head of a great part of the shoe business, to cry out that we are destroying an American industry when we are reducing the cost of living to that class which works the hardest and receives the least reward for its labor. Conditions will not be bettered until we not only meet their challenge but remove, as above stated, the duties on their products, which are only an extortion on the American people, and, further, refuse admission to interstate commerce of all products of monopolies of whatever kind or nature.

"He that withholdeth corn—

"And by corn I opine Solomon meant not only all cereals but all the necessities of life—

"the people shall curse him, but blessings shall be upon the head of him that selleth it.

"[Applause.]"

On May 15, 1911, the decision in the Standard Oil case was handed down, and on May 29, 1911, the decision in the American Tobacco case, in which cases the contract or monopoly legislated against was by judicial interpretation declared to be only such as was "undue" or "unreasonable." On June 8, 1911, I introduced into the House H. R. 11380 and H. R. 11381, which, as amended, became H. R. 24115 and H. R. 24116, and are set forth in full further on. They had been contemplated for some time previously. They were, however, intended to extend the provision of the Sherman Antitrust Act, but also intended to cover all cases, whether the restraint of trade or competition was sufficient to create a monopoly or not. I am not aware that there is any dispute as to the essential facts on which these remedial bills are based. It is apparent that at least one industry in this country has acquired such a control over certain machines, first by patents, and then when these had expired, by the conditions which naturally follow from the business situation evolved from the manipulation of these monopolies. I use "monopoly" in the last sentence as a patent monopoly and not in the antitrust sense.

By means of the control of certain essential machinery used in the shoe industry the United Shoe Machinery Co. forced the shoe manufacturers to use machinery, and in some cases material, under their control and gradually stifled a competition in the manufacture of shoe machinery.

The Massachusetts condition has been referred to and the measures passed by the legislature for relief, but owing to the extent of territory in the United States in which the manufacture of shoes is carried on, it seemed best that these provisions should be embodied in national legislation and made broad enough to prevent any such restraint of trade or competition as I have set forth. Whether fostered by the patent laws or by monopoly gained thereunder, or by any other method, the evils of monopolies like those set forth are self-evident, and do not need any extensive comment.

All are well acquainted with the monopolistic growth of the last 25 years, and, I believe, are eager to restrain everything that tends to injure the community as a whole. It has been shown and evidenced that not only does monopoly of this kind stifle invention, but also inventions which are obtained by such a monopoly are held back from use as long as possible, so that practically out-of-date machines have to be continued in our manufactories and will be continued until foreign competition grows so keen that they have to be replaced in order to save the life of the monopoly. Last summer it was proposed to put shoes on the free list. Shoe manufacturers complained that they could not continue to manufacture if this was done, although the present tariff is 10 per cent, and although a few years ago the shoe manufacturers had stoutly maintained that they needed no protection whatever; but the burdens imposed upon them by the United Shoe Machinery Co. monopoly were so great that they had been obliged to retract this statement. It has been shown by figures in the Patent Office that patents taken out by the United Shoe Machinery Co. have been pending from 5 to 13 years. It is possible, or rather it is probable, that with the example of this corporation other monopolies of the same kind will soon grow up and control other business interests as it has controlled the shoe interests.

I asked the Commissioner of Patents if he had any statements in regard to patents in general, as to how long they were in the office, and he stated that he had not, and that he would have to take each patent individually and determine from that how long it had been after the application before it was issued. We have some few statements, showing how long the different patents that the United Shoe Machinery Co. have recently taken out were in the Patent Office before finally issued. This ranged from 5 to 15 years.

The evils which these bills attempt to forestall are set forth in language which is sufficiently explicit for all to understand. Other concerns than the United Shoe Machinery Co. have used its methods, which have resulted in monopolies, restriction of trade, and suppression of useful patents. There have been extended hearings on these bills before the House Judiciary Committee; and the necessity of such legislation has been repeatedly demonstrated since these hearings began.

In the famous case of Sidney Henry et al. against A. B. Dick Co., Chief Justice White said:

But the result of this analysis serves at once again to establish, from another point of view, that the ruling now made in effect is that the patentee has the power, by contract, to extend his patent rights so as to bring within the claims of his patent things which are not embraced therein, thus virtually legislating by causing the patent laws to cover subjects to which, without the exercise of the right of contract, they could not reach, the result being not only to multiply monopolies at the will of an interested party, but also to destroy the jurisdiction of the State courts over subjects which from the beginning have been within their authority.

Again, a curious anomaly would result from the doctrine. The law in allowing the grant of a patent to the inventor does not fail to protect the rights of society; on the contrary, it safeguards them. The power to issue a patent is made to depend upon considerations of the novelty and utility of the invention and the presence of these prerequisites must be ascertained and sanctioned by public authority, and although this authority has been favorably exerted, yet when the rights of individuals are concerned the judicial power is then open to be invoked to determine whether the fundamental conditions essential to the issue of the patent existed. Under the view now maintained of the right of a patentee by contract to extend the scope of the claims of this patent it would follow that the incidental right would become greater than the principal one, since by the mere will of the party rights by contract could be created, protected by the patent law, without any of the precautions for the benefit of the public which limit the right to obtain a patent.

But even if I were to put aside everything I have said and were to concede for the sake of argument that the power existed in a patentee, by contract, to accomplish the results which it is now held may be effected, I nevertheless would be unable to give my assent to the ruling now made. If it be that so extraordinary a power of contract is vested in a patentee, I can not escape the conclusion that its exercise, like every other power, should be subject to the law of the land. To conclude otherwise would be but to say that there was a vast zone of contract lying between rights under a patent and the law of the land, where lawlessness prevailed and wherein contracts could be made whose effect and operation would not be confined to the area described, but would be operative and effective beyond that area, so as to dominate and limit rights of everyone in society, the law of the land to the contrary notwithstanding.

And the President said December 5, 1911, in his message on the antitrust statute:

I see no objection—and indeed I can see decided advantages—in the enactment of a law which shall describe and denounce methods of competition which are unfair and are badges of the unlawful purpose denounced in the antitrust law. The attempt and purpose to suppress a competitor by underselling him at a price so unprofitable as to drive him out of business, or the making of exclusive contracts with customers under which they are required to give up association with other manufacturers, and numerous kindred methods for stifling competition and effecting monopoly, should be described with sufficient accuracy in a criminal statute on the one hand to enable the Government to shorten its task by prosecuting single misdemeanors instead of an entire conspiracy, and, on the other hand, to serve the purpose of pointing out more in detail to the business community what must be avoided.

And again, May 10, 1912, in his message on the patent law:

In recent years, however, combinations based upon patents have been formed which have succeeded in controlling very largely the output of particular industries, and this control has been extended by contracts based upon the patents, requiring the users of patented machines to buy from the corporations owning the patents or from firms under their control supplies or other articles to be used in connection with the patented machines. Some of the circuit courts of appeal have held that such contracts, based upon patents, were valid, and that those who violated the terms of such contracts were liable as contributory infringers. The correctness of such decisions has recently received the approval of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Sidney Henry et al. v. A. B. Dick Co., by the vote of four justices of the seven who heard the case. An application for a rehearing of that case by the full bench was made and denied, so that the construction put upon the existing law in that case must be regarded as conclusive. Several bills have been introduced into Congress, as I am informed, to obviate the effect of this decision so as to prevent a patentee from extending by contract the monopoly secured to him under the patent law. This question calls for careful consideration.

On this subject the Boston Herald said in an editorial September 29, 1910:

PATENT MONOPOLIES.

One of the many changes that have been made in the leases of the United Shoe Machinery Co. in recent years has an importance that should not be overlooked. It is so strikingly suggestive of the general plan by which ordinary patent rights have been supplemented by the power of leases and the grip of the monopoly on the shoe-manufacturing industry has been perpetuated that it may, in a measure, be said to be the keystone of the structure which has been built up. Former leases of the company contained a clause stipulating that the lessee should pay as rent or royalty a certain sum for each pair of various kinds of boots, shoes, or other footwear "manufactured or prepared whether wholly or in part by the aid of the leased machinery or any part thereof," a previous paragraph in the same lease (relating in this case to turned goods) having stipulated that the "leased machinery shall be used only in the manufacture of boots, shoes, and other footwear, the soles of which are or shall be attached to their uppers by turn sewing machines hereby or by other instrument heretofore or hereafter leased to the lessee by the lessor or its assignor." The later leases contain a similar clause, but with an important change, stipulating that the rent or royalty shall be paid on each pair of boots, shoes, or other footwear "which shall have been in whole or in part attached to welts by the use of any welting or stitching or sewing machinery," or, in the case of turned product, "the soles of which shall have been sewed or attached to their uppers in whole or in part by the use of any sewing or stitching machinery."

It is significant that during the past few years important patent rights on shoe-stitching machinery has expired, and that what was for many years a seemingly insurmountable obstacle for the creation of an independent line of shoe machinery has been removed. The early stitching machine, which in many respects is as serviceable as any improved machine protected by later patents, is now free from the restrictions of patents and is available for any shoe manufacturer. The rights of the patentee or his assigns, as fixed by law for a reasonable and just period, have been observed. But, although the restrictions of the patent rights have been ended, the manufacturer using any part of the monopoly system must continue to pay full royalty on every pair of shoes of his product the soles of which have been sewed or stitched on "any" machine. By virtue of the lease there is therefore secured an indefinite perpetuation of the patent monopoly. Although the essential patent rights on the stitching machine expired more than a year ago, leases issued within the past year have bound the shoe manufacturer to pay royalty on every pair of shoes the soles of which have been sewed, stitched, or attached to the uppers by "any" machinery for a period of 17 years.

Technical discussion of the lease would be folly for a layman. Representing, as it does, the perfecting labor of years and the professional skill of the monopoly's corps of counselors, it requires on its technical side similarly able and expert handling. But the layman, especially the shoe manufacturer and the shoe worker, can appreciate fully the condition created by this system of leases superimposed on patent rights, and although unqualified to judge whether or not the lease is "law" can form a conclusion whether or not it is justice and consistent with the general welfare. And every man is competent to form his share of public opinion to demand, if necessary, new law by which justice and equity can be enforced.

Some points in the lease which are the basis of the shoe manufacturers' complaint have been pointed out. The lessee is required to keep the machinery in such state of repair as may be determined by the inspectors of the lessor, buying all parts exclusively of the company at such prices as they may determine. At the expiration of the lease he must return the machinery to the company's headquarters and pay such sum as may be deemed necessary to put the machine in condition suitable to lease to another lessee. And beyond that he must pay to the lessor the sum of $150 as partial reimbursement for deterioration, etc. He must use the machinery exclusively on shoes made by the monopoly's system, and he is bound to use the machines to their full capacity, limited only by the extent of his factory product. Various other conditions are imposed in this ironclad lease, and, finally, lest some holes may have been made by the legislative "bomb" of 1907, every vulnerable part of the lease is protected by an additional plate of armor, which declares that "independently of and in addition to all other rights, the lessor shall have the right to terminate this lease and license at any time upon 30 days' notice." Apparently the law of 1907 is a worthless protection to the shoe manufacturer. He still holds a 30-days' lease of his shoe-manufacturing equipment, subject to the grace and pleasure of the shoe-machinery monopoly.

It can not be conteaded that such conditions are healthful. The normal rights of the patentee against which no one protests are being exploited to the detriment of the industry. Inventive genius except as it chooses to serve the monopoly is stifled for want of a market. An unwarranted tribute is laid on the shoe manufacturer and in turn on the shoe wearer. There has been and continues to be an enormous aggregation of surplus profits to fortify the monopoly against attack. The situation demands a remedy. If present laws are inadequate, the prosecuting officers of the Government who are the custodians of the people's interests, should speedily determine that fact by a test in the courts. Then, if necessary, the legislatures should act.

The New York Journal of Commerce, January 31, 1912:

A REASONABLE PATENT-LAW AMENDMENT.

Whatever may be thought of the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. THAYER, of Massachusetts, relating to restrictive terms and conditions in selling, leasing, or licensing patented articles, there can be no doubt that the brief and simple measure "regarding the date of patents, time allowed for interference claims in extending date, and annulment of patents," ought to be passed. We can see no reasonable ground of objection to it and much reason why it should become law.

The first section, which is only half a dozen lines long, provides that when patents are issued they shall date back to the time of the application, except that in case of interference they shall date from the time of the settlement of interference, if that is within two years of the application, otherwise from the end of the two years. An invention is really protected from infringement from the time the patent is "applied for." The result is that delay in issuing the patent prolongs its term by so much beyond the legal limit of 17 years, and advantage has often been taken of this to extend the term to 25 or 30 years. If the patent is not granted in the end, the applicant has had all the advantage of one during the delay. If there is interference, the protection from infringement is in doubt until that is settled, and it is only fair to have the patent date from that time, if it is within a reasonable limit.

The second section of the bill is equally brief and explicit. It provides that patents shall be annulled unless within three years of the date of their issue the patented articles shall be "put upon the market in sufficient quantity, whether by sale, lease, or license, to satisfy the reasonable demand of the public and at reasonable prices." The wording of this is somewhat dubious, but the purpose is important, and properly applied it would put an end to one of the serious abuses of "patent rights" under the present law.

It is a common practice to obtain patents upon new inventions, by application or by purchase from the first patentee, for the very purpose of keeping them out of use, because they would come in competition with patented devices already in use. In this way important improvements are held back and kept out of use for the public benefit in order that old devices may be profitably continued. The holder of the patents does not use them, but prevents anybody else from getting possession. This is in direct conflict with the constitutional purpose of the patent law.

The New York Press, March 18, 1912:

PATENT LEGISLATION.

Our attention has been called to the several bills introduced by Representative JOHN ALDEN THAYER, of Massachusetts, amending the patent laws. They were all offered at various times long before the decree of the Supreme Court was given in the mimeograph patent case, and were apparently in unwitting anticipation of just such decision.

Counsel interested in these bills inform us that H. R. 11381 of this series "provides, in brief, that no owner of, or anyone having any interest in, any letters patent covering any tool, implement, appliance, or machinery shall so sell, lease, or license the article so as to restrain or attempt to restrain or prevent the vendee, lessee, or licensee from using any tool, implement, appliance, machinery, material, or merchandise not furnished by the vendor, lessee, or licensor."

Representative THAYER'S other bills appear also to be well intentioned, but they all need to be carefully considered with regard not only to their intent, but to their effect. And while Congress is at it the time seems to be ripe for a thorough overhauling of all the patent laws. It is generally believed that neither the true inventor nor the public profits very much by the patent law as it exists.

The chief opponent of this legislation has been the United Shoe Machinery Co., and in addition to presenting its case by the most eminent counsel it has caused every Congressman to be besieged by letters prepared by the company from retail dealers who do not understand the purport of the acts and who have failed to reply to requests for information as to whether they have ever read the bills. Another feature in their methods is shown in their attempts in regard to the press.

In the discussion on the Post Office appropriation bill I took occasion in offering an amendment to animadvert on this as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I have offered may meet the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in regard to innocent persons mailing newspapers contrary to this bill; but that is not the chief purpose for which I offer it. That great jurist, long an ornament of the Supreme Court of the United States, Joseph Story, never uttered a wiser or more statesmanlike sentence than when he wrote this motto for the Salem Register:

"Here shall the press the people's rights maintain Unaw'd by influence and unbrib'd by gain.

"If that were the condition of the press to-day, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] would not be necessary, but we are 'fallen on evil days,' and we are obliged to resort to severe measures to restrain what was once the bulwark of our liberties from becoming the artillery park of 'antirepublican tendencies.' The amendment is a step, and but a step, in the right direction. I can foresee many methods by which this salutary amendment will be evaded, and, while I do not now offer any legislation on this subject, I desire to state from my own experience, and what is doubtless the experience of many gentlemen on the floor of this House, an example which will plainly show the need of restrictions like those presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], if not much more drastic ones.

"If we wish to see where the editorial sentiments of the papers come from, we do not need to look so much at the names of the owners, stockholders, and directors as we need to look at the advertising pages of those newspapers. There is where the milk in the cocoanut is to be found. It is through that source that we can tell how the editors will write.

"It was my fortune in attempting to restrain the monopolistic tendencies of modern commercialism to present two bills similar in form and in purpose, but relating to two different aspects of the ways in which the business in articles could be controlled. Those bills, as properly amended, are as follows:

"[H. R. 11380, Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

"A bill to prevent restrictions or discriminations in the sale, lease, or license of tools, implements, appliances, or machinery covered by interstate commerce.

"Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, corporation, or association engaged in interstate commerce having any interest, whether as owner, proprietor, beneficiary, licensee, or otherwise, in any tool, implement, appliance, or machinery shall, directly or indirectly, in making any sale or lease of or any license entered into in the course of trade or commerce between the several States or with foreign nations or in any Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or between any Territory of the United States and the District of Columbia, or any Territory of the United States or any State or any foreign nation, or between the District of Columbia and any Territory of the United States, or any State or States or foreign nation, to any such article, restrain or attempt to restrain or prevent the vendee, lessee, or licensee from using any tool, implement, appliance, machinery, material, or merchandise not furnished by or with the approval of the vendor, lessor, or licensor, whether by making any condition or provision, express or implied, against such use by a term of any sale, lease, or license to use, or by requiring any obligation, express or implied, against such use from the vendee, lessee, or licensee of the article, or by imposing any restrictions upon the use of the article sold, leased, or licensed, or by making in the price, rental, royalty, or other terms of any such sale, lease, or license any discrimination based upon whether the vendee, lessee, or licensee uses or purchases any such tool, implement, appliance, machinery, material, or merchandise or not, or by any other means whatsoever: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any such vendor, lessor, or licensor from requiring that during the continuance of any letters patent on any such article no patented component or constituent parts of the tool, implement, appliance, or machine required for use thereon be purchased except from such vendor, lessor, or licensor: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the appointment of agents or sole agents to sell or lease machinery, tools, implements, or appliances.

"SEC. 2. That any such person, firm, corporation, or association who shall violate the provisions of this act, and any other person, whether or not an agent of such owner, proprietor, or beneficiary, who shall willfully or knowingly assist in or become a party to any such violation shall be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 3. A proceeding in equity to prevent and restrain violations of this act may be brought by any person injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or in which the act complained of was committed; and in addition thereto or separately therefrom may sue, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

"SEC. 4. The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition, the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises.

"SEC. 5. Whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceeding under section 4 of this act may be pending that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned, whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not, and subpœnas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof.

"SEC. 6. Any property owned under any contract or by any combination or pursuant to any conspiracy (and being the subject thereof) mentioned in section 1 of this act and being in the course of transportation from one State to another or to a foreign country shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law.

"SEC. 7. That the word 'person' or 'persons' wherever used in this act shall be deemed to include corporations and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either the United States or the law of any of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country."

"[H. R. 11381, Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

"A bill to prevent restrictions or discriminations in the sale, lease, or license of tools, implements, appliances, or machinery, or the use of any method or process covered by the United States patent laws.

"Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, corporation, or association having any interest, whether as owner, proprietor, beneficiary, licensee, or otherwise, in any letters patent of the United States covering any tool, implement, appliance, or machinery, method, or process shall, directly or indirectly, in making any sale or lease of or any license to any right under such patent or to any article which embodies or includes the invention covered by such letters patent, restrain or attempt to restrain or prevent the vendee, lessee, or licensee from using any tool, implement, appliance, machinery, material, or merchandise not furnished by or with the approval of the vendor, lessor, or licensor which does not infringe such letters patent, whether by making any condition or provision, express or implied, against such use by a term of any sale, lease, or license to use, or by requiring any obligation, express or implied, against such use by the vendee, lessee, or licensee of the article, or by imposing any restrictions upon the use of the article sold, leased, or licensed, or by making in price, rental, royalty, or other terms of any such sale, lease, or license any discrimination based upon whether the vendee, lessee, or licensee uses or purchases any such other tool, implement, appliance, machinery, material, or merchandise or not, or uses any such other method or process, or by any other means whatsoever: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any such vendor, lessor, or licensor from requiring that during the continuance of such letters patent no patented component or constituent parts of the tool, implement, appliance, or machine required for use thereon be purchased except from such vendor, lessor, or licensor: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the appointment of agents or sole agents to sell or lease machinery, tools, implements, or appliances.

"SEC. 2. That any such person, firm, corporation, or association having interest in any such letters patent who shall violate the provisions of this act, and any other person, whether or not as agent of such owner, proprietor, or beneficiary, who shall willfully assist in or become a party to any such violation shall be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 3. That if any person, firm, corporation, or association is convicted a second time of any offense under this act in connection with such letters patent, such letters patent shall thereupon become null and void.

"SEC. 4. Proof of violation of this act shall be a good defense to any action for infringement of any patent in connection with which said violation occurs.

"SEC. 5. Any person injured by violation of this act may bring an action for recovery of damages against any party so violating in any district court of the United States or in the district wherein the act complained of was committed or wherein the defendant resides or is found.

"In connection with them and with the Lenroot bill, H. R. 15926, a long amendment to the Sherman Antitrust Act, lengthy hearings were held before the Judiciary Committee. At the time these measures were introduced in the House of Representatives the press of Boston especially took considerable notice of them, as the practices at which they were aimed were largely those of the United Shoe Machinery Co., of Boston. From time to time some mention was made of them in the papers, necessitated by the fact that the United States Government had, after these measures were introduced, brought indictments against some of the directors of the company and also a bill in equity for the dissolution of the company.

"But when the hearings on the bill were begun, after brief notices of the opening days, some of the papers ceased all mention of the proceedings, and others mentioned only the evidence which appeared favorable to the United Shoe Machinery Co., but not the evidence advanced in favor of the measures, and not one of the Boston papers gave the final arguments in their favor. About the time the hearings were concluded Judge Gray had made a suggestion on the framing of the final decree dissolving the Powder Trust—

"that the Sherman Act does not make a specific regulation; it is much to be desired that Congress in its future legislation would so regulate commerce between States that, however drastic that regulation may be, the business of the country will be compelled to accommodate itself to it.

"Judge Putnam, in the indictment of the United States versus Directors of the United Shoe Machinery Co., had said substantially the same. These decisions were followed by the dissenting opinion of a strong minority of the court—Justices White, Hughes, and Lamar—in the celebrated Henry case, where the division was four to three. Justice White said:

"Because of the hope that if my forebodings as to the evil consequences to result from the application of the construction now given to the patent statute be well founded, the statement that the application of my reasons may serve a twofold purpose: First, to suggest that the application in future cases of the construction now given be confined within the narrowest limits, and, second, to serve to make it clear that if evils arise their continuance will not be caused by the interpretation now given to the statute, but will result from the inaction of the legislative department in failing to amend the statute so as to avoid such evils.

"On account of this decision it was seen that a change in the law was imperative, and the Boston newspapers, as well as the press of the country in general, took notice of these hearings which had been already held. The Boston Transcript, besides speaking specifically of these measures, devoted considerable space to the patent laws. But the question naturally arises, Why had not the press of Boston paid more attention to these measures, which were honestly intended to restrain monopolistic control and in which New England was peculiarly interested on account of the presence within her borders of one of the offenders of the law, and also because remedial legislation was advocated by one of her Congressmen? Their attitude may be explained in part by the following statement and editorial from the Boston American, which has always been the determined foe of monopoly, whether business or political, and also because—alas, too often we are compelled to look to the advertising columns of the newspaper to discover how the editorial and news columns will treat any subject related to its principal source of revenue:

"[Boston American, Friday, Feb. 2, 1912.]

"SHOE MACHINERY TRUST GOES INTO THE NEWSPAPER BUSINESS—HAS THE BOSTON 'TRAVELER,' GETS THE LYNN 'NEWS,' AND ADDS THEM TO THE 'TIMES' OF GLOUCESTER AND 'NEWS' OF NEWBURYPORT—EDITORIAL AGENTS LOOKING FOR OPPORTUNITIES IN SALEM AND HAVERHILL—BOUND TO HAVE NEWSPAPERS EVERYWHERE THAT WILL BE 'FAIR-MINDED'—TRAVELER EDITOR, WHO WANTED TO PRINT A STORY THAT SHOE-MACHINERY WINSLOW DIDN'T WANT PRINTED, ISN'T THE TRAVELER EDITOR ANY MORE—SMITH AND HIGGINS, THE MEN ON THE TRAVELER JOB FOR SIDNEY W. WINSLOW, AND SMITH AND HIGGINS ARE ALSO THE MEN ON THE JOB IN LYNN, GLOUCESTER, AND NEWBURYPORT—PERHAPS THEY'LL PLANT A 'FAIR' PAPER IN SALEM AND HAVERHILL, TOO.

"Confirmation of the report that the Boston Traveler had passed under the control of the president of the United Shoe Machinery Co. was followed to-day by the discovery that the head of the Shoe Machinery Trust is also a big figure in at least three other Massachusetts newspapers and that his representatives in the newspaper field have their eyes on two cities more.

"The president of the Shoe Machinery Trust is Sidney Wilmot Winslow. Mr. Winslow's shoe-machinery offices are located in Lincoln Street. His homes are at Beverly, at Brewster—the Cape Cod town where he was born less than 60 years ago—and at No. 10 Commonwealth Avenue.

"President Winslow's bright young men in the newspaper business are Fred E. Smith, of Newburyport, once the Republican postmaster of the city at the mouth of the Merrimac, and James H. Higgins, also of Newburyport.

"THE TRUST NEWSPAPERS.

"The list of newspapers now controlled by Sidney W. Winslow, through Smith and Higgins, is as follows:

"In Boston, the Boston Traveler; in Lynn, the Lynn Evening News; in Gloucester, the Gloucester Times; in Newburyport, the Newburyport News.

"Why the shoe-machinery people should be interested in newspaper publications to the extent of securing editorial or financial control is a matter for conjecture, but it was pointed out to-day that in every case save one the shoe-machinery newspapers on the above list are published in what might be called shoe towns.

"The Boston Evening Traveler, now completely under Winslow's control, is printed in the great wholesale center of the shoe business in North America.

"Making shoes is the principal business of Newburyport, where Smith and Higgins get out the Evening News for Mr. Winslow. Lynn, where they print the News, is the 'Shoe City' of the United States.

"The attitude of the local press toward the shoe manufacturers in the shoe cities—and it is known that Mr. Winslow's young men have for some time been feeling out the probable chances for a paper in Salem and Haverhill—is an extremely important factor in the business of these manufacturers.

"Shoe manufacturers occasionally have difficulties with 'labor.' The local paper is able to take the middle of the road in these controversies or it may side with one disputant or the other.

"Shoe manufacturers may also have trouble with the assessors. In these disputes, also, it is not unpleasant to find the local newspaper your friend.

"Suggestions of this sort have been made to American reporters who, for several days, have been investigating the great interest shown by the big fellows of the Shoe Machinery Trust in the newspaper business.

"These suggestions appear to have been based upon suspicion most unjust, for, on the authority of a man who claims to know the situation in Lynn, the American was to-day furnished with information going to show that, in that city, at least, Mr. Winslow has merely taken steps to see that a paper which formely was unfair shall hereafter be fair-minded.

"A COOLIDGE IDEA.

"In addition to its four Massachusetts dailies—with at least two more to come—the Shoe Machinery Trust has for two or three years maintained one of the best press bureaus in the country.

"This press bureau is supposed to have the benefit of the wisdom and experience of Mr. Louis A. Coolidge. Mr. Coolidge is treasurer of the United Shoe Machinery Co. He used to be famous as one of the best newspaper correspondents at Washington, D. C.

"Coolidge in 1904 was president of the Gridiron Club at Washington. He had then been a Washington correspondent for more than a dozen years. He was a great friend of President Roosevelt. He was a member of the Roosevelt 'tennis cabinet,' and in the presidential campaign of 1904 the Roosevelt folks put Coolidge in as director of the Republican literary bureau.

"In 1908 he was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He might have gone higher—as high as Hitchcock—if Winslow hadn't come along with the proffer of a place paying considerable more money than Uncle Sam allows even the best of his servants. Coolidge became treasurer of the Shoe in 1909.

"NO POLITICS IN MOVE.

"In addition to its advertising in all sorts and conditions of daily papers, weekly papers, trade journals, souvenir publications, and monthly magazines, the press department of the United Shoe Machinery Co. has at times sent broadcast a lot of advertising to be run as 'pure reading matter.'

"When Smith and Higgins, of Newburyport, under the kind patronage of Sidney W. Winslow, of the United Shoe Machinery Co., began the establishment of a syndicate of newspapers in northwestern Massachusetts, there was commonly supposed to be 'politics' behind it.

"The first guess was that John Hays Hammond wanted something. Mr. Hammond denied the soft impeachment. Gradually Mr. Winslow was uncovered, the Lord Bountiful of a free press.

"If Mr. Winslow wanted anything in politics, it has not been apparent since the time when, in 1908, he set out to be an anti-Taft delegate to the Republican national convention from Beverly. His ambitions were rudely punctured at that time by Capt. Augustus Peabody Gardner, of Hamilton.

"WHAT IS REAL PURPOSE?

"There was, however, last July, a movement to put Treasurer Coolidge up as the Republican candidate for lieutenant governor. Not very much came of that movement at that time.

"With these guesses removed from consideration, there is left the proposition that the shoe-machinery crowd desires to place newspapers in shoe-manufacturing towns for purposes which may appear later.

"It is the belief of everybody on the inside at Washington, according to advices which came a day or two ago to the Boston American, that the shoe-machinery company is in a way of extricating itself from a very unpleasant position before the enforcers of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

"It is, of course, well known that the shoe-machinery company is among the many which have been indicted under the Taft administration. There are cynics in Massachusetts who have thought that able gentlemen would make smooth the way of the 'United Shoe' at Washington, quite as other gentlemen made smooth the way of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad in Mr. Roosevelt's time.

"TRUST HEADS AT WASHINGTON.

"Not only Treasurer Louis A. Coolidge, formerly of the Roosevelt tennis cabinet, but Mr. Charles F. Choate, jr., one of the ablest, if not the ablest, extricator in New England, have been in Washington for many days in the interests of President Winslow's $50,000,000 corporation.

"There was a report last week—since denied by the defendant company—that the Shoe Machinery Trust was about to throw up its hands and surrender. According to a Washington story which has come to the Boston American the Shoe Machinery Trust is getting ready to be let off easily. It is going to reorganize or readjust or re-something.

"First of all the United Shoe has got to drop that 'exclusive' feature out of its contracts with manufacturers. Apparently the shoe manufacturer is to be at liberty to buy and lease where he will.

"And so, it is thought, the shoe-machinery people have decided that it will be helpful under the new agreement to have a daily newspaper in each of the shoe centers. Hence they have to-day the Boston

Traveler, the Lynn News, the Gloucester Times, and the Newburyport News.

"And they have been looking for footholds, as will be explained, in Salem and Haverhill. Shoe-machinery papers in these cities are to come later.

"FIRST WINSLOW PAPER.

"The first of the Winslow newspaper ventures was the News, of Newburyport. Jim Higgins, who took charge of this venture, was one of the Winslow protégés. Mr. Winslow is celebrated for his good judgment in picking able young lieutenants.

"Fred Smith, who had been the Newburyport postmaster and who was close to the Republican State machine at that time, was associated with Higgins in the News venture. The relations that existed between these young men and President Winslow were well known in that corner of Essex.

"Smith and Higgins did so well with the News, of Newburyport, that they next essayed Gloucester. Here they got control of the Times.

"Next on the list of Smith-Higgins-Winslow papers came the Boston Traveler.

"Mr. Winslow inserted his bright young men into the Boston Traveler quietly.

"THE TRUST AND THE TRAVELER.

"Nearly two months ago—on December 13, to be exact—there appeared in the Boston Post an item which said that a number of changes had taken place of late in the Boston Traveler. The Post item said that Mr. E. H. Baker, of Cleveland, Ohio, had retired as general manager and publisher of the Traveler.

"Up to that time—and for some time—Mr. E. H. Baker, of Cleveland, had been the dominating factor in the Traveler. When the 'Cleveland' interests took over the Traveler, Mr. Baker appeared as the Traveler's principal executive. The man 'on the job' for Mr. Baker was Mr. Baker's son, Frank S., who has made his home in Quincy.

"More than a year ago—or early last year—it became known in financial circles in Boston, and to those on the inside of Boston newspaperdom, that one of the 'largest factors' in the Traveler was Sidney W. Winslow, of the United Shoe Machinery Co.

"RUMOR OF TROUBLE IN CAMP.

"To-day it is said that not only was this true at that time, but that other officials of the Shoe Machinery Co. are interested in the Boston Traveler in an alliance with Albert F. Holden, of Cleveland, Ohio, one of the principal officers of the United States Smelting, Refining & Mining Co. President Winslow is one of the directors of that company.

"Along in the middle of last summer there were continuous rumors of trouble in the Traveler camp.

"For one thing it was said that Mr. Marlin E. Pugh, then the managing editor of the Traveler, had been printing in the Traveler altogether too many things tending to annoy and displease President Sidney W. Winslow and the gentlemen quietly associated with Mr. Winslow at that time in the Traveler enterprise.

"It also became known at about that time that Mr. Winslow, now supposed to be merely the 'angel' back of the Traveler, had lost his admiration for Mr. E. H. Baker, of Cleveland, Ohio.

"THE POST CORRECTION.

"And, some time after midsummer, it became known that while Mr. E. H. Baker continued to be known as an official of the Traveler, Mr. E. H. Baker was no longer the gentleman who was giving orders in the Boston Traveler's office. Then came the announcement that Messrs. Smith and Higgins had come in.

"The item which the Boston Post printed on December 13, however, was corrected by the Boston Post on the following day.

"On December 14 last the Boston Post reported that Mr. Frank S. Baker (the son of E. H.) was and would continue to be the publisher of the Traveler. The Post said further, in this correction, that Mr. Frank S. Baker's father had never been active in the management of the Traveler, but would continue to act, as before, as president of the Evening Traveler Co.

"TRUST TAKES OVER LYNN NEWS.

"And then the Boston Post went on to say that Mr. Frank S. Baker had 'recently called into association with him Mr. James H. Higgins and Mr. Fred E. Smith, publishers of the Newburyport News and the Gloucester Times, who will act in an advisory capacity.'

"The picture thus presented, of the Bakers, of Cleveland, Ohio, and Boston, Mass., digging up editorial 'advisers' in Newburyport and Gloucester, caused some quiet merriment at the time. All this was well enough, however, until, lo and behold, along came the Boston Herald last week with an item telling how the Lynn Evening News had been bought by Mr. Winslow's Smith and Higgins.

"Representatives of the bondholders of the Lynn Evening News, the Boston Herald said last week, had sold the News to Smith and Higgins 'free of the mortgage.' The Herald identified Smith and Higgins as the gentlemen 'who have recently secured a large interest in the Boston Traveler.'

"The Boston Traveler, it may be said in passing, did not print this item, nor has the Boston Herald 'corrected' it.

"Public sentiment, it has been pointed out by several with whom reporters of the American have discussed the shoe machinery newspaper syndicate in the past few days, has come to be regarded as a dangerous factor in the affairs of big business.

"The larger corporations and the trusts, therefore, it has been pointed out, are on the qui vive with reference to the 'development' of this public sentiment.

"Having the Boston Traveler, the Newburyport News, and the Gloucester Times, Mr. Winslow and his friends next stepped into Lynn. There they took the plant of the Lynn Evening News.

"The Lynn News was practically down and out. It had some $50,000 in outsanding bonds The paper was largely controlled by the Lynn Gas Co. and the General Electric Co. When the paper blew up, indeed, there appeared in the list of its bondholders the name of President C. A. Coffin, of the General Electric Co.

"Also there appeared there the names of former Gov. Eben S. Draper and former Lieut. Gov. Louis A. Frothingham.

"Interesting stories are told in Lynn about the blowing up of the Evening News.

"The gentleman who had dominated the paper for some time is said to have been a Mr. Bolton, of New Haven, Conn.

"Mr. Bolton had an editor in charge of the Lynn Evening News who appears to have been of the same kidney as Merlin Pugh, the Boston Traveler editor, whose sayings and doings so annoyed the philanthropic Mr. Winslow.

"Regardless of the fact that the Evening News bonds were in hands at least friendly to the Lynn Gas Co., this Evening News editor displayed a most unpleasant penchant for going after the said gas company and lambasting it fore and aft.

"Whereupon, according to the gossip of Lynn, the gas people hied themselves to Publisher Bolton, saying, 'What meanest thou?' and 'Desist,' and like manner of exclamation.

"And the good Mr. Bolton, say the gossips of Lynn, threw up his hands as one who is guiltless and said, 'I can not help it; it's me editor.'

"The which, as was soon to develop, did not go.

"There came a day when it was time to pay interest on the bonds, and the cupboard was bare. The unpleasant editor had gone away some time previously, but the men of money were relentless, and there was nothing doing for the Lynn News.

"At about this time the thought appears to have struck Mr Winslow that the Lynn Evening News should be succeeded by a journal which would treat the business interests of Lynn fairly, and so it came to pass that Smith and Higgins added the Lynn Evening News to a string of papers which already included the Newburyport News, the Gloucester Times, and the Boston Traveler.

"In addition to his controlling interest in the affairs of the Boston Traveler, President Winslow, of the Shoe Machinery Trust, has at least a friendly interest in the affairs of one other Boston newspaper.

"President Winslow has been seen at the Hotel Touraine of late in the company of the editor of this other Boston newspaper. Vice President George W. Brown, of the Shoe, has apartments at the Touraine.

"In Salem the United Shoe Machinery's newspaper set are reported to have made advances to Col. Robin Damon, who has printed the Salem Evening News for a great many years and is generally credited with having found a gold mine in it. Up to this time the Shoe Machinery newspaper set have merely made advances to Col. Damon.

"The Haverhill situation is said to be that the Shoe Machinery folks are waiting for the psychological moment.

"All of which interesting newspaper information is offered to the newspaper readers, the advertisers, and the newspaper people of Massachusetts for the good that it may do.

"President Winslow, of the United Shoe Machine Co., wants the press of Massachusetts to be 'fair.' Of course President Winslow stands by the constitution of Massachusetts, which declares that 'the liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a State; it ought not, therefore, to be restrained in this Commonwealth.'"

"[Editorial in Boston American, Feb. 3, 1912.]

"MONOPOLISTIC GAGGING OF THE PRESS MEANS THE POISONING OF THE WELLS OF AMERICAN PUBLIC OPINION.

"The hundreds of thousands who read this newspaper day by day and who are each day steadily adding to their numbers will have read with amazement the exposure of press gagging which the American made on the first page of yesterday's editions.

"It is an exposure which should blanch the cheek of every thoughtful citizen who reads it. Every paragraph, every line of the shameful story has full material to make men pause.

"This story of the Shoe Trust and its controlled chain of newspapers is the opening of a chapter whose ending no man can foresee.

"It is the unveiling, rather the unmasking, of a powerful conspiracy to muzzle the American press, to poison the wellsprings of American public opinion.

"From the dawn of this Republic onward to this very hour the free, untrammeled, independent, patriotic press of America has been the stoutest bulwark of the people's rights and of the Nation's liberties.

"Greater than fleets and armies, greater than all the genius of statesmanship, the press of America, free, independent, patriotic, has stood firm and strong and true against all injustice and against every encroachment upon the domain of the people's rights.

"Every stone that was laid in the fabric of American institutions during the struggling days which followed '76 was bonded in the cement of a free and solid, patriotic, and independent American press, racy of the soil and loyal in all its utterances.

"Is this bond in danger of dissolution? Is this long-cemented union to be melted 'like snow before the sun,' in the corroding acid of corporation corruptive influence?

"Here is a question for the American people to face; no other people will face it for them.

"It is an issue as deep and as pregnant as any that has reared itself since Washington and his confrères gave this Nation birth.

"It is a problem as serious as any that has come before the people since the martyred Lincoln spoke his inspiring prayer upon the field of Gettysburg.

"Gagging the press of America, bringing it under the control of monopolistic corporations, seven-eighths of whom are said to be persistent violators and defiers of the Nation's laws, is a crime fully in the class with the poisoning of the wells when hostile armies are on the march.

"An independent, patriotic journalism is the very lifeblood of this Republic.

"It is for the people to see that it endures."

"My own home paper, the Worcester Evening Post, was, as far as I know, the only paper in New England that published full and adequate reports of both sides of the subject, as it always does, thus fulfilling the functions of a real newspaper.

"The United Shoe Machinery Co. is a large advertiser—for what purposes its officers can best tell, for it has a virtual monopoly of the shoe-machinery business—in the metropolitan press, and therefore it can be, perhaps, inferred without any large stretch of the imagination that such a good customer's wishes must be respected. Now, during the pendency of these measures it has published in the New York Sun, a full-page advertisement describing its works in Beverly and its general beneficence (?). An experience of a colleague of mine, the Hon. EDWARD W. TOWNSEND, of New Jersey, is somewhat similar. March 29 of this year he made a unique speech on the tariff, showing that the mortality among infants in the textile manufacturing towns was larger than elsewhere. Shortly afterwards a supplement of many pages appeared in the New York Sun describing the various textile industries of the United States.

"I think that in order to have more perfect operation of the Barnhart amendment the sums paid by the largest advertisers should be quarterly or annually announced. Then perhaps the overt influences in the news and editorial columns might be revealed.

"That one of the greatest agencies through which the English-speaking people obtained and maintain their freedom should now bid fair to become an instrument, if not to destroy it, at least to hinder its accomplishments, is a sad commentary on the plutocratic development of the last two decades. Was it for this that Wilkes suffered imprisonment and fought for years against the Crown; that Fox and Burke thundered their philippics in favor of an untrammeled press; that our own Hamilton fought and won; and that Greeley, Raymond, Webb, and Bennett built great newspapers? We who believe we are right fear no publicity. We are willing that the people should decide the justice of our cause, but we demand and will obtain an impartial hearing. But, perchance, 'because their deeds are evil our opponents love darkness' and do not court publicity. Fortunately, there is one paper in the United States which does not contain any advertisements, avowedly, at least, and here, if nowhere else, a fair and impartial treatment can be given of subjects relating to the interests of the people with the confident trust that they will prevail.

Were wisdom in the scorn of consequence."

The United Shoe Machinery Co. has claimed that it is a beneficent trust, but while considerable could be said in contradiction thereof, it is entirely immaterial whether this is a beneficent trust, as some former President of this country of ours might call it, or whether it is a bad trust, exacting the last pound of flesh from all of its lessees, by the admission of its own counsel it is a monopoly, and it is a monopoly such as this that the Sherman bill is aimed at and which the decisions of the United States courts say are illegal, whether they are beneficent or not. I refer to The United States v. Missouri Freight Association (186 U. S., 240).

The following language of the late Mr. Justice Peckham, who delivered the majority opinion of the court in United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association (166 U. S., 290), well may be applied to the situation presented here. In that case, after stating that the changes resulting from the natural development and improvement in the methods of carrying on different lines of business necessarily leaves behind them for a time men who must seek other avenues of livelihood, the learned justice said (pp. 323, 324):

It is wholly different, however, when such changes are effected by combinations of capital, whose purpose in combining is to control the production and manufacture of any particular article in the market, and by such control dictate the price at which the article shall be sold, the effect being to drive out of business all of the small dealers in the commodity and render the public subject to the decision of the combination as to what price shall be paid for the article. In this light it is not material that the price of an article may be lowered. It is in the power of the combination to raise it, and the result in any event is unfortunate for the country by depriving it of the services of a large number of small but independent dealers who are familiar with the business and who have spent their lives in it and who supported themselves and their families from the small profits realized therein. Whether they be able to find other avenues to earn their livelihood is not so material, because it is not for the real prosperity of any country that such changes should occur which result in transferring an independent business man, the head of his establishment, small though it might be, into a mere servant or agent of a corporation selling the commodities which he once manufactured or dealt in, having no voice in shaping the business policy of the company, and bound to obey orders issued by others. Nor is it for the substantial interests of the country that any one commodity should be within the sole power and subject to the sole will of one powerful combination of capital.

The counsel for the company prepared certain figures in regard to wages in this country. Now, talking in percentages is a mighty handy thing and also mighty confusing. I had prepared by the Census a brief statement of wages in Massachusetts in a number of shoe manufactories, the capital, and so forth. I will not inflict it upon you, but I wish to state that in Massachusetts the number of establishments has decreased from 893 in 1904 to 860 in 1909, a decrease of 3.7 per cent. That in the city of Brockton, the home of the most beneficent recipients of the United Shoe Machinery Co.—Messrs. Donovan, Keith, Douglas, and so forth—the number of establishments has decreased from 82 to 75, or 8.5 per cent, and in Lynn, where the greatest progress was made during this time, the number of establishments has decreased from 211 to 207, 1.9 per cent.

In regard to wages. There is a little book published by the Department of Commerce and Labor which shows the increase in wholesale prices at different periods. The increase in 1904 to 1909 was 18 per cent exactly on articles used by the laboring man to support himself, and I want you to see how much the wages have increased at this time in these factories. In all of them in Massachusetts it has increased $38, or less than 10 per cent.

In the Paper Bag patent case, which Mr. Fish referred to in his argument (210 U. S., 405), particularly 429 and 430, the court says:

But, granting all this, it is certainly disputable that the nonuse was unreasonable or that the rights of the public were involved.

The right which a patentee receives does not need much further explanation. We have seen that it has been the judgment of Congress from the beginning that the sciences and the useful arts could be best advanced by giving an exclusive right to an inventor. The only qualification ever made was against aliens, in the act of 1832. That act extended the privilege of the patent law to aliens, but required them "to introduce into public use in the United States the invention or improvement within one year from the issuing thereof," and indulged no intermission of the public use for any period longer than six months. A violation of the law rendered the patent void. The act was repealed in 1836. It is manifest, as is said in Walker on Patents, paragraph 106, that Congress has not "overlooked the subject of non-user of patented inventions." And another fact may be mentioned. In some foreign countries the right granted to an inventor is affected by nonuse. This policy, we must assume, Congress has not been ignorant of, nor of its effects. It has, nevertheless, selected another policy; it has continued that policy through many years. We may assume that the period has demonstrated its wisdom and beneficial effect upon the arts and sciences.

From that opinion it is plain that Congress has not exhausted its right in regard to restrictions upon patents. Mr. Justice Harlan was the only justice on the Supreme Court who dissented from the opinion of the justices, even in this restricted use of the patent, in the Paper Bag case.

In the Blount Manufacturing Co. v. Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co. (166 Fed. Rep., 555), particularly page 560, it says:

It is a fact, familiar in commercial history, that patent rights have a commercial value for purposes of extinction. That many patents are perfected in order to prevent competition of new inventions and of new machines with old machines already installed. The equitable status of an owner of a patent who has purchased and held it in nonuse for this purpose is still an open question, and was not determined by the Paper Bag patent case.

In Bement v. The National Harrow Co. (186 U. S., 70), particularly at pages 90 and 91:

If he sees fit he may reserve to himself the exclusive use of his invention or discovery. If he will neither use his device nor permit others to use it, he has but reserved his own. That the grant is upon reasonable expectation that he will either put his invention to practical use or permit others to avail themselves of it upon reasonable terms, is doubtless true. This exception is based alone upon the supposition that the patentee's interest will induce him to use, or let others use, his invention. The public has retained no other security to enforce such expectation. A suppression can be but for the life of the patent, and the disclosure he has made will enable all to enjoy the fruits of his genius. His title is exclusive and so clearly within the constitutional provisions in respect to private property, that he is neither bound to use his discovery himself nor permit others to use it. The dictum found in Hoe v. Knapp (17 Fed. Rep., 204) is not supported by reason or authority.

On page 91:

There are decisions also in regard to telephone companies operating under licenses from patentees, giving them the right to use the patents for the purpose of operating public telephone lines, but prohibiting companies from serving within certain districts any telephone company, and it has been held in the lower Federal courts that such a prohibition was of no force; that it was inconsistent with the grant, because a telephone company, being in the nature of a common carrier, was bound to render equal service to all who applied and tendered the compensation fixed by law for the service; that while the patentees were under no obligation to license the use of their inventions for any public telephone company, yet, having done so, they were not at liberty to put restraints upon such public corporation which would disable it to discharge all the duties imposed upon companies engaged in the discharge of duties subject to regulation by law. It could not be a public telephone company and could not exercise the franchise of a common carrier of messages with such exceptions to the grant. Authorities cited.

The difficulty of applying any such bills as this to intrastate commerce has been suggested, and in answer to that I want to refer to the decision of the United States court on the employers' liability act. That will show that the statutes of the United States can work effectively both in and without the State, to the extent that they have jurisdiction. The State courts will be obliged to take notice of the United States statutes.

The platforms of the two parties on the subjects of trusts in 1912 are as follows:

MONOPOLY AND PRIVILEGE.

The Republican Party is opposed to special privilege and to monopoly. It placed upon the statute books the interstate-commerce act of 1887, and the important amendments thereto, and the antitrust act of 1890, and it has consistently and successfully enforced the provisions of these laws. It will take no backward step to permit the re-establishment in any degree of conditions which were intolerable.

Experience makes it plain that the business of the country may be carried on without fear or without distrust, and, at the same time, without resort to practices which are abhorrent to the common sense of justice. The party favors the enactment of legislation supplementary to the existing antitrust act which will define as criminal offenses those specific acts which uniformly mark attempts to restrain and monopolize to the end that all who obey the law may have a guide for their action, and that those who aim to violate the law may the more surely be punished. The same certainty should be given to the law prohibiting combinations and monopolies that characterizes other provisions of commercial law, in order that no part of the field of business may be restricted by monopoly or combination, that business success honorably achieved may not be converted into crime, and that the right of every man to acquire commodities, and particularly the necessaries of life, in open market uninfluenced by the manipulation of trust or combination may be preserved.

DEMOCRATIC PROMISE—ANTITRUST LAW.

A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable. We therefore favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal as well as the civil law against trusts and trust officials and demand the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to make it impossible for a private monopoly to exist in the United States.

We favor the declaration by law of the conditions upon which corporations shall be permitted to engage in interstate trade, including among others the prevention of holding companies, of interlocking directorates, of stock watering, of discrimination in price, and the control by any one corporation of so large a proportion of any industry as to make it a menace to competitive conditions.

We condemn the action of the Republican administration in compromising with the Standard Oil Co. and the Tobacco Trust and its failure to invoke the criminal provisions of the antitrust law against the officers of those corporations after the court had declared that from the undisputed facts in the record they had violated the criminal provisions of the law.

We regret that the Sherman antitrust law has received a judicial construction depriving it of much of its efficiency, and we favor the enactment of legislation which will restore to the statute the strength of which it has been deprived by such interpretation.

They are but amplifications of previous utterances by either side. If they mean anything beyond the trite witticism that "platforms are good things to get in on," then we are justified in construing them as not mere empty phrases, but replete and vital with political wisdom. From all this it is apparent that the law should be so plain that "he may run who readeth" if he would escape the penalty of its violation. The need of legislation is plain and of a specific kind to prevent specific violations, which these bills clearly offer. We shall do less than our duty if we fail to heed this need. The greatest foe to the welfare of the American people we can, if we will, lay prostrate at the feet of the law. It is for us to decide, but we can not say that we have not seen the evil nor that a means to eradicate it has not been offered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether all of these speeches are intended to be political speeches, because if they are I think they should be fairly divided between the two sides.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not inform the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman who makes the request can.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask the gentleman which he would prefer, to have the political speeches delivered here and listen to them or to have them printed?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have no objection to political speeches being delivered, but what I object to is after all of the gentlemen on that side who wish to get authority to extend their remarks in the RECORD for political speeches have obtained it, then later, when somebody from this side makes the same request, to have some gentleman on the other side object to it, as has been done frequently in recent days.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, I think this side has been quite liberal in that respect.

Mr. MANN. I will say that there have been a number of objections to requests on this side, and, I think, no objections on this side to requests of the gentlemen upon the other side.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that I think all of these speeches will be attacks on the Bull Moose feature in politics.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska to extend his remarks in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

RECLAMATION SERVICE.

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to credit the account of C. G. Duganne, special fiscal agent, United States Reclamation Service, Washington, D. C., with the sum of $390.71, covering items suspended and to be disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department on the ground that the materials and supplies were not purchased under the general supply schedule, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 17, 1910, said items being shown in detail in House Document No. 832 of the present session, and with any further sum which may be suspended or disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department in the said fiscal agent's accounts for the quarters ending March 31, 1912, and June 30, 1912, covering purchases which were not made in accordance with the provisions of the above-mentioned act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With respect to this settlement of accounts for purchases not made in accordance with the purchase of supplies act, why should that cover purchases made during the last quarter of the last fiscal year? Did they not know at that time that the law was applicable; and why could they not conform to it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The purchases under the law through the general supply committee were in a somewhat uncertain state. A decision of the comptroller was rendered—I forget just when—which reopened a number of accounts and which affected purchases made during a brief period thereafter. It was a condition that seemed to be unavoidable.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if it is the intention of these divisions of the Government to comply hereafter with the general law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes. The situation was a very peculiar one. A number of these accounts were suspended in instances which under the circumstances the committee thought should be allowed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Opinions of Attorneys General: To enable the Attorney General to employ, at his discretion and irrespective of the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, such competent person or persons as will, in his judgment, best perform the service, to edit and prepare for publication and superintend the printing of volume 28 of the Opinions of the Attorneys General, the printing of said volume to be done in accordance with the provisions of section 383 of the Revised Statutes, $500.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether it is necessary to set aside a provision of law and grant an unusual discretion to the Attorney General? Is there any good reason for it? I suppose, of course, the committee thought so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that it is to permit additional compensation to some person in the department who is selected because peculiarly fitted for this work. He does it out of hours.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The idea is, I suppose, to get some man familiar with the work to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand two men were selected in this case, each to be paid $250.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will that cost any more?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it will cost $250 for each man.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will this provision in the bill make it cost more than it otherwise would?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the Attorney General has authority under the revised statutes to have this work done, and this is the usual compensation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois: Provided, That all persons employed under section 715 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the courts: Provided further, That no such persons shall be employed during vacation; of reasonable expenses actually incurred for travel and maintenance of circuit and district judges of the United States and the judges of the district courts of the United States in Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, consequent upon their attending court or transacting other official business at any place other than their official place of residence, not to exceed $10 per day, said expenses to be paid by the marshal of the district in which said court is held or official business transacted upon the judge's written certificate of meals and lodgings for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court, and of compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $9,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to this provision at the bottom of page 37 and running over to the top of page 38:

Provided further, That no such person shall be employed during vacation: of reasonable expenses actually incurred for travel and maintenance of circuit and district judges of the United States and the judges of the district courts of the United States and Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico consequent upon their attending court or transacting other official business at any place other than their official place of residence not to exceed $10 per day.

I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be a wiser policy to fix a definite sum? I do that because my attention has been called to it by a district judge of the United States court who is scrupulous always to put down the many minute charges properly assessed against that account, and he says that it is a constant source of annoyance. He told me it would be much more agreeable to him, and I believe much more agreeable to the judges of the court generally, if a specific sum were fixed, even though it was somewhat less than the actual expenses incurred. I know this is an academic discussion in this case, but it is a matter that might well be considered, it seems to me, for the future.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the matter has been considered, the gentleman probably recollects, a number of times. This bill, of course, carries only the amount required to supply deficiencies in the appropriations to carry out the law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Personally, I believe it would be desirable to give the actual traveling expenses and a fixed sum for subsistence.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It might and probably would effect an economy for the Government, and would relieve these judges who are scrupulous in such matters from the annoyance of keeping a minute account.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This has been thrashed out during the last 8 or 10 years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And nothing done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And has occasioned more controversy than anything else.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And yet nothing has ever been done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it was changed back and forth. The judicial code act, which was passed in the last Congress, fixed it in this shape. I suppose the Committee on Revision of the Laws, which codified the judicial code, must have gone extensively into the matter and fixed this as the most satisfactory under all the circumstances.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from Territories, the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, $3,708.90.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the reason for a deficiency in the salaries of Members of Congress?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is an additional Member from the State of New Mexico.

Mr. MANN. He only takes the place of a Delegate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was only one Delegate and now there are two Members from that State.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the widow of George R. Malby, late a Representative from the State of New York, $7,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The items which we have just passed provide for the payment of a year's salary to the widows of deceased Members of Congress which I think is quite proper, but it seems to me that in addition to that Congress ought to make a reasonable provision for the payment of the secretaries of deceased Members. Under existing law and practice when a Member of Congress dies his allowance for clerk hire ceases upon his death, and it has been the custom of the Committee on Accounts to bring in a resolution providing for the payment to that particular clerk of a deceased Member of his salary up to the time of the death of the deceased Member. Of course everyone knows that the work of the clerk does not stop upon the death of the Member of Congress, the work of the district does not stop, and I have always thought and desired to put myself on record in favor of the proposition to pay the clerk of a deceased Member at least a month's salary, and I would not object to paying more than that, certainly something beyond the date of the death of the deceased Member.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What would the gentleman do in case the deceased Member had no clerk?

Mr. MANN. Well, you could not pay it directly to the clerk. I am talking about paying the money directly to the clerk of a deceased Member. Of course if he has no clerk there is nobody to pay the money to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think a majority of the Members have clerks.

Mr. MANN. They all certify to it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If they have not they ought to have, and it seems to me like it would be reasonable to pay the clerk his salary until the vacancy is filled.

Mr. MANN. Well, the clerk might not continue to work until the vacancy was filled. Here is a clerk who attends to the work of the district for its Member; the Member dies, the clerk does not cease to open the mail that comes in and does not cease to give attention to its work; but now he gets no allowance or pay beyond the date of the death of the Member, either for the services he performed or in part compensation to permit him to go home.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to make another suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois. Many Members bring their clerks from their districts, and on the death of the Member the clerk is left in a very embarrassing position here, and he is stranded, you may say, far from home. His pay is stopped, and there ought to be, as the gentleman from Illinois says, some provision made for clerks to deceased Members.

Mr. MANN. Of course, as a matter of fact, if an employee of the House dies, we pay his widow, or children, or other heirs, six months' salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is very much force in what the gentleman says, but we have no jurisdiction of the matter. I know that in some instances great inconvenience and hardship have resulted. I think some arrangement by which compensation for two months' pay could be arranged by statute would be very desirable.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to adopt the practice at the first opportunity.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I ask for information. Does this back salary of $7,500 carry any interest?

Mr. MANN. This is not back salary. This is a gratuity to the widow.

Mr. SHARP. Whether it is or not, I am raising this point as to whether it is quite just—at least, the intention may be all right—where the widow has been deprived of the use of this money in some cases, as we see here in this bill, a year longer than others.

Mr. MANN. The widow has not been deprived of the use of it. The widow has had her money as far as her husband earned the salary. This is sort of a mutual insurance which Members get when they come into the House on account of the dangers of serving in this Chamber. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHARP. Some get it earlier than others.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, touching the matter referred to by my colleague [Mr. MANN], of course a report from the Committee on Accounts to pay from the contingent fund would cover the ground. The pay of six months' salary to the widow of an employee of the House—money enough to bury him—is covered by resolutions from the Committee on Accounts payable to the contingent fund. I dare say if the Committee on Accounts had acted touching the clerks in cases referred to and passed the resolution auditing the amount and referred the same to the Committee on Appropriations, requesting it be placed in the deficiency bill, following the practice that I understand has obtained in that committee, the bill would have carried that amount for the consideration of the House. But in the absence of some law or some action either from the Committee on Accounts, or some action initiated in the House practically by unanimous consent, I apprehend that the Committee on Appropriations would not act in the premises.

Mr. MANN. If my colleague will yield, it was not in my thought at all to make any criticism of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not think that they would have jurisdiction in this matter. But I merely wished to get a little information, if I could, on the subject for the benefit of the Committee on Accounts.

I have talked with some of the Members of the Committee on Accounts recently and said to them that I thought there ought to be some payment for the clerks beyond the date of the death of a Member. How much it ought to be I would not undertake to say.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, expresses sympathy with the clerks of Members who have died while in office. I want to ask him if he would accept an amendment to this pending bill granting to clerks of Members who have died during the present Congress, say, six months' pay, to be in the nature of a deficiency?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that is impossible. The gentleman understands I have no right to do anything like that.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Why has not the gentleman the right?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because I am under obligations to protect this bill against these requests of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is correct in his position. Really, the Committee on Accounts ought to move in this matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly. They have jurisdiction. There have been a number of requests made to me about different propositions to be offered to this bill. I know that if I should adopt any such policy this bill would carry an enormous sum. This bill is to supply deficiencies in appropriations for past fiscal years, and it has been customary to carry in the bill this gratuity to the widows of the Members of Congress.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think it is in the nature of a deficiency to pay to the clerks of Members, who have died prior to this time, a certain amount of money?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be in the nature of a deficiency, but it is not of such a character that it can be included in this bill. I could not consent to an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the official reporters of debates $735 each and the stenographers to committees $952.50 each to reimburse them for money actually expended by them for clerical assistance and for janitor service to July 1, 1912, $8,220.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this item provides for paying to the committee stenographers, at least, money expended by them for janitor service. I do not know whether that provision applies to the official reporters or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not. The janitor and messenger service was provided for, if I recall correctly, for official reporters, and messenger service and janitor service is provided for in the legislative bill for the committee stenographers. This is to take care of the time when they were actually required to have such service and no provision had been made for it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in the Sixty-first Congress both of these sets of stenographers were provided with janitors. And when the Sixty-second Congress met, with great sound of trumpet and beating of drums, the majority on the Democratic side abolished these janitor places, because they were unnecessary, and extravagant, and uneconomical. They announced to the country how much they were going to save. A little while ago they provided for their future in the legislative bill. I see my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who fathered the original resolution, listening to me, and I wonder that he does not get excited over going back now in the deficiency bill and paying a year's salary. The amount of the salaries of these janitors who were abolished by this item will not be included in the end in the statement of the monthly expenses of the Sixty-second Congress.

Of course, everybody knew, and everybody knows now, that these stenographers have to have janitors. Everybody except my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania and his Democratic conferees knew when the original resolution was passed that they would have to have janitors. I am glad that in course of time one after another of these places needed for the use of the House is being restored.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this Congress the Democratic majority abolished, in round numbers, about $100,000 of useless positions in the House. The gentleman then predicted that before the expiration of this session they would all be restored and taken as patronage by the Democratic Members. It is now shown that, except to the extent of a janitor or two for the Official Reporters and committee stenographers, no mistake was made in the elimination of these places. They have not been restored, and this side of the House is perfectly willing to admit that in this attempt to reform and eliminate useless and unnecessary places it did go too far—to the extent of one or two janitors only. Having found out the mistake, it frankly and promptly admits it, and is now making provision to reimburse the committee stenographers for the amount expended until the 1st of July. Provision for a janitor and a messenger for the stenographers and reporters was included in the legislative bill for the present year.

It may be that there are one or two other trifling places that I do not now recall which it has been found necessary to restore, but I think the experience of the House has been that it has not missed the horde of employees that blocked every avenue of ingress and egress to and from this Hall in the last 16 years. They have mercifully disappeared.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken when he says that I stated that all of these places would be restored as patronage. What I said was that they would either be restored for the use of the House or the House would suffer for the lack of the positions.

As an illustration of the latter, yesterday the Senate sent a resolution to the House asking the House to return to it a certain bill in relation to Hawaii. That bill was a House bill. It had been considered by the House Committee on Territories and reported into the House. It was printed, and, through the handling of some of the employees of the House overburdened with work, it was incorrectly printed. There was a reprint ordered through, I suppose, the committee in order to have it printed correctly, but when it came up to be considered in the House the original print of the bill was read and passed by the House, and went to the Senate and was passed by the Senate, and, through accidental discovery, gentlemen who were interested in the bill learned that the bill that they had intended to have passed was not the bill that had been considered in the House. They did not discover this until they commenced to enroll the bill. The Senate had to reconsider its action and call the bill back. Except for the accidental discovery of the thing at the last moment it would have gone to the President to be signed—a bill that never was really reported by the House properly and was never intended to be passed by the House.

Now, I do not think it was the fault of the employees of the House, except that for lack of sufficient employees of the House in certain places it has been impossible in this and a number of other cases which have been brought to my attention to properly present the papers and to have them properly printed for the use of the House in the consideration of its business.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has several times, during the present session, made the statement that the Democratic majority in this House would be forced to back water upon its House economy program which it inaugurated at the beginning of this Congress, and he points to this small appropriation for a messenger or janitor for the stenographers to committees as evidence of it. If that is the only evidence which he can produce, he has certainly failed to prove his case.

The fact is that at the time that program was presented to the House I made a statement showing exactly what offices we had abolished and the salaries attached to them, and I coupled with it the frank statement that, as to a few of those places, the plan to abolish was an experiment; that the committee itself was not entirely convinced that we could get along without the services of some of these minor officials and employees; and I named, in the statement which I then made to the House, the positions which we might be compelled, after some experience, to reinstate.

That statement was made at the very beginning, when we knew that it might be possible that we should have to restore some of these places. I mentioned places which, I think, aggregated in annual salaries $11,000 or $12,000. But time has demonstrated and the experience of the House has shown that, of those places, the only ones which it has been necessary to restore are these two messengers or janitors to the reporters of debates and the stenographers to committees. So that, instead of this appropriation being evidence of our having made a mistake at that time, it shows that we knew exactly what we were talking about and what we were doing, and the fact that we have not restored any of the other places that we thought we might have to restore shows that the original plan of the committee was well thought out and has worked properly in practice.

Oh, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] can find mistakes made by employees of the House, but the employees of the Sixty-second Congress have had no monopoly in such mistakes. He, with his vivid memory, can find many cases where employees of the House in recent years, in previous Congresses, have made errors and mistakes which have been costly. I recall that the very first bill which was passed by this Congress, after this session began, was a bill to correct a mistake made by seasoned and experienced Republican employees of the former Congress, who had made such an error in enrolling a bill that we were compelled to pass a measure correcting a mistake amounting to several hundred thousand dollars in an appropriation. I would not hold that against them, and it was not evidence that we did not have sufficient employees in a former Congress. It was evidence simply of the frailty of human nature and of the fact that the class of men who become employees of this House can not be expected to do everything with the expertness and exactness with which such duties would be performed if left entirely to the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken, in the first place, in stating that these are the only places which have been restored. I am not complaining about the employees of the House on account of the mistakes which they have made, because a number of them are overworked. I did feel like complaining on last Saturday—although I do not now—when I desired to get a copy of the Indian appropriation bill from the document room and found it locked up at 1 o'clock, although it is supposed to remain open until at least 5 o'clock; and then when I found the Hall of the House locked, so that I could not get into my desk—merely because the Democratic Members of the House had gone on a trip to visit Mr. Wilson, and the employees assumed that Republicans did not work, when the fact is that Republicans do a large share of the work of this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was a holiday.

Mr. SHARP. I suggest to the gentleman that we have not very often had the opportunity to go to see a Democratic President, and we went to see the next President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. The mere fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] went home or some other place does not constitute a holiday, under the precedents of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not go away for the purpose of going home. I went to visit the next President.

Mr. MANN. I said "home or some other place." I dare say the gentleman did go home. Did not the gentleman go home?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; and I was glad to go home.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to have the gentleman go home once in a while. It will do him good.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Democratic Members of the House had hoped that their Republican colleagues would take advantage of that opportunity to visit the White House, where they have not been going very much lately.

Mr. MANN. If the Republican Members of the House took advantage of the opportunity to do nothing every time the Democratic Members were on a loaf, we would have hard work getting through the business of this House.

Now, I want to say further that, in my judgment, before this session of Congress closes the expenses of this session of Congress, so far as the House of Representatives are concerned, will be proved to be greater than the expenses of any other session of Congress ever held in the history of the Government.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] charges the Democrats of the House with being "loafers." I deny that proposition. The Democrats, as well as the Republicans, have been in session here continuously in this House 13 months out of the last 16 for the purpose of discharging their congressional duties.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FOWLER. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FOWLER. Many of the Democrats in this House have been in attendance here as many days as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has. I remember that a short time ago he took a vacation of some two or three weeks and was away from this Hall continuously during that time.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. That was just after the Chicago convention, was it not?

Mr. FOWLER. No; it was before the Chicago convention, during the Chicago convention, and after the Chicago convention, as I remember.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. He was absent during a much longer time than the Chicago convention.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to yield first to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], and then I will be glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. MANN. Unless he yields now I do not care to have him yield at all. I wish to ask the gentleman if he was referring to me. If he was not, I do not desire him to yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Was the gentleman referring to me on the question of absence?

Mr. FOWLER. I was.

Mr. MANN. Then the statement of the gentleman is entirely erroneous.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not mistaken about my statement. The record of this House will show the absence of the gentleman, and the reason why it will show his absence is because it will show that he was not occupying the floor of the House at any time during that period. Every day he is here the gentleman is "It," so far as the other side of this House is concerned. [Laughter.] I will permit the RECORD to speak as to the truth of my statement. Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois said yesterday that nobody read the RECORD. Does not the gentleman think that is the worst possible reflection upon the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not; because of the fact that it is left to gentlemen to read the RECORD or not, as they see fit. Those who are here in attendance do not need to read the RECORD, so far as the House proceedings are concerned, because they ought to be conversant with every subject discussed. It may be necessary for Members to read the proceedings of the Senate in order to be properly informed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to put the question I wanted to propound a moment ago?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman said the Democratic Party was reflected upon by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] resented the imputation and said that the Democratic Party could not be charged with a lack of industry. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; in substance.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Had the gentleman special reference to the adaptability of the Democratic Party in securing appropriations?

Mr. FOWLER. My reference was to the continuous attendance here, not only of Democrats, but of Republicans. I am not making a charge against Republicans for their absence.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not get the drift of my question.

Mr. FOWLER. I am objecting to the statement made by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that my colleague have five minutes more.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not asking any extension of time, Mr. Chairman, but I will yield to the gentleman if my time is extended.

Mr. GUDGER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] stated that I was absent from the House two or three weeks. If I had been absent from the House two or three weeks, I should consider that I had earned the right to be away, and except my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] I do not think a single Member of the House would begrudge me the absence from the House, so far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. FOWLER rose.

Mr. MANN. I do not yield at this time. In a moment I will.

But the gentleman stated that I was absent two or three weeks during the time of the Chicago convention and following the convention. The statement is not correct. Any Member of the House could have discovered the fact by examining the RECORD, if he were absent, or, if he had been present, certainly he would remember the fact. I was here during the entire time of the Chicago convention, and have been here since with the exception of absence when the House was not transacting business. I went home before the Chicago convention for a week, and only regret, as far as I am personally concerned, that I could not have made it two or three weeks. It is not necessary for any Member of the House in making statements, which he ought to know about, to so enlarge them through an inflamed imagination that they become wholly lacking in fact. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to have it understood that I am complaining at the absence of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have no doubt that that side would like to see me absent more.

Mr. FOWLER. No; Mr. Chairman, I think that every man in this House counts the day lost when he can not enjoy a joke, and the presence of the gentleman from Illinois here fills that idea completely, because he makes a joke of his side of the House by monopolizing the time and throwing into the teeth of the Members of that side of the House imputations that they are not intelligent enough to take charge of measures here and handle them as representatives of the people.

Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed at all to complain at the absence of the gentleman from Illinois, and would not have said anything with reference thereto if he had not charged the Democrats, for the purpose of making a false record, with being away from the House, loafing—an imputation of laziness and indifference—a condition which is deplorable if true.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when I made the statement to which the gentleman refers and which he does not correctly quote, I counted the membership of the House present in the consideration of an appropriation bill carrying millions of dollars, and out of the 250 or 260 Democratic Members of this House I noticed on the floor at the time 2 more than 20—22—less than one-tenth of the responsible majority in the House present in the Chamber attending to the duties for which they ought to come here, for which they were elected, and for which they are sent. They were not attending to business here. I do not know whether they were loafing or not. They were not here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And this is in the consideration of what bill?

Mr. MANN. The general deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, that is because of the confidence which the Members have in the committee over which I have the honor to preside.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I see about 32 here now, while there are but 18 on the gentleman's side.

Mr. MANN. What I said was true when I made the statement.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply to the statement of my colleague from Illinois, and repeat that when a man has spent 13 months out of 16 months here in continuous work of an arduous character I think he needs a rest, and I am not complaining of any man who asks for an opportunity to go home to see his family or to take a few days' vacation, but what I do object to is the charge of the gentleman from Illinois that such has been done on the Democratic side to the extent of "loafing" and to the extent of neglecting our duties. I do not charge to any Republican any dereliction of duty, and yet, Mr. Chairman, I assert that the attendance on this side of the House is as continuous and as great in number as it is on the other side of the House; and I say that without any reflection upon any gentleman on the other side of the House. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that it is unfair for a gentleman on the floor of this House to stand here and make a charge against Members who are coming here every day and working hard in the discharge of their legislative duties. It is unfair to single out an individual or a party in order to make that charge when, if the charge were true, it would apply to the other side equally as well.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman refers to a condition that existed here some time ago when the deficiency bill was up for consideration.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I refer to it now.

Mr. FOWLER. It is well understood, Mr. Chairman, that men come here to work each day before eating their dinners. It is also well understood that some time during the daily session of the House Members go down to the restaurant for lunch in this building because it is necessary. This consumes only 20 or 30 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois does it the same as other gentlemen on either side of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Everybody's doing it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman knows that is the custom, and he knows that every man on the floor of the House is doing it. That is where many of the Members are at this time. Mr. Chairman, to try to make a point of absence of Democrats or Republicans while they are at lunch is unfair, and it is unmanly and uncalled for. I trust that my colleague from Illinois will never be guilty of such conduct again on the floor of this House.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, in order that the RECORD may show that I am present here this morning I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed. [Laughter.]

Mr. GUDGER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I think the roll ought to be called as a reply to what the gentleman from Illinois said.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-three Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Call my name.

The name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri was called, and he answered "Present."

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25970, the general deficiency bill, and finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called, and 189 Members responded, and he reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called, and 189 Members responded, a quorum, and he reports the names of the absentees, which will be entered upon the Journal. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the sum appropriated for expert clerical and stenographic services, to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House on vouchers approved by Representative OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, is reappropriated and made available for expenditure during the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the item just read, or I will make the point of order. I see the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] here. It is not customary, of course, to appropriate money to be expended under the direction of one Member of Congress. When this appropriation——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois please state to what paragraph he refers?

Mr. MANN. To the paragraph contained in lines 14 to 19. When this appropriation was made in the last Congress it was made to be expended under the direction of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], knowing he was to be the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and it was not known that there would be a special session of Congress; but it was known that the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee would naturally desire to make investigations of tariff questions, and there was no other way to provide the necessary money for it. Now, of course, the Committee on Accounts at any time has authority to allow to the Ways and Means Committee such expenditures of money or such additional aid as may be required. Now, does anyone think we ought to start the practice of appropriating money to be expended by the chairman of an existing committee as he pleases, when the House is organized and has control over the situation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman from Illinois has given me an opportunity to make a statement in regard to this item. Before this Congress met the Republican Congress which preceded it, knowing that there would be an effort on our part to take testimony and rewrite the tariff laws, at my request and at the request of Members on this side of the House, put in one of the bills—I think it was in the general deficiency bill—a provision providing for $7,500 to be used by the Ways and Means Committee for clerical hire; that is, to be used by myself for clerical hire, but really intended for the use of the Ways and Means Committee for clerical hire in the investigation work preparatory on tariff bills. That $7,500, of course, was made available for me to expend as an individual and not as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, because the Ways and Means Committee had not been organized, but the caucus in the preceding February had practically selected me as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Now, I have taken that money. We have reported to this House six or seven important tariff bills. We have made more voluminous reports to this House on tariff bills than any Committee on Ways and Means has ever made to the House of Representatives. I have been very careful in the expenditure of the money. There is now about, I do not know the exact amount, but there is in the neighborhood of $1,500 still remaining of the $7,500 appropriated, but the appropriation only made the money available up to the 1st day of July. Therefore what remains is not available and can not be drawn out on my signature because the 1st day of July has passed. Now, when you consider the fact that it cost over $50,000 in extra clerical hire for the Ways and Means Committee to prepare the Payne tariff bill, that the Republican House paid to one of its regular employees in the Ways and Means Committee in the preparation of that bill in extra compensation $5,000, whereas I have not paid a single extra dollar of this amount that was allowed by the House to any man who was on the regular rolls of that committee, but a large portion was paid to Mr. Parsons, the expert whom I had employed at $400 a month, to aid the Ways and Means Committee. So that there is none of it that has been paid out except for clerical help that was actually needed. I have not asked this House for a single dollar for all the work that has been done by the Ways and Means Committee. The total amount that we have asked for in the way of furniture or extra stationery or extra work from the Accounts Committee during this entire Congress has been $96. I think that is just as good a showing as any Ways and Means Committee has ever made in the way of expenditure of money allowed to it. We have been as economical as we could. I want to state to the gentleman from Illinois the reason why we ask that this item be made in this way. When the money was appropriated and made available the Clerk of the House under the former appropriation drew the money from the Treasury and put it in the Clerk's office down here in the House. It is there now. It is not in the Treasury, it is in the Clerk's office and in the Clerk's hands. Possibly under those circumstances I could have gone on and checked until the full amount was used, but I did not want to do that.

Now, it is not there to the credit of the committee; it is not in the Treasury; and it is not available to anybody, if you continue this appropriation, except on my order. There is not a voucher in the hands of the Clerk except for clerk hire—for persons employed. Now, we could let the other $1,200 or $1,500 lapse but we have got other tariff work to pursue. I do not often call for extra clerical help, but occasionally I need it. I think before Congress adjourns I probably will need the balance of this $1,200. It is there in the Clerk's office. If I had wanted to use it I could have checked out before the 1st of July came, but as I did not have an immediate necessity for its use I left it there. Now, I think the Ways and Means Committee is asking very little of this House when we ask that we should have available the balance of this appropriation that was made two years ago to continue our clerical force, and if you want to convert it back into the Treasury you will have to provide for the Clerk to return the money to the Treasury, because it is not in the Treasury. To do that the only proper way to make it available is to authorize the expenditure of this unpaid balance. I am not asking any additional appropriation. This bill merely asks that I may be authorized during the balance of this session to expend this $1,200 or $1,500 that is in the Clerk's hands that was made available for the Ways and Means Committee's use two years ago. I think we will need that amount of money. If we do not need it, I certainly will not expend it, because I did not expend it when I did not need it and had the opportunity to expend it. And I can see no reason why it should not go on this bill and be made available.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I discussed this matter with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and I think he overlooks this: I call his attention to the fact that this was an unusual method of providing for the expenditure of money, and this balance of $1,500, or whatever it may be, is still unexpended. And as the services that were likely to be required were more or less of a temporary character, and clerks might be employed for a short time, and then dropped and others picked up, the gentleman from Alabama thought that to continue the method that had been followed with the original appropriation would be much more convenient than to ask the Committee on Accounts from time to time for some little assistance when it was impossible to determine definitely how long the assistant might be required.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] seemed to think that I was making some question about his method of expenditure of the money, and saw fit, I think wholly unnecessarily, to explain how he expended it and how economically he had expended it. When a Republican House provided this appropriation they had confidence in the gentleman from Alabama making any expenditure with reasonable economy and making it fairly, and no one doubts the gentleman has entirely fulfilled the expectations of the Republican Congress when they made the appropriation available under his order.

That is not the question which I raised at all. I am not sure under what authority the Treasury Department has turned over this money to the Clerk as disbursing agent. There is no authority in the appropriation for that purpose. The appropriation provided that the money should be disbursed on vouchers approved by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the gentleman overlooks the fact that the appropriation provided it should be disbursed by the Clerk on vouchers approved by me, and therefore the Clerk drew the money and put it in the vault.

Mr. MANN. Very well. But the gentleman made a mistake in assuming that he could have drawn this money out before the 1st of July, because he could not draw any of it out, except on vouchers approved by him, and he could not put in false vouchers, because that is not in his moral power.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I meant that I might have been extravagant.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman might have expended it. But if the gentleman had been the kind of a man who would have expended it unnecessarily, it never would have been appropriated. The point here is whether it shall become the practice of the House, when the House is organized, that any committee can have a resolution presented to the Committee on Accounts and through the Committee on Accounts to the House, and whether with that power we shall still appropriate money to be expended by the chairman of a committee. I have been the chairman of a committee of Congress for a number of years. I often saw occasions where I thought I could profitably, in the interest of the public service, expend money. Yet I never thought that it would have been a desirable thing to have given the chairmen of committees the power to spend money directly on vouchers approved by them; and I do not think the gentleman from Alabama would disagree with me on that proposition at all. If it is understood that this kind of an item is not to be considered as a precedent, granting the appropriation of money to be expended wholly under the personal jurisdiction of Members of the House, after the House is organized, when the committees are organized, when the House has complete control over its contingent fund, out of which such expenditures ordinarily are paid and ought to be paid, I shall not insist on the point of order with that understanding. I am opposed to making precedents here to undertake to make appropriations, however controlled, simply by the personal membership of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, I will say to him candidly that I agree with him. I think he is absolutely right in his statement that the House should not make appropriations for expenditures to be controlled under one man. It has already been explained how it happened that this appropriation was made available to me.

Mr. MANN. I think the appropriation in the first place was properly made because of the peculiar circumstances at that time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not make a precedent. If it was to ask for any new money that had not been drawn out of the Treasury and had not been made available, I would go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will admit it is making a precedent. The original appropriation was made because the House was not to be in session until the first of December. The Democrats had a majority in the Sixty-second Congress, not yet having their seats, and desired to have work done in reference to the tariff. The House in the Sixty-second Congress not being organized, and not expecting to be organized until December, there was no way of providing for payment of money out of the contingent fund and no way of providing that the committee should have control of it. And inasmuch as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] had been selected by a Democratic caucus as the future chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, it was entirely proper to allow him to control the expenditure of the money. But of course that situation does not apply now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, the only thing wherein I say it does apply now is this: As to this particular money, it is in the hands of the Clerk of the House. It has got either to go back into the Treasury or be made available under the old law to my order. What I say is this: This does not establish a precedent. I object to a precedent being established as much as the gentleman from Illinois. I think we have been economical in the expenditure of this money.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman has been too economical. He has not given us enough information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We certainly have not been extravagant. But I will say to the gentleman that before the end of this session, and certainly before the end of the next session, we have got to send out here and there to get a man to do a little incidental work, and that money will be needed; and as I have been economical in the administration of the affairs of the committee and, as I say, more so than any other chairman that I know of, I think it is nothing more than right that we should have this appropriation—money already out of the Treasury—extended so that we can use it. But I do not desire to make any precedent, and rather than have the House think it is making a bad precedent I would prefer that the House should turn it down. But I think the money will be needed, and it will expedite the work of this Congress. The work in the Ways and Means Committee has not been partisan work. It has always been open to both sides of the House and open for individual Members to go there and get the information they desire.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in a few days I shall undertake to test the sense of the House upon the proposition as to whether it is desirable to have information concerning the tariff collected—information which shall be available to all Members of the House and to the country—in connection with a Senate amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing for the Tariff Board. In the meantime I shall not object to the appropriation for the benefit of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have no objection to the appropriation being made—all the appropriation that is necessary in the opinion of the gentleman from Alabama—for carrying on the tariff work and getting information. They need it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if what the gentleman states were true, in fact, that their work has been open to all the members of the committee, that the minority members had some chance of getting the information which the chairman claims he has gathered together that we may know the sources of that information, from whom it comes, whether it is reliable, what is the nature of it, that we might have a chance to meet the gentlemen who gave that information, if there are any such people; that we might know all about it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. PAYNE. In a moment. The gentleman has spoken in contrast of the amount expended by the last Republican committee in formulating a tariff bill which covered the whole tariff question, and he says that he thinks we expended some $50,000. I never had the curiosity to know what the sum was. I did examine the individual bills and vouchers, and saw to it that they were proper at the time they were certified by me. But that committee did go into the subject. The committee did examine witnesses. That committee did see to it that the minority members of the committee were present during all those examinations, and the committee did not hide and cover up the results of those examinations. The committee published every day hearings of the day before, every word that was said, and, when we closed, our mailing list was something over 2,500 copies, which were sent out daily to the people of the country, with the invitation to them to come in and correct any misstatements that had been made. We were securing information, and we got information.

The gentleman has spoken of the amount of work that he did. Well, I will not say anything about that. I will simply refer the gentleman to the statement of the present Speaker of this House as to the amount of work done by the committee in 1908 and 1909—work which, he says, shortened the lives, no doubt, of every member of the committee, for a vast amount of work was done during the 24 hours of each day during the period of time that that matter was under consideration and investigation by the committee.

Now, I am making these remarks only because I think my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was led into an unfair statement of contrast about the work done and the amount of expenditures, in consideration of the information that was obtained by the committee in 1908 and the amount of information which he has procured for his committee during the past year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am not reflecting on the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] or on his management of the committee. When I say his committee expended over $50,000 in preparing the last tariff bill, I do not say that they expended it unwisely. I do not say that the amounts he paid for services were more than those services were worth, but I simply call attention to the fact that the gentleman paid in extra compensation to his regular employees more than we have asked for all the work we have done. That is not intended as a criticism, but it is intended as a justification of the amount of our expenditures to show to the House.

Now, as to the information. every bit of information that we have gathered we have published, and it is in reports or on record in the files of this House. The sources of information are noted in the reports. We have had no hearings from the manufacturers, because the manufacturers of this country had appeared before the gentleman's committee only 18 months before we went to work, and had stated their whole case. I stated to them in an open circular, and to many of them personally, that if they had anything new to say by which they intended to supplement their statements when they appeared before the committee presided over by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] we would give them hearings. But none of them could show me that they had anything more to add to what they had already stated, and I did not care to take up the time of the committee and the time of the House.

Now, outside of the interested manufacturers, we had no applications for hearings. Most of our information that we gathered, that was not in the hearings that had previously been taken by the committee, came from the department. We needed the clerks to tabulate results. Some of it came from the Tariff Board, for which we spent $250,000 a year to accumulate these results.

Now, when I say that the additional pay for clerical work by the Ways and Means Committee in this Congress to bring up these tariff bills amounted to only about $6,000, and was hardly one-tenth of what the previous Ways and Means Committees have paid for the same class of work, I do not mean to say it as reflecting on the committee presided over by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] or to criticize his work, because I am here to testify that he worked strenuously, earnestly, and gave his best endeavors to his committee and to the House. The only point in reference to which I have to criticize the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] about his tariff work is that I do not believe in the theory on which he produced his results.

I would not ask for the continuation of this appropriation if I did not think it was for the benefit of the House and necessary for the House that we should have a few hundred dollars more in order to finish up the tariff work we have on hand.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution making appropriation for checking the ravages of the army worm.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24450) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DU PONT, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21214. An act to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations, to persons, and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special excise tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, certified to Congress in House Document No. 776, at its present session, $39,971; said judgments to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian Service: Provided, That no one of said judgments provided in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exists no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, after line 15, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,305,257.19, being the net amount of a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911, exclusive of the amount awarded for attorney's fee, pursuant to the provisions of the jurisdictional act approved March 3, 1909, the same to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after the date of said judgment, the amount thereof and the interest accruing thereon to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians and be held as a trust fund in accordance with the act of June 15, 1880, being "An act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman will contend that this is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do very seriously contend that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I understand the point of order is reserved. I do not believe the amendment is subject to a point of order, and am sure the gentleman from New York will not make it when he has had an opportunity to examine it.

It has been the custom of the House for many years to provide appropriations in deficiency appropriation bills to pay judgments of the Court of Claims. The amendment which I have offered proposes to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims from which no appeal has been taken, and the time for appeal has expired.

Yesterday, in the general debate, I interrogated the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as to why this item was not included in the pending bill, and he stated very frankly that it ought to be upon this bill if it was going to be appropriated for at all. I want to call attention to the further statement that he made in response to an inquiry by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] with reference to an item in the bill that provided an appropriation to pay certain judgments. He said:

Mr. Chairman, I did not look particularly to see what the judgments were for. They were final judgments of the court, from which no appeal had been taken, and from which none could be taken. It is customary for Congress to pay judgments of the courts after the time for appeal has expired.

Mr. Chairman, this is just such a judgment, a final judgment, of the Court of Claims. No appeal had been filed, and the time for appeal has expired; therefore no appeal can be taken. If it is not in order to provide for the payment of such a judgment in this bill, then I do not know on what bill it would be in order to provide for it. It was stated in the general debate that one of the reasons why it was not provided for in this bill was that it had been added to the Indian appropriation bill as an amendment at the other end of the Capitol.

Certainly it does not belong on the Indian appropriation bill, which is a bill making appropriations for the current expenses of the Indian Bureau; and an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,500,000 to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims would not be in order if offered to the Indian appropriation bill in the House, for it is a deficiency and would only be in order in a deficiency bill.

If the Senate amendment to the Indian appropriation bill is concurred in, it will increase the amount carried by the bill the amount of this judgment, thus seeming to increase the appropriations for the Indian Bureau unfairly, because that item should not and can not be charged to the annual expenditures of the Indian Bureau. Therefore it ought not to be in the Indian appropriation bill, but should be in this or some other bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] said yesterday: "It is customary for Congress to pay judgments of the courts after the time for appeal has expired."

I am going to briefly refer to the basis for this judgment, and will first state that in 1868 the Ute Indians occupied a very large territory in what is now the State of Colorado and, I think, perhaps extending into adjoining States. A treaty was entered into with the Indians, and article 2 of the treaty which was made in 1868 ceded all of the lands that the Indians claimed, with the exception of about 15,000,000 acres.

Article 2 of the treaty reads as follows:

Said Tabegauche Band of Utah Indians hereby cede, convey, and relinquish all of their claims, right, title, and interest in any, to any, and all lands within the territory of the United States, wherever situated, excepting that which is included within the following boundaries, which are hereby reserved as their hunting grounds.

Then follows a description, by metes and bounds, of the lands reserved, which are set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the Ute Indians, comprising 14,784,000 acres of land.

By treaty dated September 13, 1873, the Indians ceded to the United States 3,059,200 acres. That treaty was ratified by act of April 29, 1874. There is no contention with reference to the payment for these lands, and it does not enter into the questions involved in the judgment that my amendment proposes to pay.

By a treaty approved June 5, 1880, the Indians ceded the balance of their reservation to the United States. In other words, they ceded something over 11,000,000 acres to the United States and relinquished all their right, title, and interest therein, with the exception of such lands as were allotted them in severalty.

The individual allotments were made, and by the terms of the treaty the surplus lands were to be disposed of by the United States at the same price and on the same terms as other lands of like character, and it was expressly provided that none of the lands should be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but sold for cash and the proceeds received from the sale to be employed for reimbursing the United States for all sums paid out or set apart by the Government for the benefit of the Indians, the residue to be deposited in the Treasury to their credit. In other words, the Indians ceded their right to 11,000,000 acres of land and the United States agreed to sell it and account to the Indians for the proceeds received from the sale.

There had been sold up to and including June 30, 1908, 1,310,686.38 acres, for the sum of $2,204,694.71.

The Government from time to time has created and established a number of forest and other reservations, covering the lands ceded by the Indians, aggregating 3,199,258 acres. That is, the Government instead of selling this amount of land, as the treaty of 1880 required, appropriated it to its own use and made forest reservations of it.

By a proviso incorporated in the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1909, jurisdiction was conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment on the claims and rights of the Indians, including the value of all lands ceded by the Indians which had been set apart and reserved from the public lands as reservations, or for other public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States.

Right at that point I want to again call the attention of the committee to this situation: This act of 1880, by which the Indians ceded this 11,000,000 acres of land to the United States, provided in express terms that the lands should be sold as other public lands were to be sold, and the proceeds were to go to the Indians, except the United States was to be reimbursed for all sums paid out or set apart for the benefit of the Indians. The jurisdictional act of March 3, 1909, directed the court to "except such sums as have been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration."

The Government did sell, as a matter of fact, and received pay for something over $2,000,000 worth of land—to be exact $2,204,694.71—and withdrew from public sale large areas and incorporated them in forest and other reservations, the amount so withdrawn being 3,199,258 acres.

Mr. Chairman, the jurisdictional act of March 3, 1909, authorized and directed the court to ascertain how many acres of land had been appropriated by the Government, determine its value, and to render a judgment against the United States for whatever that amount might be.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman kindly restate the amount received by the Government for the sale of these ceded lands?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I shall do it in a moment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to base a question upon it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The amount of land that had been sold up to and including June 30, 1908, was 1,310,686.36 acres, and it was sold for the sum of $2,204,694.71.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What part of that sum has been paid to the use of the Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say this in answer to that question, that no part of it has been directly paid, as I understand it, but certain moneys have been expended from time to time for the benefit of the Indians, and in the jurisdictional act the court was directed to ascertain how much money had been received from the sale of ceded lands, also the value of lands that the Government had appropriated for forest reservations, and then was to set off against any amount they might find was due such moneys as had been paid or expended for the Indians as gratuities or otherwise, except in cases where there had been an adequate consideration.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The reason I asked the question was that it is my understanding, although that was questioned yesterday by the gentleman from New York, that a large part of the judgment was for the selling price of the ceded lands sold by the Government, but I want to further add that whether that be true or not it does not affect the validity and merit of the claim.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is not correct in any event. The court found that 3,199,258 acres had been included within forest or other reservations, and that the Indians should be paid therefor at $1.25 per acre, and found the amount that was owing from the United States to the Indians for those lands to be $3,999,092.50.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. As I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yesterday, he makes a distinction between what has been reserved and put into forest reservations against what has been sold by the Government. I understand the gentleman makes no distinction about that, because the price has been fixed and is just the same as if the Government had sold, inasmuch as it had taken over into the forest reservations the 3,000,000 acres of land at so much per acre.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that the average price received for the lands that were sold was $1.68 an acre. The court found that as to the lands that the United States had withdrawn and had appropriated for its own use for forest reservations it should pay to the Indians $1.25 per acre, so they do not get quite as much for the lands taken by the Government as they get for the lands that the Government sold for the benefit of the Indians. But in the opinion of the court it is stated that the lands that had been disposed of are probably the better lands, and that in these forest reservations perhaps some of the land is of little value, and therefore the Indians would be getting a fair and adequate price if paid $1.25 per acre, and the court fixed that price, and in making a finding as to the value of the land only did what Congress by the jurisdictional act expressly directed.

I would like to read from the opinion of the court as reported in volume 45, Court of Claims Reports, page 440. I am reading from the opinion on pages 467–8:

> The jurisdictional act directs this court to hear, determine, and render final judgment on the claims and rights of the Utes under the agreement of 1880, including the value of all lands "which have been set apart and reserved from the public lands or public reservations or for public uses under existing laws and proclamations of the President, as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement." We are told to render judgment for the value of these lands "as if disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States, as provided by said agreement." The agreement referred to contained directions as to the manner in which these lands were to be disposed of, i. e., they were to be surveyed, were not to be liable to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, but were to be sold for cash only. Hence the direction that we are to render judgment for the value of these lands as if disposed of "as provided by said agreement" evidently means that we are to regard them as having been sold for cash at the date of entry of judgment, and this sum is to be placed to the credit of the plaintiffs.

The amount allowed by the court for the lands appropriated by the United States, namely, $3,999,092.50, together with the $2,204,000 received from the sale of ceded lands from 1880 up to 1908, aggregates $6,203,767.21. The jurisdictional act directed the court to ascertain all moneys that had been paid to the Indians, whether as gratuities or otherwise, except such sums as had been paid for a specific purpose and an adequate consideration, and set off the amount against any sum found due the Indians. The court found there had been paid to the Indians the sum of $2,795,155.81, which sum, when deducted from the amount found to be due, left a balance of $3,408,611.40, for which judgment was entered.

At this point I desire to call attention to the fact that there are only 2,000 Indians of the Ute Tribes, and that in addition to the amount that they are to receive by the judgment there are 7,569,144.38 acres of land yet to be disposed of, and the proceeds will have to be paid to the Indians. It transpires that, so far as these Indians are concerned, when they made the treaty of 1868 and again in 1880 they made a very good bargain with the United States, and probably the best bargain that any tribe of Indians ever made with the Government; but that does not change the fact that it is the moral duty of the Government to pay its obligations to them and to other Indians, and whatever we owe them under solemn treaties and agreements we ought to pay.

The court, in February, 1911, set aside the judgment and rendered a new judgment, finding that after July 1, 1908, there had been received $207,456.21 for lands disposed of after that time and that the Government had expended $939,835.65 on account of the Indians, leaving a balance of $107,619.65 to the credit of the Indians, which was added to the judgment rendered originally when this case was determined in 1910 and a final judgment of $3,516,231.05 was entered, which amount is due the Indians, less what has been paid to the attorneys who succeeded in getting through Congress the jurisdictional act, a service that consisted almost entirely of lobbying in the House and Senate, $210,973.86, and they have received their money.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. CULLOP. When was this last judgment rendered? What was the date of it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The last judgment was rendered on February 13, 1911, too late to be certified as an item to be appropriated for in the last Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why was that too late?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There was time for an appeal. In other words, the Government was entitled to some time within which to take an appeal. I do not know just what the time would be, but until the time for appeal had expired the judgment would not be certified to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury; and as the judgment was entered February 11, 1911, and Congress adjourned March 4 following, I am certain it will be conceded that the time for taking an appeal had not expired.

Mr. CULLOP. There has never been an appropriation made to pay that judgment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Never.

Mr. CULLOP. How did these lawyers get their money if there was no appropriation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. By their shrewdness in putting into the jurisdictional act a provision that enabled them to obtain their money just as soon as the judgment was rendered; and they have been paid.

Mr. CULLOP. But if no money was appropriated to pay this judgment, who had authority to pay them out of the Treasury?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am only stating to the gentleman what the facts are.

For the information of the gentleman from Indiana I will say that the jurisdictional act of March 3, 1909, relative to the compensation to the attorneys, contains the following language: "Said compensation shall be paid to such attorney by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury arising from the sale of said ceded lands or from the proceeds of said judgment."

At that time of the ceded lands there had been sold 1,310,686.36 acres for the sum of $2,204,694.71, and under the act of 1880 this money belonged to the Indians, and they had this amount due them less any moneys that may have been expended on their account, and therefore I assume that the disbursing officer of the Treasury Department considered he was authorized to pay the attorneys, and I do not suppose he could have done so unless the comptroller so decided.

Mr. CULLOP. What disbursing officer paid this?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was paid through the Treasury Department. I am unable to give the details, except as I have stated.

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly there is no authority to pay it if there had been no money appropriated for that purpose, and there would surely be a liability on the part of the officer who paid it to refund it back to the Government. I do not understand that there is any authority——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not yield for a speech. If I can have plenty of time I will gladly yield. I think I have already stated upon what authority the attorneys were paid.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield before he gets too far away from the question of this judgment? Was it not provided for in the last appropriation bill, in the last Congress? I wish to say it is my recollection, and I had occasion to inquire into that, that there was considerable time allowed in which to take an appeal from that judgment, and I believe, if the gentleman will inquire and wishes to insert the matter in his remarks, that he will find that there were two or three months in which to take an appeal from that judgment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman it was not certified to Congress until January 6, 1912, and the item is incorporated in House Document 410, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

The letter from the Secretary of the Treasury submitting the estimate is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 6, 1912.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, of this date, submitting an estimate of appropriation for the payment of a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911, $3,305,257.19.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

Accompanying the estimate is a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 6, 1912.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith an estimate for the appropriation of the net amount of a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911, aggregating the sum of $3,305,257.19, for incorporation in the general deficiency bill.

The estimate has been submitted to the President and has received his approval. It is forwarded, through your department, for the appropriate action of the Congress.

Very respectfully, WALTER L. FISHER, Secretary.

I want to say, for the information of the House, that the court took into consideration all of the items that had been expended on account of the Indians and found that there should be a set-off of $2,795,155, and that amount was charged to the Indians. The court did not set off certain other amounts that the defendants claimed ought to be allowed, on the ground that there was an adequate consideration in the treaties under which these expenditures were made and the jurisdictional act so directed. In the opinion the court said:

Congress from time to time made appropriations of money to the plaintiffs, which in terms were made in pursuance of the treaties of 1863 and 1868. (13 Stats., 560; 17 id., 457.) After such treaty stipulations with the plaintiffs and after such recognition of their validity for more than 40 years, we do not think the defendants can successfully set up the claim that these payments were made without adequate consideration. Certainly no such claim would ever be made against any people other than Indians. We do not think, therefore, that the plaintiffs are properly chargeable with any payments made to them under and pursuant to the treaties of 1863 and 1868. We are also asked to charge the plaintiffs with $70,064.78, appropriated by act of Congress May 27, 1902 (32 Stats., 263), to be paid to the Uinta and White River Utes. This appears to relate to an entirely different transaction than the one under consideration, * * * and said sum of $70,064.78 was appropriated to be paid said Indians for relinquishing their title to such unallotted lands, the same to be reimbursed in the manner before stated.

I have examined the treaties, and I find that the court could not, in view of the language in the jurisdictional act, do different than it did in refusing to charge these amounts against the Indians. On the other hand, the plaintiffs contended that they were entitled to compound interest from 1880 and claimed nearly two million and a half dollars of interest, which the court disallowed. It not only disallowed the compound interest, but it disallowed simple interest. The Court of Claims, under date of February 13, 1911, under the heading "Conclusion of law," stated as follows:

Upon the previous findings of fact, and including the above supplemental finding, the former judgment is set aside, and the court now decides as a conclusion of law that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment against the United States in the sum of $3,516,231.05 as and for the sum due to them up to and including June 30, 1910, out of which judgment, as provided by the jurisdictional act and the stipulation between claimants' attorneys, there shall be paid to Josiah M. Vale, Esq., attorney of record in said cause, for himself and all other attorneys and counsel interested in the prosecution of said cause before committees of Congress and this court 6 per cent thereof, amounting in the aggregate to $210,973.86.

Gentlemen, the attorneys have been paid, and unless Congress makes an appropriation to pay this judgment in the near future I apprehend that these same gentlemen will probably get a contract with the Indians for the purpose of collecting the judgment; and when Congress makes the appropriation they will get $210,000 more, and therefore we ought to provide for its payment now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think the Secretary of the Interior will approve any such contract as that, which is necessary in order to make it valid?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman there is no approved contract for the fees which were allowed in this case. They were allowed by the court.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law specifically provides for such allowance, which is very important. If it had not been for that provision of the statute no contract made between the attorneys and the Indians for their services could have been enforced unless it had been approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that those gentlemen took care of that when the jurisdictional act was prepared and incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill, and they left it to the court to determine what they should receive.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact the court did not determine the matter, but took the agreement between the counsel as to what the fees should be?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not, because the jurisdictional act of March 3, 1909, provides:

In rendering judgment herein the court shall fix upon a quantum meruit and set apart a just and reasonable compensation to the attorneys on behalf of plaintiffs who have rendered actual service in perfecting said claim before the committees of Congress and in conducting the said cause before the courts.

Mr. MANN. See what the judgment says.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The court says:

The jurisdictional act provides that such fees are to be allowed for services before committees of Congress in the matter of this claim as well as for services before the courts.

It appears that the principal services rendered in this matter were before committees in Congress. Such services can hardly be allowed for on the basis of the professional services of a lawyer, and this fact renders it somewhat difficult to determine the amount properly to be fixed. The fact also should be noted that there was no appeal from the decision of this court in this suit, which would necessarily involve considerably more labor and expense; neither were any witnesses examined on either side. In fact, the whole case was tried upon the record as made up by official reports and public documents. The jurisdictional act by which the suit comes to this court provides that upon the rendition of judgment herein the payment to the claimants of the annuity of $50,000 per annum shall cease, and the fund of $1,250,000 set apart for them in the Treasury shall no longer exist as a trust fund for their benefit. This fact materially reduces the actual benefit which the claimants are to receive by virtue of the judgment.

I want to call attention to the fact that these Indians had to their credit, or what amounted to their credit, $1,250,000, about which there was no dispute, and the jurisdictional act provided that that should be included in the judgment, and so it did become a part of the judgment, and the attorneys got 6 per cent on the amount of $1,250,000, which was in the Treasury, and about which there was no contention. In other words, the attorneys have received $75,000 for having a fund that was in the Treasury, to all intents and purposes, for simply having it included in a judgment, and thereby lost $50,000 that was paid to them annually, being 4 per cent interest on $1,250,000, and now the Indians have nothing—only the judgment.

In order that the committee may clearly understand just what this $1,250,000 proposition is, I will read the third article of the treaty made in 1880, which is as follows:

That in consideration of the cession of territory to be made by the said confederated bands of the Ute Nation, the United States, in addition to the annuities and sums for provisions and clothing stipulated and provided for in existing treaties and laws, agrees to set apart and hold, as a perpetual trust for the said Ute Indians, a sum of money, or its equivalent in bonds of the United States, which shall be sufficient to produce the sum of $50,000 per annum, which sum of $50,000 shall be distributed per capita to them annually forever.

In the act of Congress approved June 15, 1880, ratifying the treaty, a provision was incorporated, which is section 5 of the act, and reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, set apart and hold as a perpetual trust fund for said Ute Indians an amount of money sufficient at 4 per cent to produce annually $50,000, which interest shall be paid to them per capita in cash annually, as provided in said agreement.

It will be noted that the treaty obligated the United States to pay the Indians $50,000 annually forever. The jurisdictional act, as has already been stated, provided that $1,250,000 should be incorporated in the judgment and thereafter interest should cease.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. If the gentleman will permit, does the gentleman know how many attorneys there were?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have this information, the court gives the names of the attorneys that appeared as counsel in the case and the names of several that it is stated appeared on the brief.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Will the gentleman please state the names of the attorneys?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will be glad to do so, as they appear in the report. They are Mr. J. M. Vale and Mr. Marion Butler for the claimants, and Messrs. C. C. Clements, James M. E. O'Grady, Samuel J. Crawford, Richard F. Pettigrew, Melvin E. Grigsby, Adair Wilson, William C. Shelley, and Kie Oldham were on the brief.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Will the gentleman state how they received their money if there was no authority at law for it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am unable to inform the gentleman, except the disbursing officer of the Treasury undoubtedly assumed, and perhaps rightly, as I have already stated, that he had the authority under the jurisdictional act, there being some $2,000,000 received for the sale of ceded land, that they could pay the attorneys' fees out of that fund.

Mr. MANN. There was over a million of dollars at that time in the Treasury?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, quite a sum.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. You say the attorneys' fee has been paid and the judgment has not been paid?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The judgment has not been paid, and so far as I know the attorneys are not exercising themselves at the present time to see that the judgment is paid, and I presume it would be better from their standpoint if it is not paid, because it affords an opportunity for another good big fee for getting legislation to pay a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims, and a final judgment, the time for an appeal having expired and no appeal having been taken.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Do you consider the pay reasonable and fair for services rendered?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have some views relative to services rendered by lawyers and others for lobbying before committees of Congress, and especially with individual Members, for as a general thing they do not make a practice of going before committees, but do their work, as before stated, with a few individuals and usually with those comprising the conferees on the Indian appropriation bill. I think my position is pretty well understood upon that question. I do not care to stop and discuss it now. But I do say that we ought not to pass these jurisdictional acts conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine by an amendment on an appropriation bill put on in another body and agreed to in conference, without any consideration in the House and without either the Senate or the House knowing anything about what is behind the claim or the merits of it.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. What act authorized the payment of this attorney's fee?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I assume the jurisdictional act; I have twice stated my opinion regarding it.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. In what Congress?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, and I want to say to the gentleman that this came to the House from the Senate as an item in the Indian appropriation bill and was agreed to in conference. I want to further say in justification of my own position as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs that I was not a Member of Congress at the time this appropriation bill passed. It was during the Sixtieth Congress, when I was not a Member.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question in reference to the attorneys' fees? Were they not computed by the court upon a percentage basis?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. On the basis of 6 per cent, I will say to the gentleman, on the amount of the judgment.

Mr. MANN. Was that not by agreement or stipulation among the counsel?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think not. I think, Mr. Chairman, if you were to get the facts on that you would find that these gentlemen were claiming 15 per cent of this judgmen. And I will say further that there was a former suit brought in the Court of Claims under a resolution sending the matter to the court under the Tucker Act, and it was dismissed by the court for want of jurisdiction. The attorneys in that proceeding were some of the same attorneys in the later proceeding when the judgment was obtained, and they claimed in the first case that they were operating under a contract which had been obtained from the Indians in 1897 which provided a fee of not exceeding 15 per cent. In that suit they were claiming $10,000,000 from the United States.

Mr. MANN. I would like to make another inquiry of the gentleman in this connection. As I understand, the gentleman who had the contract for representing the Indians in this case was a Mr. Vale?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And that there appears in the record in this case as counsel in the case one Marion Butler and one Richard F. Pettigrew? I would like to make the bald inquiry whether those two gentlemen were Members of the United States Senate at the time that Mr. Vale secured his contract to represent the Indians in this matter?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The date would show.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman, I would say that in the Forty-third Court of Claims Report, page 260, is the report in the case of the White River Utes et al. against The United States, and by reference to this opinion I find that the contracts were made in 1896—I think in November. At that time Mr. Butler and Mr. Pettigrew were Members of the Senate. The jurisdictional act that sent this case to the Court of Claims the first time, which was under the Tucker Act, says:

> The said Indians may be represented in the prosecution of said claims by Josiah M. Vale, Courtland C. Clements, Kie Oldham, William C. Shelley, Adair Wilson, and William S. Peabody, the attorneys named in the contracts between said Indians and said attorneys on file in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, bearing date November 7, 1896, October 31, 1896, and July 1, 1897; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to set apart and pay to said attorneys as their compensation a sum of money not to exceed 15 per cent of the sum paid to said Indians, or awarded or found to be due to them or deposited in the Treasury for their benefit as hereinbefore provided.

I am reading from the first jurisdictional act.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. When was that passed?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the Fifty-eighth Congress, first session, which would be in 1908, and the reason the suit was dismissed that was brought under that act was that the court said:

> Thus it will be seen that the bill seeks to confer upon the Secretary of the Interior judicial powers; that is to say, the construction of treaties and agreements and the determination of the amount due for use and occupation, etc. In other words, it makes the Department of the Interior a court in which is to be settled and adjudicated the matters in difference between the Indians and the Government, and calls upon the Secretary of that department for something more than the mere exercise of his present duty which would have been needless. The bill does not call for the "payment of a claim" within the meaning of the fourteenth section of the Tucker Act, but directs the Secretary of the Interior to adjudicate this claim in the manner provided by the bill, and upon such adjudication it is to be paid.
> What is this court called upon to do by the present reference? There can be but one answer to the question, and that is, That it is asked to do just what it would have been the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to do in case the bill had become a law, and that is to try the lawsuit between parties and determine the amount which shall be recovered.
> If Congress desires to give this court jurisdiction to try this lawsuit between these Indians and the Government, and finally adjudicate the matter, it will do so by law conferring upon this court that jurisdiction. It will give this court just the same jurisdiction which the present bill seeks to confer upon the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina rose.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield first to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This jurisdictional act authorizes compensation by attorneys' fees equivalent to 15 per cent of the amount involved?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not to exceed 15 per cent. That was the resolution that passed in 1908. The later act left it to be determined by the court.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What did the contract with the attorneys call for?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I suppose 15 per cent.

In the jurisdictional act, which was incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill in 1909, direction was given to the court to consider the evidence that had been taken in the case which had been dismissed for want of jurisdiction, so that in the last trial it was merely a matter of computation, practically, and the examination of the evidence that had already been taken. In fixing the fee, the court commented as follows:

> It appears that the principal services rendered in this matter were before the committee in Congress. Such services can hardly be allowed for on the basis of the professional services of a lawyer, and this fact renders it somewhat difficult to determine the amount properly to be fixed. The fact also should be noted that there was no appeal from the decision of this court in this suit, which would necessarily involve considerable more labor and expense; neither were any witnesses examined on either side; in fact, the whole case was tried upon the record as made up by official reports and public documents.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Is it not a fact that at the time these contracts were made for the attorneys' fees Marion Butler was then a United States Senator from the State of North Carolina?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding is that he was.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Is it not a fact that afterwards he became a law partner with this recipient of attorneys' fees, Mr. Vale?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think it is well understood that he is the law partner of Mr. Vale.

Mr. Chairman, as to why this appropriation ought to be made, in addition to what I have stated before, this judgment was entered under a provision in the agreement of 1880. The Indians were to be paid annually a sum of money to be determined by computing the interest at 4 per cent on an amount that would equal $1,250,000. Therefore, $1,250,000 was in the Treasury, ostensibly as a paper credit, and the Indians received $50,000 every year. That was charged to them in this judgment.

The jurisdictional act provided that as soon as a judgment was rendered that $1,250,000 should be merged in the judgment, and the interest thereon, which was being paid annually, should cease. Consequently, the Indians have not been receiving the $50,000 a year and have not had a cent since that judgment was entered, so that their condition at the present time is this: Judgment has been entered in their favor against the United States; by reason of that judgment $211,000 in round figures of money that belonged to them has been paid to certain attorneys; $50,000 a year, which they had received annually under the agreement with the Government, has ceased; and the Indians to-day are in a destitute condition. The department, in the estimate which is submitted, makes the statement that the Indians are reported to be in a destitute condition, and by reason of the comptroller's decision there are no means afforded for their relief.

It was thought that under the jurisdictional act this money would be available without an appropriation by Congress. But the comptroller held otherwise, and, consequently, as I have already stated, they are entirely without any income whatever, and we owe it, I say, to these Indians that we make an appropriation to pay this judgment, regardless of whether it is $3,000,000 or $10,000,000; and we ought to do it in order to avoid a further scandal, which will probably follow, in consequence of a large sum of money being paid to somebody who will come here and secure legislation providing an appropriation for the payment of this judgment.

Therefore, I hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will accept this amendment and take care of this on this general deficiency bill, where it properly belongs, so that the conferees on the Indian appropriation bill may be relieved of an item that is now upon the Indian appropriation bill that is not there properly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in order to get the matter adjusted, I shall withdraw the point of order and move that all debate on the pending amendment close in 15 minutes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that all debate close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It is not necessary to appropriate $3,300,000 to satisfy this judgment or carry out its terms, if eventually they should be carried out. A direction to open an account to the credit of the Indians, and a provision for the payment of the interest upon the designated sum, would be all that would be required. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has referred at some length to the more important facts in this case. I have examined, as carefully as possible, the judgment of the Court of Claims. It appears from the findings of fact that sums aggregating $3,322,305.34 expended by the United States for the benefit of these Indians were not set off against their claim. The court states in its opinion that it believes adequate consideration has moved to the United States for these payments.

I have not had opportunity to give that examination which would induce me to be willing to acquiesce in that finding.

From an examination of the opinion of the court it is very difficult to ascertain the reasons for the attitude of the court upon some important phases of the questions involved. I endeavored to have Judge Barney, of the Court of Claims, come here and go over the case with the members of the committee, so that they might be more fully informed regarding it. Unfortunately he is away from the city and will not return until October. There are enough unsatisfactory features about this judgment to make it advisable that the Congress proceed slowly in satisfying it as proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I should like to know if the gentleman thinks Congress ought to proceed so slowly as to give no consideration whatever to a claim of this character?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But consideration is being given.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman knows that I repeatedly demanded a hearing on my bill before his committee.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman's time is limited, but I should like to ask him one more question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not think the gentleman's time needs to be so limited.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if this is not a final judgment of the Court of Claims, and if the time for appeal has not expired?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum present, if the gentleman's time is so precious.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] makes the point of no quorum present. [After counting.] Fifty-one Members present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered "Present."

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HAMMOND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the general deficiency appropriation bill; and, finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 174 Members had responded to their names—a quorum—and he reported the names of the absentees to the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that nothing is in order at this time except for the committee to resume its sitting.

The SPEAKER. Nothing is in order at this juncture except for the committee to resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, as I was stating when the point of order of no quorum was made, it appears from the findings of the Court of Claims that credit was not given to the United States for $3,322,000. More than 7,500,000 acres of land additional will be disposed of for the benefit of those Indians, if I understand the decision correctly, under the terms of this decision. For some reason or other no appeal was taken from this judgment on the part of the United States to the United States Supreme Court. So far as the Committee on Appropriations were able to determine, it was impossible to say, without further investigation, whether legislation should not be enacted compelling an appeal to be taken on behalf of the United States Government before the judgment should be accepted as conclusive against its interests. It is true that these Indians appear to be in a condition where some appropriation is needed for their relief. I hope that before this session of Congress expires provision will be made to tide them over the present situation, but I sincerely trust that this amendment to appropriate $3,300,000, and interest thereon at 4 per cent, for their benefit under this judgment, will not be adopted at this time. It is one of those pieces of legislation incorporated in an appropriation bill in another body, agreed to during the short session of Congress under great pressure. After an opportunity is afforded to examine it most everyone fears to have anything to do with it. Here was legislation of a most remarkable character, providing that the United States should consider as disposed of for cash Indian lands placed in a forest reserve under Executive order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not want the gentleman to misstate the facts, and I know he does not intend to. He misunderstands the situation. Under the treaty of 1880 the Indians ceded all these lands to the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And the United States agreed to sell the land and apply the proceeds to the benefit of the Indians; and it took about 4,000,000 acres and appropriated the land to its own use, creating a number of forest reservations, and the jurisdictional act, incorporated in the Indian appropriation act of 1909, authorized and directed the court to find how much those lands were worth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It did more than that. It provided that lands set aside from public lands or in reservations should be considered as sold for cash. The court apparently has ignored or forgotten the Lone Wolf case, in which the United States Supreme Court, in One hundred and eighty-seventh United States, decided that the power of Congress in these matters was so comprehensive as to completely revolutionize the attitude and the action taken by Congress in these respects. These lands could easily have been in reserves and yet utilized beneficially by the Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, Congress by the jurisdictional act directed the court to do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that, but I am speaking of the extraordinary character of that act and the Court of Claims in fixing the compensation of counsel at $211,000—6 per cent upon the amount of the judgment, which included $1,250,000 already in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians—stated that the services for which compensation was to be awarded were services rendered almost entirely in work before committees of Congress, and it emphasized the fact that it must have required remarkable services and services of a very high order to persuade Congress to treat these lands placed in forest reserves as lands actually sold for cash.

Mr. Chairman, the time does not permit a fuller or more comprehensive discussion of the terms of this judgment. I think it will be sufficient to say to this committee that the Committee on Appropriations took up the question of including an item in this bill to satisfy this judgment. After examination and upon investigation it was so doubtful as to the propriety of recommending the item at this time that, without dissent whatever, it determined that it would be very unwise and improper to make a recommendation until an opportunity should be given to obtain further information that would enable the committee to understand better the decision of the court and to determine whether Congress should not be requested to enact legislation which would require an appeal in order to protect the interests of the United States. I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman does not mean to lay down the policy that the Committee on Appropriations shall stand here and report an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Claims?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not lay that down as a policy, but I say this——

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Wait one moment. The gentleman has answered that question. Will the gentleman give one single instance wherein he thinks this judgment rendered by the Court of Claims is not founded upon justice, except that it had allowed the $210,000 to these attorneys.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; in the tenth finding of fact, found on page 9 of the decision of the court, the court finds that $3,322,305.34, within $200,000 of the amount found to be due to the Indians, had been expended by the United States for the benefit of Indians, and that amount was not allowed as a set-off against the claims of the Indians.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. But will the gentleman not admit——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me conclude my statement. I will state the facts. The court stated that in its opinion, under the treaty, it believed that adequate consideration had moved to the United States for this expenditure. Members of the committee are unable to acquiesce in that determination without further opportunity to investigate. They also desire an opportunity to ascertain why an appeal was not taken on behalf of the United States from this judgment. If the United States Supreme Court determined that this $3,322,000 should have been allowed to the United States as a credit instead of a judgment aggregating $3,500,000 in favor of the Indians there would have been only a judgment of $200,000. Under all of these circumstances, disinterested in the matter, and anxious to do only that which will mete out full judgment to the United States and those claiming to be the beneficiaries under this judgment, the committee requests that this item be not agreed to at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair is in error. The committee did vote to close debate in 10 minutes, but we are proceeding under the 5-minute rule. The gentleman has only had 5 minutes, and therefore the time has not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has occupied a longer period than five minutes.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair has overrun the time, that is not the fault of the committee. There has only been one five-minute period.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be notified at the end of three minutes, if I may. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that this judgment ought not to go into this bill at this time. I appreciate the motives of the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] in offering the amendment. The same proposition is pending as a Senate amendment to the Indian appropriation bill—where it does not belong—and if it is to be appropriated for at this time—where it does not belong—it should be upon this bill. The trouble is, however, this whole case reeks with suspicion, if not with fraud. The claim originally provided by a Senate amendment introduced in those peculiar ways which the body at the other end of the Capitol sometimes agrees to and kept in the appropriation bill in conference in the closing hours of a short session of Congress through the influence of hired or employed counsel friendly to various members of the conference committee or other Members of Congress getting into the Court of Claims under peculiar circumstances like this, not as an ordinary claim, but with direction in the jurisdictional act to the Court of Claims, a judgment has been rendered, which judgment, in my opinion, ought not to be paid until there has been an investigation. When Marion Butler, at one time a distinguished Senator of the United States—or a Senator of the United States, I would say—and since then a lobbyist and attorney for Indian claims, is connected with one of these claims, that fact of itself is enough to excite some suspicion; but when connected with him in the case there are a number of other names of men who appear in the brief as counsel who never did a stroke of service in the case, except to endeavor to influence the action of Congress through personal influence, the claim still requires further investigation. These gentlemen have been paid over $200,000 for lobbying, and the court has found that most of the money was for lobbying before Congress. I am not in favor of paying the judgment until we know whether we owe the money, regardless of the provisions of the jurisdictional act inserted in this manner. I hope the Chair will now recognize my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for the remaining two minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman one question before the gentleman from Illinois makes his speech.

Mr. CANNON. The time is all up. Mr. Chairman, in the two minutes I merely desire to say that this is a judgment of the Court of Claims. I am not prepared to say by any manner of means considering the jurisdictional act that the judgment is not correct. I apprehend that it is. I have confidence in the Court of Claims, but it seems by virtue of the jurisdictional act that the Indians under this judgment are cut off from $50,000 a year that they were getting as an annuity and now do not get anything. It seems further that the attorneys got $200,000 plus and the Indians did not get anything. The attorneys have got——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The Indians have lost what they had.

Mr. CANNON. Have lost their $50,000 a year. We made a little investigation and when we found that it was a question that ought to be investigated and that a Senate amendment had put this item upon the Indian appropriation bill, we said under all the circumstances that we were not satisfied and did not report it. Now, I believe before this Congress adjourns that this judgment ought to be appropriated for, but if it is not appropriated for I believe that an amount sufficient to meet the immediate wants of the distressed Indians, 2,000 of them, who have been cut off from what they were getting, should be provided for by appropriation, reimbursable from what in the end ought to come to them from this judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 3, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask leave to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the amendment I offered in reference to the Ute Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, certified to Congress in House Document No. 776, at its present session, $39,971; said judgments to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian Service: Provided, That no one of said judgments provided in this paragraph shall be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exists no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the paragraph. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] if he knows whether the language of this paragraph, which relates to judgment in Indian depredation claims, provides that judgment shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and so forth, "shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interest of the Indian Service." My recollection is that the law provided that Indian depredation claims shall be paid when there is no money in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians out of the General Treasury and to be reimbursable out of the fund of the Indians.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the provision of the law. The statute provides:

That the amount of any judgment so rendered against any tribe of Indians shall be charged against the tribe by which, or by members of which, the court shall find that the depredation was committed, and shall be deducted and paid in the following manner: First, from annuities due said tribe from the United States; second, if no annuities are due or available, then from any other funds due said tribe from the United States, arising from the sale of their lands or otherwise; third, if no such funds are due or available, then from any appropriation for the benefit of said tribe, other than appropriations for their current and necessary support, subsistence, and education; and, fourth, if no such annuity, fund or appropriation is due or available, then the amount of the judgment shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That any amount so paid from the Treasury of the United States shall remain a charge against such tribe, and shall be deducted from any annuity, fund or appropriation hereinbefore designated which may hereafter become due from the United States to such tribe.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman in all frankness that I am not sure there is a subsequent statute on the subject; and I make a point of order against this language and the paragraph, Mr. Chairman:

On page 45, in line 5, after the word "act," all of the language down to line 8, to and including the word "affected"; and also, beginning in line 9, at the end of the line, down to and including the word "service" in line 12.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the Clerk to report the language.

Mr. MANN. The language against which I make the point of order is this. Beginning on line 5—and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribes affected.

And then again, beginning, in line 9, with the word "at," at the end of the line—at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interest of the Indian service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You might as well take it all out. The rest is the law, anyway.

Mr. MANN. The rest provides simply, according to statute, for reimbursement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman might as well take it out if he is going to take the other out.

Mr. MANN. I do not care to take out what the statute provides for. That leaves it reading right. It does not interfere with the sense of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The language to which the gentleman calls attention modifies the statute. It has been incorporated in this particular bill because for a great many years these judgments in Indian depredation cases have been provided for with these modifications of the act of March 3, 1891. I am not aware whether the discretion has ever been exercised by the Secretary of the Interior or not.

Mr. MANN. The committee reporting this bill has followed the practice, and I will say frankly I am not sure but they followed the law. If it is the law, it is not necessary for it to be in here. But the fact is these funds have been paid out of the Federal Treasury for years without any apparent attempt to have them reimbursed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We might as well get that money as to have it go to some attorneys.

Mr. MANN. I think myself that that is right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Both points of order are sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, $43,244.21.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if he can inform us whether or not under the item of "Transportation of the Army and its supplies" we are paying for the transportation of horses and men who go from some of the Army posts to some point—for instance, Washington—for the purpose of playing polo; whether the expenses are paid for out of appropriations that are made by Congress and whether this deficiency item is to cover any such expense?

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman answers that I will say, in reference to the polo game, that I think it is worth it if it is.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I was riding down on the Speedway one evening after the House had adjourned, during the recent polo contest here, and I stopped my machine to look at the game for a moment, and I was accosted by a policeman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It probably saved the gentleman from being taken by the Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota (continuing). Who informed me that if I desired to stop in the street at the point where I did stop I would be required to pay $1, whereupon I moved on, not desiring to be arrested. Subsequently I saw in one of the local papers that this public park was being used for the purpose of a polo contest, and that some one was collecting money from those who stopped in the street to observe the playing for the purpose of paying the expenses. I am trying to ascertain now whether or not the gentleman knows whether the cost of transporting horses and men from Fort Riley and Fort Sill and other posts in the United States to Washington and from here to other places is being paid for by the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of inquiries contained in the gentleman's question, and I shall make a statement covering them all.

There was an item submitted here to allow in the accounts of an officer for the purchase of polo ponies for the West Point cadets. Not knowing of any authority to make any such purchase, the item was not included in this bill. The appropriation for the transportation of the Army is carried in the bill for the support of the Army—the military establishment—and is not reported from the Committee on Appropriations. These particular items are audited claims which for some reason or other have not been presented in time to be paid out of the appropriations available, and are a class of claims that are paid when audited and inserted in the deficiency bill. My attention was called to the matter mentioned by the gentleman from South Dakota a short while ago. A few years ago, when the movement for playgrounds was very intense in this city, representations were made to the Committee on Appropriations that certain Government reservations could readily be utilized for playgrounds for children. Provision was made authorizing the engineer officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in the city of Washington to permit the use of such portions of the public service within the city of Washington as he deemed advisable for playground purposes.

It appears that under that statute a part of Potomac Park has been set aside as a playground for those who indulge in the pastime of polo, and under the same statute giving this authority, under such regulations as the Secretary of War might adopt, I am advised from information obtained in various ways that the engineer officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds in the city of Washington decided that he was authorized to impose a charge upon persons for stopping automobiles or other vehicles in public highways in the park in order to view the games.

The justification given for the charge was that it was necessary to expend some money in keeping the field in proper shape, and in order to obtain the revenue authority was given to the association, consisting of various Army polo teams, to make the charge. Of course in doing that several specific statutes were violated. There is no authority to permit anybody to spend other funds than those appropriated, and there is no authority which permits anybody to charge anybody for stopping at any place in the public parks. There is a statute expressly forbidding the acceptance of voluntary services or other contributions except by the authority of Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not the money that was collected was turned into the Treasury, and if it was how it was disbursed, or what disposition was made of it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I doubt if it could be turned into the Treasury, because it could not be taken out and expended in keeping these grounds in shape without an appropriation; and, not having been turned into the Treasury, no other official was permitted to accept it in order to expend it on the grounds.

I do not think there is any authority anywhere which permits the making of such a charge, and I do not think it was contemplated that anybody could be charged. We spend a considerable sum of money in keeping Potomac Park in good condition. I doubt if there is any trouble in getting the money necessary and in getting Congress to keep this park in shape.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Do I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] thinks that the expenses incident to the coming together of these men and horses that are used in this contest are paid for from the Federal Treasury?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. That is not a line of appropriations that come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no appropriation made by the Committee on Military Affairs, which reports the Army appropriation bill, that would justify the Quartermaster General or any other officer in paying the expenses of transporting horses and men from one post to another for the purpose of playing polo.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That was not my question.

Mr. KENDALL. The question is, Was it done?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My question was whether or not the expenses were in fact paid out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I say there is nothing in the law that would warrant it, and if such a thing as that has been done it has been done contrary to the provisions of the law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have been informed that it has been done.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then I do not know under what regulations of the Quartermaster General it is done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am one of the persons who paid a fee for the privilege of witnessing the game of polo on Potomac Park. I do not know how one could get a good opportunity of witnessing it without paying. Of course anybody could look at the game from a distance by taking an automobile out there, or taking a carriage out there, but nobody could see it to good advantage without getting into a good place, and then he would have to pay. I do not think that there is anything in the instruction and exercises that are practiced in the military schools, for which we pay large sums of money, that is worth as much to an Army officer when he comes to the time of fighting in a battle as the experience that he acquires in playing one of these fiercely contested polo games. Anyone who has watched the game can say the same thing. The boy who can play shinny without fear or favor has the nerve to be somebody. [Applause.] These men, I hope, are not "molly-coddles," and unless you want to make an army of "molly-coddles," do not stop the polo games. [Applause.]

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to recur to page 40, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] asks unanimous consent to return to page 40, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the amendment?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. It is in regard to a game reserve. It will take only a minute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the amendment be reported.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. It is an amendment for a reappropriation of funds heretofore appropriated and unexpended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the amendment be reported for the information of the committee, or I shall be constrained to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting as a new paragraph, after line 21, page 40, the following:

"So much of the fund for the maintenance of the Montana National Bison Range and other reservations as remains unexpended on June 30, 1912, is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended for fencing and necessary sheds on the public lands in Cherry County, Nebr., heretofore reserved for game purposes, and for transporting thereto buffalo, elk, and deer which have been offered free to the Government."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I would be pleased if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would withhold his objection until I can make an explanation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A little later the gentleman can offer his amendment and make his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For inland mail transportation (star), $396.72.
For inland mail transportation (railroad), $14.09.
For indemnity for losses by registered mails, $292.27.

For clerk hire, separating, $72.
For City Delivery Service, incidental expenses, $3.75.
For claims for additional salary of letter carriers under section 2 of act of January 3, 1887, $8,315.81.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reoffer at this point the amendment which I sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting as a new paragraph, after line 6, page 59, the following:

"So much of the fund for the maintenance of the Montana National Bison Range and other reservations as remains unexpended on June 30, 1912, is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended for fencing and necessary sheds on the public lands in Cherry County, Nebr., heretofore reserved for game purposes, and for transporting thereto buffalo, elk, and deer which have been offered free to the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the amendment, I desire to have read a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and a letter of the Secretary of Agriculture out of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 31, 1912.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture of the 29th instant, submitting an estimate of reappropriation for inclusion in the general deficiency bill, as follows:

"General expenses, Bureau of Biological Survey: So much of the fund for the maintenance of the Montana National Bison Range and other reservations as remains unexpended on June 30, 1912, is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended for fencing on the national mammal and bird reservations and for transportation of game; and hereafter the appropriation for maintenance of said reservations may be utilized for fencing and for construction of shelters, sheds, and other necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any one building shall not exceed $500."

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1912.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

SIR: I have the honor to submit, as an estimate for inclusion in the general deficiency bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, the following provision, and would respectfully request its immediate submission to Congress:

"General expenses, Bureau of Biological Survey: So much of the fund for the maintenance of the Montana National Bison Range and other reservations as remains unexpended on June 30, 1912, is hereby reappropriated and made available until expended for fencing on the national mammal and bird reservations and for transportation of game; and hereafter the appropriation for maintenance of said reservations may be utilized for fencing and for construction of shelters, sheds, and other necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any one building shall not exceed $500."

In explanation of this estimate, I may state that the Bureau of Biological Survey has recently received an offer of a gift of 39 buffalo, elk, and deer. This offer is conditioned on the animals being placed on a reservation in Nebraska and is not available for reservations elsewhere. The Niobrara Reservation is the only place in the State of Nebraska available for this purpose, and in order to avail itself of the present offer the department must construct an inclosure on the Niobrara Reservation immediately and arrange for the transfer of the animals at an early date. The reservation in question is well adapted to the purpose, and the present appropriation, if made available, will admit of the transfer of the herd, but the department is without specific authority to erect the necessary fencing. No additional appropriation is necessary if the balance remaining in this fund can be reappropriated for this purpose.

Very respectfully, W. M. HAYS, Acting Secretary.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, as shown by the letter, the purpose is to enable the Government to avail itself of the gift tendered it by the owner of a herd of buffalo, elk, and deer in Nebraska. It is a herd which he has bred up and held for a long time, an exceptionally fine herd. He is a Nebraska patriot, and for that reason wishes the herd kept in Nebraska, and offers it to the Government free, upon condition that the herd be kept at some point in Nebraska.

Heretofore the reservation, which is a part of the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, was set apart by Executive order for a game preserve, and this generous offer has since been made. The departmental officials are now very anxious to avail themselves of the gift of this very fine herd. No new appropriation of money is necessary. This amendment proposes to make the existing appropriation available and to enable the department to use it to the best advantage. I would like very much to have a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to know what is the size of this game reservation.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. About 12,000 acres.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What animals are in the reservation at the present time?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Nothing but birds.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How far are these buffalo from this reservation?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I should estimate the distance at about 170 miles.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this herd composed entirely of elk?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Buffalo, elk, and deer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are there any bull moose in it?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. We will keep them in Nebraska, if there are any.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman inform us about how many buffalo there are in this herd, and how many it is proposed to put into this reserve?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I do not know just how many. I think about one-third of the total number of 39 are buffalo, but I do not remember definitely about that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think 12,000 acres are a good deal of land for 39 buffalo to run over?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not if the herd includes any bull moose.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. We do not expect the herd to remain as small as it is. We expect to have a thousand head there in the course of time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are increasing very rapidly, as I understand it.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I presume so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I favor the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is the gentleman going to exclude sheep from this reservation?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. They are going to build a fence around it and that will exclude sheep; yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That puts me pretty hard up against the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. We have plenty of room for sheep though, outside.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Outside of the fence?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Yes; outside of the fence.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think any ordinary barbed wire fence would be sufficient to keep a bull moose inclosed?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. When he is properly domesticated; yes.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman knows of any fence which will keep a bull moose within bounds, I am sure he can sell the fence at a very high price. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I should like very much to have a vote on my amendment. I regard it as a very meritorious proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the document read by the gentleman indicates that this amendment should not be permitted to pass without some comment. It appears that some estimable persons have corraled and have been nurturing and caring for a herd of buffalo, elk, and other wild animals. The care of this herd having become burdensome to them, the suggestion has been made that the Federal Government is the proper place to apply to relieve these individuals of the burden of voluntarily maintaining this very estimable enterprise. The person or party having on its back this peculiar animal or aggregation of animals offered to donate them to the people of the United States, and a representative of the Department of Agriculture urged before the committee, as one of the most persuasive arguments in favor of the Federal Government providing for the animals, that there were some private individuals who themselves had really been anxious to do this work. That was such an unheard-of thing under modern conditions that the Government should not hesitate a moment to appropriate the money and prohibit or prevent any private individual engaging in this enterprise.

I have no doubt that before long gentlemen on that side will regret that they had not included bull mooses in this array of wild animals that are to be corraled at some place in Nebraska, Montana, or other unknown and remote parts of the United States.

Mr. BURLESON. Unexplored regions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps as the mangled remains of the bull mooses are found strewn from one end of the country to the other we will later be ready to give them decent interment; but I think it wise to permit certain of them to roam at large at present, conscious that the country and the Democratic Party will be very greatly benefited.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, a gentleman sitting by my side has suggested, inasmuch as the gentleman from New York has several times used the term "bull mooses," whether the plural of the term "bull moose" is "bull mooses" or "bull meese."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the chief bull moose is perhaps better equipped to determine that question than anyone else, and I should have to refer to him.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that the West is not the habitat of the bull moose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is anticipated that a certain cross between other breeds of animals will produce a very satisfactory type of animal that will be accepted into full membership in the bull moose herd. But rather than permit any discrimination against this particular type of animal at this time, anxious that they may all have an equal opportunity under the law, with special privilege to none, I shall be compelled to insist on the point of order.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order for just one moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve it for just one moment.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no political phase or color to this, I may say that the man who offers to donate this herd is a constituent of mine and is noted for two particular things. One is his lifelong devotion to saving the American buffalo, as there are but few living now, and the other is his lifelong devotion to Democracy, so that the matter has no political flavor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would not encourage the gentleman to give up his lifelong devotion to either one of those things.

Mr. SLOAN. He would like to fasten his politics, like the rest of you, on the Government for a short time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I shall not permit his Democracy to be impaired by permitting him to be a party to a scheme to relieve himself of a burden at the expense of all of the people.

Mr. SLOAN. I regret there is so much fear on the part of any of the gentlemen in the way of a deer or a moose or anything of the kind.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Refund of sums paid for documentary stamps: The time within which claims may be presented for refunding the sums paid for documentary stamps used on foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries, specified in the act entitled "An act to provide for refunding stamp taxes paid under the act of June 30, 1898, upon foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries and authorizing rebate of duties on anthracite coal imported into the United States from October 6, 1902, to January 15, 1903, and for other purposes," approved February 1, 1909, be, and is hereby, extended to December 1, 1912.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the section.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman make it?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve it for a moment, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] called the attention of the committee to the fact that a constituent of his has some claims aggregating about six hundred and some odd dollars, and accounts for the delay in obtaining the information upon which the claim may be presented by the fire in Baltimore some years ago. At that time his property was destroyed and with it all his accounts, papers, and other property. At the last session of the last Congress the time was extended one year because of three cases having come to the attention of the committee. It seems this gentleman has now procured the evidence upon which his claim might be allowed, and he asks the committee to extend the time, so as to give him an opportunity to present his claim to the department. The time has been extended on two or three other occasions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a claim which is 8 or 10 years old or thereabouts. The Baltimore fire was quite a number of years ago. The time has been extended a number of times, and unless it is the policy to make an unlimited extension of time I do not see why it should be extended another year. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to grant and lease in the manner hereinafter provided, for a period of 25 years, such surplus water of the United States within the limits of or pertaining to the military reservation of Schofield Barracks (Waianae Uka), island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, as may not be needed for the supply of the military post and troops on said reservation; and he is further authorized and directed to include in such grant or lease authority to the grantee or lessee thereunder to enter upon such reservation and make surveys thereon for, and construct and maintain, dams, reservations, canals, ditches, flumes, tunnels, and pipe lines for the purpose of diverting and conducting from the reservation the water covered by such grant or lease at such places on said land as said grantee or lessee may select, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and to include also the right to said grantee or lessee to take from the lands of the United States adjacent thereto, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, earth and stone necessary for such construction and maintenance: Provided, That said grant or lease shall be made to or entered into with the highest responsible bidder for such surplus water, under sealed proposal, after public advertisement of the terms and conditions thereof for a period of not less than 30 days in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation published at Honolulu, in the Territory of Hawaii; such terms and conditions to be fixed by the Secretary of War when not inconsistent with the provisions of this section: Provided further, That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this section is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the section. This is the second time this matter has been up. I would be glad to reserve it if the gentleman desires to discuss it at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, unless it is possible to convince the gentleman it is hardly worth while wasting the time now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say frankly to the gentleman that I am not familiar with the merits of the case and do not make the point of order upon that ground. I make the point of order because I think a matter of this sort ought to be considered by the Appropriation Committee of the House and brought into the House for consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall not delay the committee with a statement of the matter at this time. It will be done a little later.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25970, the general deficiency appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—MARGARET FURNIER.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Foss was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of H. R. 5218, Sixty-second Congress, granting a pension to Margaret Furnier, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 122, providing for the payment of the expenses of the Senate in the impeachment trial of Robert W. Archbald, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 122, and pending that asks unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection to the last request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the first? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 122) providing for the payment of the expenses of the Senate in the impeachment trial of Robert W. Archbald.

Resolved, etc., That there be appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of the Senate in the impeachment trial of Robert W. Archbald.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EXCISE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair refers the bill H. R. 21214, commonly known as the excise bill, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution making appropriation for checking the ravages of the army worm; to the Committee on Agriculture.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, House bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

H. R. 38. An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Territories.

H. R. 22195. An act to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 25598. An act granting a pension to Cornelia C. Bragg; and

H. R. 21480. An act to establish a standard barrel and standard grade for apples when packed in barrels, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4930. An act to harmonize the national law of salvage with the provisions of the international convention for the unification of certain rules with respect to assistance and salvage at sea, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet Monday, July 29, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submitting estimates of appropriations with reference to additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service (H. Doc. No. 893), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22589) to provide for the acquisition of premises for the diplomatic establishments of the United States at the City of Mexico, Mexico; Tokyo, Japan; and Berne, Switzerland; and for the consular establishment of the United States at Hankow, China, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1073), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOBSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 25715) providing that officers of the Navy be allowed pay from the dates they take rank, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1089), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 7157) to make uniform charges for furnishing copies of records of the Department of the Interior and of its several bureaus, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1090), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. HEALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill H. R. 20377, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 643) referring to the Court of Claims the papers in the case of Ynchausti & Co., accompanied by a report (No. 1074), which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18894) for the relief of the heirs of the late Samuel H. Donaldson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1075), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CATLIN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 23123) for the relief of Lena Schmieder, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1076), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 24081) for the relief of Henry Hirschberg, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1077), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DICKINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17140) for the relief of John A. Gauley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1078), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HEALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21849) for the relief of Felix Morgan, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1079), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DICKINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 23329) for the relief of the heirs of Robert H. Burney and C. J. Fuller, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1080), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9129) for the relief of the estate of William H. Willis, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1081), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HEALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22257) for the relief of Leo Müller, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1082), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DICKINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 23253) to compensate G. W. Wall, of Cheatham County, Tenn., for damages sustained by him on account of the construction of Lock and Dam A on the lower Cumberland River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1083), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 23254) to compensate J. E. Stewart, of Cheatham County, Tenn., for damages sustained by him on account of the construction of Lock and Dam A on the lower Cumberland River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1084), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12339) to refund certain taxes paid by the Southern Redistilling & Rectifying Co. (Ltd.), of New Orleans, La., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1085), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HEALD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2199) to carry into effect findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of Charles A. Davidson and Charles M. Campbell, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1086), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4041) for the relief of Elizabeth Muhleman, widow, and the heirs at law of Samuel A. Muhleman, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1087), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FARR, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4032) for the relief of C. Person's Sons, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1088), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 29, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MEMORIAL.

Mr. CRANE presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Worcester, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Bourne parcel-post bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PENROSE. I report back adversely from the Committee on Finance the bill (H. R. 24153) to amend and reenact section 5241 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and I submit a report (No. 989) thereon. As the minority of the committee reserves the right to file minority views, I ask that the bill may go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. GALLINGER). The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was just about to announce that members of the Finance Committee would submit minority views in opposition to the adverse report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand also that the Senator from North Dakota will submit a bill as a substitute for the bill adversely reported.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. McCUMBER on the 26th instant, proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay Robert W. Farrar for indexing and extra services as clerk to the Committee on Pensions, Sixty-second Congress, first and second sessions, and also to pay $1,200 to Dennis M. Kerr for services as assistant clerk, by detail, to the Committee on Pensions, Sixty-second Congress, first and second sessions, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

FIFTH-THIRD NATIONAL BANK, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Finance, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16518) for the relief of the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati, Ohio, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate registered bond of the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918, in favor of the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati, Ohio, in lieu of United States 3 per cent registered bond, loan of 1908 to 1918, No. 37195, for $1,000, inscribed in the name of Jacob B. Elberfeld, alleged to have been lost or mislaid after having been assigned in blank, sold, and delivered to the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 7381) to prohibit the making, showing, or distributing of fraudulent photographs.

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have the bill referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I desire to say a single word in regard to it, because, it seems to me, it is a bill on which action ought to be taken.

We have all of us noticed in the shops where photographs are for sale here in Washington, pictures representing anybody who happens along shaking hands with the President, as if talking with him. The photographs are made as we know by a process. On the suggestion of the Attorney General the exposure and sale of those photographs have been stopped. There is no sufficient law against it. The reason why I introduce this bill and call attention to it is because one of those photographs was made with the figure of a man named Diamond, representing him as shaking hands with the President. The man is engaged in the white-slave traffic and is being sought for by the inspectors of immigration. I think he has been arrested. The matter was brought to my attention by officers of the Immigration Department. He used this photograph in his infamous business, and of course on poor ignorant people it undoubtedly had a great effect. The fact that it is possible to make fraudulent photographs of that kind shows in this instance how they may be used for purposes of fraud and for purposes of crime.

It is for that reason that I introduce the bill, to which I ask the attention of the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CATRON:

A bill (S. 7385) to relinquish the claim of the United States against the grantees, their legal representatives and assigns, for timber cut on Petaca land grant; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 7386) granting an increase of pension to Luriette S. Case (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (for Mr. DAVIS):

A bill (S. 7387) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Bingham (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7388) granting an increase of pension to John A. Gates; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 7389) for the relief of Thomas M. Mason; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 7390) for the relief of the heirs or estate of John M. Wright, deceased (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

RELIEF OF AMERICAN CITIZENS AT EL PASO, TEX.

Mr. FALL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution which I introduce.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 127) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply tents and rations to American citizens compelled to leave Mexico, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be supplied, through the proper military officers at El Paso, Tex., all necessary tents, together with temporary rations, for the care and relief of American citizens who have been compelled to remove and are yet removing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico, and who are seeking refuge in El Paso, Tex., and adjacent portions of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. FALL. I desire to read the following telegram as a reason for asking the immediate passage of the joint resolution. I am just in receipt of a telegram from the mayor of El Paso and the county judge of El Paso County, which reads as follows:

EL PASO, TEX., July 29, 1912.

Senator A. B. FALL, Washington, D. C.:

Twenty-five hundred American women and children, driven from Mexico, to be here within 24 hours; 700 here now; too many for local authorities to care for. Col. Steever says resolution of Congress necessary before he can furnish tents and temporary rations. Please have resolution passed at once.

C. E. KELLY, Mayor.
ALBERT S. J. EYLAR, County Judge.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 to enable the Government to conclude its efforts to mitigate the national opium evil, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOHN REED.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Michigan, it was Ordered, That the original discharge papers in the case of Senate bill 2072, Sixty-first Congress, entitled "To remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Reed," be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADDRESS OF HON. WHITEHEAD KLUTTZ (S. DOC. NO. 885).

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask to have printed as a Senate document an address delivered by Hon. Whitehead Kluttz, of North Carolina, at Ocean Grove, N. J., July 29, 1911, being a plea for international and intersectional peace.

Mr. CLAPP. I think we are reaching the limit in publishing such matters.

Mr. OVERMAN. I rather think so, too, but it is being done constantly.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not object to the Senator's request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be made.

THE INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 884).

Mr. SMOOT. I ask to have printed as a Senate document an article by George B. Curtiss on the industrial development of nations and a history of the tariff policies of the United States, and of Great Britain, Germany, France, Russia, and other European countries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE PENDING REVOLUTION (S. DOC. NO. 883).

Mr. BAILEY. I ask to have printed as a public document an address by Hon. Alfred P. Thom, of Washington, D. C., delivered before the Alabama State Bar Association, at Montgomery, Ala., July 12, 1912.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, it has never been my custom to review the statements of newspapers regarding congressional action or failure to act, and I would not do so in this instance were it not for the fact that a wrong impression is very apt to be drawn from the editorial in this morning's Washington Post. The Post, I desire to say, is usually accurate and, of course, always honest, but I think they overlooked the actual situation in their editorial this morning. They say:

After the Titanic went down there was a tremendous display of energy by Congress with a view to safeguarding life at sea. The temper of the people's representatives was aroused to a savage pitch. It appeared that the only danger was that steamship companies might be cinched by too drastic legislation.

More than three months have passed, and Congress is about to adjourn. Nothing whatever has been done in behalf of humanity at sea, excepting a provision requiring two wireless operators to be carried on every vessel. Congress has not provided for extra lifeboats or rafts; it has not passed the seamen's bill, which abolishes involuntary servitude, a relic of barbarism; it has not provided for adequate crews for vessels and lifeboats; it has not provided for the proper number of officers and regulated their hours; it has done nothing but hold hearings and introduce bills.

So far as Congress is concerned, a Titanic could be lost every day without incurring any penalty whatever for the loss of passengers and crew.

The editorial then goes on to say that Congress is giving its attention to the questions of politics rather than to the safety of passengers at sea.

Mr. President, I am sure the Post is laboring under a misapprehension of the facts. The truth is that under section 4405 of the Revised Statutes the Board of Steamboat Inspection has the power to require ample lifeboat equipment. A regulation was promulgated on the 1st day of July doing away with the old tonnage basis of life-saving equipment and basing future requirements upon the passenger capacity of ocean-going vessels.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think perhaps the Senator has inadvertently made a mistake. Does it put it simply upon the basis of the passengers or of the passengers and crew?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Passengers and crew, under the description of all persons on shipboard.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I thought.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Tonnage was the basis of American equipment and also the ancient basis the British Board of Trade is operating under.

The British rule has been disregarded entirely now by many ocean-going vessels voluntarily. The Olympic, for instance, of the White Star Line, has doubled her life-saving equipment of her own accord since the Titanic disaster, as have many other ocean-going vessels.

Put I desire the Senate and the people to know that much progress has been made. The American board have formally promulgated a new order which became effective on the 1st day of July, requiring increased lifeboats. Owing, however, to the fact that the additionl equipment was being voluntarily ordered, and this legislation had been anticipated by vessel owners, it has been impossible to secure prompt delivery of new equipment, and the time within which the order should be complied with to avoid penalty has been necessarily extended to September 30. I am sure that no one will be quicker to give the credit for the progress that has already been made than the Washington Post when the facts are understood. I quote from the order:

Ocean steamers carrying passengers must be equipped with lifeboats of sufficient capacity to accommodate at one time all persons on board, including passengers and crew. One-half of such lifeboat equipment may be in approved life rafts or approved collapsible lifeboats.

An amendment was added a few days ago as follows:

Realizing the difficulty experienced by the various steamship and steamboat companies in securing lifeboat and life-raft equipment to meet the amended rules respecting this question, you are advised that the department has concluded that if 50 per cent of the required equipment is installed on or before July 31, 1912, and the remaining 50 per cent installed within the next 60 days thereafter, or, say, by September 30, 1912, it will be considered as a practical compliance with the rules.

It must be understood, however, that efforts to secure this equipment must not be relaxed, and that the companies will use their best endeavors to secure the necessary equipment at the earliest possible date.

Mr. President, I call public attention to this regulation because the Bureau of Steamboat Inspection has been in perfect harmony with the efforts of the Committee on Commerce to give practical effect to a universal demand for sufficient life-saving equipment for all passengers and crew on ocean-going vessels.

We have gone thoroughly into the question of ship construction, have examined many experts and shipmasters, but have reached no definite conclusion, because that involves a scientific question and must be met carefully and intelligently. Our Government has been informed that it was the purpose of the German Government to convene a conference looking to a general agreement upon the question of the international standardization of hull construction and universal rules promoting safety at sea. Congress has signified its intention to participate in such a conference, and the Committee on Foreign Relations reported a resolution authorizing the President to either convene the conference here or send delegates abroad and this resolution has passed both Houses.

The question of lanes of travel, which is important, must have the approval of other countries. We can not prescribe these lanes alone and have such route followed, but an agreement between the leading maritime nations can undoubtedly enforce its decrees.

Many changes have already resulted from the general agitation throughout the world, and our Government has moved with certainty and definiteness to help bring about a better condition of affairs. Army transports have been fully equipped by law. The radio bill, to which the Post referred, requires constant service, day and night, and requires that there shall be established connection between the radio room and the bridge of vessels, in order that no time may be lost in getting messages involving safety promptly to the commander of the ship.

Mr. President, I feel that a great deal has been accomplished in a very short time, and before the Congress adjourns I am very hopeful that we may be able to agree upon the seamen's bill, which is referred to in the Post this morning, and upon some other legislation now pending that will be helpful to travelers.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I did not have the privilege, being engaged in a matter before a committee, of hearing all the Senator from Michigan has said on the subject, and I want to ask if he has referred to the resolution reported from the Foreign Relations Committee in reference to the conference proposed between this Government and other governments on that subject?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I referred to the fact that Congress has already taken action, and that we have placed a fund at the disposal of the President for the purpose either of convening a conference or of sending delegates to a conference which shall be convened in any other capital for the purpose of making international rules on this subject. I think I am speaking with entire propriety when I say that Germany has waived her purpose to call such a conference and that the English Government will convene a conference for the purpose of considering uniformity of international regulations affecting safety at sea. I can think of no more useful work that can be done. We have made progress, and there is greater safety to-day on the sea than ever before, and whether voluntarily or through this requirement, there is lifeboat equipment enough for passengers and crew upon most ocean-going vessels.

Mr. President, every lifeboat establishment in this country is working at its full capacity to meet the requirements both of this regulation and of the voluntary demand of shipowners who feel that the equipment ought to be increased.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of attention to what the Senator from Michigan has said, and I agree with him that it would be well for the Post to recognize the fact that the public service has gone further than the Post seems to think in meeting the issues presented by the loss of the Titanic. There are some things, though, in connection with the question that seem to me to justify the general spirit of the article in the Post.

It is all very well to obtain international agreements in order to have uniform regulation for travel at sea, but, in connection with vital and emergent questions, the United States Government ought not to wait upon that. I think that one of the great dangers at sea consists in the involuntary servitude of sailors, reluctant and unwilling sailors, who do not want to be upon the ship at all, who want to keep off the sea and can not do so because they have been pressed into service and work, not like seamen but like slaves. Slaves uniformly work inefficiently and badly and not with the proper spirit. In merchant vessels, as in the war vessels, the man behind the gun in the one case and the man behind the sail or oar, or whatever is necessary to be used in any particular contingency, is a very important item.

Another great evil that entered into the loss of the Titanic consisted in the fact that there were not a sufficient number of able seamen on board who could handle the boats. A large percentage of the crew of the Titanic, strange to say, could not row a boat.

Congress has thus far neglected these two things of vital and necessary importance, but I share the hope the Senator from Michigan has expressed, that the deficiency may be cured by legislation before Congress adjourns.

I wish to add to what he said that, in my opinion, it would be shameful for the present session of Congress to adjourn without treating these two matters. I express the hope that what the Post very properly called a relic of barbarism, white slavery on shipboard, may be abolished before this session of Congress is over, and that the steamship companies may be required when enlisting crews to get a sufficient number of able-bodied seamen who know how to row.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Mississippi has expressed my views regarding the desirability of congressional action in the direction he has indicated, and I want to say, in order that the RECORD may show it, that a persistent and determined effort has been made in the House of Representatives to pass the seamen's bill—so-called—and I understand it is now scheduled for consideration among the things that will be taken up before adjournment.

Now, as to the presence of able-bodied seamen, it is not within the power of Congress to say what type of men shall be taken aboard vessels sailing under foreign flags.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, of course, what he has just said would have gone without saying, but it is within the power of Congress to see to it that our coastwise vessels, our Lake vessels, and American-owned trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific vessels are required to have a sufficient number of able-bodied seamen.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was just going to say that on our coastwise vessels and on American vessels generally we may properly make such regulations. The absence of able seamen among the crew is a discredit to the shipping industry of the world, and I wish that steamship companies might augment their crews with experienced sailors, dignify their calling, and pay them such remuneration as a profession of that character deserves.

DESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] act as President of the Senate pro tempore from Thursday, August 1, to Saturday, August 10, both days inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 368), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Thursday, August 1, 1912, to Saturday, August 10, 1912, both inclusive.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 369), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Thursday, August 1, 1912, to Saturday, August 10, 1912, both inclusive.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER). The hour of 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. has arrived. The Senate is now sitting as a court in the impeachment of Robert W. Archbald, additional circuit judge of the United States for the third judicial circuit designated a judge of the Commerce Court. The Sergeant at Arms will make proclamation.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

At 12 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m. the managers on the part of the House of Representatives were announced, and they were conducted by the Assistant Doorkeeper to the seats assigned them.

At 12 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m. the respondent, Robert W. Archbald, accompanied by his counsel, A. S. Worthington, Esq., and Robert W. Archbald, jr., Esq., entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are any Senators present who have not been sworn they will kindly present themselves at the desk and take the oath.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. KERN, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. WATSON, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. POINDEXTER advanced to the desk and the oath was administered to them by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The journal of the proceedings of the last session of the Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of Robert W. Archbald will now be read.

The journal of the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a court on Friday, July 19, 1912, was read and approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are counsel for the respondent ready to present their answer to the articles of impeachment?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, the respondent presents his answer, and if agreeable to the Senate we should like to have it read from the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

In the Senate of the United States sitting as a Court of Impeachment for the trial of Robert Wodrow Archbald, a circuit judge of the United States.

ANSWER OF THE SAID ROBERT WODROW ARCHBALD TO THE ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT EXHIBITED AGAINST HIM BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 1.

For answer to the first article the respondent says:

1. That the said first article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said first article.

2. The respondent admits that some time early in the spring of 1911 and prior to the 31st day of March of that year Edward J. Williams informed respondent that John M. Robertson owned an interest in the Katydid culm dump near Moosic, Pa., and that he, Williams, could get an option on Robertson's interest in said culm dump, and suggested to the respondent that if a similar option could be obtained from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. for its interest in said Katydid culm dump the dump could be sold to advantage. At the same time said Williams suggested to the respondent that if both of said interests in the said dump should thus be acquired by respondent and himself a profit of two or three thousand dollars each to said Williams and the respondent could be made by a resale of said dump. At the same time said Williams suggested to respondent that he, the respondent, should communicate with Capt. William A. May, the superintendent of said Hillside Coal & Iron Co., to ascertain whether said company would sell its interest in said culm dump, and if so, on what terms.

The respondent thereupon, by telephone, inquired of Capt. May whether it would be possible to secure an option upon the dump in question from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. Over the telephone said Capt. May informed the respondent, in substance, that it had been the ordinary policy of said company to keep its culm dumps, but that the circumstances relating to the Katydid culm dump were peculiar, and if the respondent would write a letter to him on the subject he would submit it to the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. Accordingly, on the 31st day of March, 1911, the respondent wrote and handed to said Williams, to be by him delivered to Capt. May, a letter, of which the following is a copy:

W. A. MAY, Esq.,
Superintendent Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

DEAR SIR: I write to inquire whether your company will dispose of your interest in the Katydid culm dump, belonging to the old Robertson & Law operation, at Brownsville; and, if so, will you kindly put a price upon it?

Yours, very truly, R. W. ARCHBALD.

Several weeks thereafter, nothing having been heard by the respondent from Capt. May in response to said letter, and said Williams in the meantime having frequently called upon the respondent in reference to the matter, the respondent again, by telephone, inquired of Capt. May what had been done. Capt. May replied that Mr. G. A. Richardson, one of the vice presidents of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., was to be in Scranton in a few days, and that he, May, would go over the matter with said Richardson, and would let the respondent know the result. During the greater part of the month of July the respondent was holding a circuit court of the United States in New York City, and spent the whole of that month in that city, except that he went home to Scranton at the end of each week. Up to this time there had been no reply received from Capt. May in regard to said proposed option, and said Robertson, the owner of the other interest, was not disposed to allow the verbal option, which he had given to said Williams, to remain open indefinitely. Upon being informed of this by said Williams, the respondent, on the 4th day of August, 1911, while in New York in performance of his duties as circuit judge, as above stated, called on George F. Brownell, at his office in New York City, said Brownell being then the general counsel of both the Erie Railroad Co. and of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., the latter company being a subsidiary of the former company. The respondent called upon said Brownell, because he had been informed—by said Williams, as the respondent recollects—that the question of said Robertson's claim to an interest in the Katydid culm dump had been submitted to said Brownell. On that occasion the respondent informed said Brownell that he had called upon him because he understood that he, Brownell, had considered the question of Robertson's interest in the Katydid culm dump, and further told him that he, Robertson, had promised that he would sell his interest in said dump, and that if he, the respondent, could acquire the interest of the Hillside

Coal & Iron Co. in said dump the conflict of interests which had theretofore interfered with any sale of said dump would be ended. Said Brownell thereupon took the respondent to the office of said Richardson in the same building, informing the respondent that said Richardson was the proper officer of the company to pass upon the matter. Said Brownell introduced the respondent to said Richardson. Respondent then stated to said Richardson that he, respondent, was there simply for the purpose of getting an early answer one way or the other from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. to the request which had been made of that company for an option on its interest in the Katydid culm dump. Said Richardson then informed the respondent that he would communicate with Capt. May upon the subject. The respondent heard nothing further until on or about August 29, 1911, when he casually met said Capt. May on the street in Scranton, and was then informed by Capt. May that the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. had decided to sell its interest in that culm dump and requested respondent to tell Williams to come and see him, May. The respondent immediately notified said Williams of this conversation with Capt. May, and on the following day, as the respondent is informed and believes, said Williams received from Capt. May a letter, in the words and figures following:

[Pennsylvania Coal Co.; Hillside Coal & Iron Co.; New York, Susquehanna & Western Coal Co.; Northwestern Mining & Exchange Co.; Blossburg Coal Co. Office of the general manager.]

SCRANTON, PA., August 30, 1911.

Mr. E. J. WILLIAMS,
626 South Blakely Street, Dunmore, Pa.

DEAR SIR: As stated to you to-day, verbally, I shall recommend the sale of whatever interest the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. has in what is known as the Katydid culm dump, made by Messrs. Robertson & Law, in the operation of the Katydid breaker, for $4,500.

In order that it may not be lost sight of, I will mention that any coal above the size of pea coal will be subject to a royalty to the owners of lot 46, upon the surface of which the bank is located.

It is also understood that the bank will not be conveyed to anyone else without the consent of the H. C. & I. Co., and that if the offer is accepted articles of agreement will be drawn to cover the transaction.

Yours, very truly,

W. A. MAY, General Manager.

The respondent admits that during the whole period covered by the negotiations and transactions hereinabove referred to he was a judge of the United States Commerce Court, duly designated and acting as such judge; that during the same period the Erie Railroad Co. was a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce and was a party litigant in certain suits, to wit, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. et al. v. The Interstate Commerce Commission, Nos. 38 and 39, in the United States Commerce Court; that said suit No. 38 was commenced by petition filed in said court April 12, 1911, and was heard by said court on May 17, 1911, on motion of the petitioners for a temporary injunction; that on May 22, 1911, a temporary injunction was granted by said court in said case No. 38; that on June 13, 1911, the Interstate Commerce Commission appealed from the order granting said injunction to the Supreme Court of the United States; and that on June 16, 1911, the United States also appealed to the Supreme Court from said order; that the said suit No. 39 was begun by petition filed in the United States Commerce Court April 27, 1911; that a preliminary injunction was granted by said court on May 29, 1911; that on June 6, 1911, the Interstate Commerce Commission appealed from the order granting said injunction to the Supreme Court of the United States; and that on June 16, 1911, the United States also appealed to the Supreme Court from said order.

Respondent denies, except as hereinabove admitted, that he at any time or at any place, by correspondence or by personal conferences or otherwise, undertook to induce or influence or did induce or influence the officers of said Hillside Coal & Iron Co. or the officers of the Erie Railroad Co. to enter into any agreement to sell the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in the Katydid culm dump. He denies that he willfully or unlawfully or corruptly or otherwise took any advantage of his official position as such judge to induce or influence the officials of the said Erie Railroad Co. or of said Hillside Coal & Iron Co. to enter into any contract with him and the said Williams, or either of them. He denies that at the times and places stated in said first article, or at any other time or place, through the influence exerted by reason of his position as such judge, he willfully or unlawfully or corruptly or otherwise induced the officials of said Erie Railroad Co., or any of them, or the officials of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., or any of them, to enter into any contract with him and the said Williams, or either of them.

Wherefore the said Robert W. Archbald denies that he is guilty of misbehavior as such judge or of any crime or misdemeanor as charged in said first article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 2.

For answer to the second article the respondent says:

1. That the said second article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said second article.

2. The respondent admits that on the 1st day of August, 1911, he was a United States circuit judge duly designated as one of the judges of the United States Commerce Court, and that he was then a judge of said court. He further admits, on information and belief, that on said day the Marian Coal Co., a corporation, was the owner—as lessee—of a certain culm dump at Taylor, Pa., and was then and there engaged in the business of washing and shipping coal; that prior to that time the said Marian Coal Co. had filed before the Interstate Commerce Commission a complaint against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. and five other railroad companies as defendants, charging them, the said defendants, with discrimination in rates and with excessive charges for the transportation of coal shipped by the Marian Coal Co. over their respective lines of road; that all of the said defendant companies were common carriers engaged in interstate commerce; and that the decision of said case by the Interstate Commerce Commission was subject to review at the instance of any party defendant thereto by the United States Commerce Court. The respondent further avers that at the same time there was pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission another case in which the Marian Coal Co. was complainant and the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. alone was defendant. He further admits on information and belief that one Christopher G. Boland and one William P. Boland and their brother, one James M. Boland, were the owners of two-thirds of the stock in the said Marian Coal Co., and as to the operation of said company had all the powers which a control of the majority of the stock might legally give them, and that said Christopher G. Boland and said William P. Boland engaged one George M. Watson, an attorney at law, to endeavor to settle said cases then pending as aforesaid before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and certain other litigation in which the Marian Coal Co. was then involved, by selling to said Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. all the stock of the said Marian Coal Co. owned by the said Christopher G. Boland, William P. Boland, and James M. Boland. As to the averment in said article 2 contained that at the time aforesaid there was pending in the Commerce Court a certain suit entitled Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. et al. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, No. 38, to which suit the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. was a litigant, the facts are as follows: The said suit was commenced by petition filed April 12, 1911, was heard by said court on May 17, 1911, on motion of the petitioners for a temporary injunction, and on May 22, 1911, a temporary injunction was granted by the said court. On June 13, 1911, the Interstate Commerce Commission took an appeal from the order granting said injunction to the Supreme Court of the United States; and on June 16, 1911, the United States took an appeal from the said order to the Supreme Court.

The respondent denies that on the 1st day of August, 1911, or at any other time, he, for a consideration, agreed to assist George M. Watson, either to settle the aforesaid cases in which the Marian Coal Co. was complainant, then pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, or to sell to the said Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. the said two-thirds of the stock of the Marian Coal Co. Respondent avers the facts to be that on or about the said date said George M. Watson informed the respondent that he had been engaged as aforesaid by the said Christopher G. Boland and the said William P. Boland, to endeavor to settle the litigation in question and also at the same time informed respondent that at the last hearing of said cases before the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which the Marian Coal Co. was complainant, there had been a suggestion of a possible settlement. Thereupon said Watson requested the respondent to communicate with Edward E. Loomis, who was vice president of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. (and with whom respondent was well acquainted), and tell said Loomis that if he would see said Watson there was a possibility of the case being settled. Pursuant to this request of said Watson, the respondent, while in New York holding a circuit court of the United States, on August 4, 1911, saw said Loomis at his office in New York City and told him what said Watson had said, as above stated. Several weeks thereafter said Watson inquired of the respondent whether he had seen said Loomis, and upon being informed of what had taken place between the respondent and said Loomis as above set forth, he, Watson, informed respondent that he had heard nothing from said Loomis, and said Watson then requested the respondent to again bring the matter to the attention of said Loomis. This occurred at Scranton, Pa., on August 22, 1911. On the day that this second request was made by said Watson as aforesaid, respondent, pursuant to the request of said Watson, saw said Loomis in Scranton and informed said Loomis that Watson had told respondent that he had heard nothing from any official of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. in regard to the matter in question. Said Loomis expressed surprise at this and told respondent that he had theretofore given directions to have Reese A. Phillips, an official of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., see said Watson on the subject. Following this, on several occasions, said Christopher G. Boland came to the office of the respondent to discuss the proposed settlement, informing the respondent that the troubles growing out of the litigation in which the Marian Coal Co. was then involved were so preying upon his brother, William P. Boland, that he was afraid that the latter's mind might be affected, and he urged the respondent for that reason to endeavor to bring about the proposed settlement. On or about September 27, 1911, said Loomis, referring to the interview between him and the respondent of August 22, 1911, above mentioned, wrote to the respondent a letter, of which the following is a copy:

SEPTEMBER 27, 1911.

Judge R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

MY DEAR JUDGE: As per our recent interview, I instructed our people to call on Attorney Watson in connection with the Boland case, and I find there is little, if any, prospect of our reaching any settlement of this case, owing to the very great difference of opinion as to the merits of Mr. Boland's claims and the value of his properties.

Thanking you, however, for your good efforts in this direction, I am,

Very truly, yours,

E. E. LOOMIS.

On September 28, 1911, the respondent wrote and sent to said Loomis a letter, of which the following is a copy:

(R. W. Archbald, judge United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., September 28, 1911.

MY DEAR MR. LOOMIS: I am very sorry to have your letter stating that you have not been able to effect a settlement with Mr. Boland. I trust, however, that the matter is still not beyond remedy. And if I thought that it would help to secure an adjustment, I would offer my direct services. I have no interest except to try and do away with an unpleasant situation for both parties, and I hope that this still may be possible.

Yours, very truly, R. W. ARCHBALD.

On September 30, 1911, said Phillips called upon the respondent and stated that the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. could not make any substantial offer to the Marian Coal Co. to settle the controversies between the two companies for the reason that the property of the Marian Coal Co. had comparatively little value.

On October 3, 1911, the respondent, at the request of said Watson, wrote and sent to said Loomis a letter in the following words:

UNITED STATES COMMERCE COURT,
Washington, October 3, 1911.

E. E. LOOMIS, Esq.,
Vice President Delaware, Lackawanna & Western,
90 West Street, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. LOOMIS: I understand that there has been a suggestion that Mr. Watson meet you and possibly also Mr. Truesdale, and that Mr. Watson has written asking for an appointment. It seems to me, if I may be permitted to say so, that this is a very good idea. It will give you an opportunity to discuss the Boland claim with Mr. Watson upon a somewhat different basis than Col. Phillips could representing the coal department.

I have little doubt but that it will appear so to you, and it may be altogether unnecessary for me to write about it. But I am sure you will not take it amiss to have me do so, and I shall hope that a settlement may yet be reached in that way. There is nothing like a personal interview to bring about such a result.

Yours, very truly, R. W. ARCHBALD.

On the 6th day of October, 1911, while the respondent was in the city of Washington, in attendance upon the Commerce Court, he received from said Watson a telegram, of which the following is a copy:

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD,
Judge, Court of Commerce, Washington, D. C.:

Wire me East Stroudsburg what time to-morrow I can meet you in Washington.

G. M. WATSON.

To this telegram the respondent replied by telegram, as follows:

GEORGE M. WATSON,
East Stroudsburg, Pa.:

Almost any time you wish.

R. W. ARCHBALD.

Pursuant to this telegram said Watson did come to Washington and saw the respondent on October 7, 1911. Said Watson then told the respondent that he had come to Washington to see the respondent at the express request of William P. Boland and Christopher G. Boland, to see whether something further could not be done in the matter of the proposed settlement, to which the respondent had nothing to suggest. As to what further conversation took place between the respondent and said Watson with regard to the said matter at that time the recollection of the respondent is too indistinct to enable him to make any averment, except that he can and does say that if anything further of importance had occurred he would remember it. On the same day, at the request of said Watson, the respondent obtained and gave to him a printed copy of the petition in the case of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. v. The United States, being No. 49 on the docket of the United States Commerce Court, a case known as the Meeker case, in which the Interstate Commerce Commission had rendered a decision which had a distinct bearing on one of the principal questions involved in the case of the Marian Coal Co. v. the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.

On or about November 13, 1911, at the suggestion of either said Christopher G. Boland or of said Watson, the respondent again saw said Loomis in Scranton and requested him to make an offer of some kind for the property of the Marian Coal Co., or for the interest of said Bolands in that company, by which all the litigation in which said Marian Coal Co. and said railroad were involved could be amicably settled. This endeavor was fruitless, and respondent immediately so notified said Christopher G. Boland by writing and sending to him a letter, of which the following is a copy:

SCRANTON, PA., November 13, 1911.

C. G. BOLAND, Esq., Scranton, Pa.

MY DEAR CHRISTY: I had an interview with our friend this afternoon, and I regret to say that I did not succeed in doing anything. I tried to get him to make a counter proposition to the one which had been submitted upon your side, but he seemed to feel that the amount which he would be willing to offer was so inconsiderable that it was hardly worth the while. I regret to report this as the final outcome of the efforts of settlement which have been made, but I see nothing to be attained any further here.

I return herewith the papers which you let me have.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. ARCHBALD.

The foregoing is, in substance, a statement of all that respondent had to do with the attempted settlement of the litigation referred to. In all that respondent did in the matter he acted as the friend of said Watson and as the friend of said Christopher G. Boland. Respondent never received from any source whatever any suggestion that he was to be compensated in any way, directly or indirectly, for his attempt to bring about an amicable adjustment of the litigation in question, and in all that the respondent did in that regard he acted without any intention or expectation of receiving or asking for any compensation or reward. Respondent denies that at the times and places mentioned in said second article, or at any other time or place, he willfully or unlawfully or corruptly or otherwise used his influence as a circuit judge or as a judge of the United States Commerce Court to attempt to settle said cases of the Marian Coal Co. against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., or to sell or bring about the sale of any stock of the Marian Coal Co. to said railroad company.

Wherefore the said Robert W. Archbald denies that he was and is guilty of misbehavior as such judge or of a high crime and misdemeanor in office, as charged in said second article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 3.

For answer to the third article, the respondent says:

1. That the said third article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said third article.

2. Respondent admits that on or about October 1, 1911, he was United States circuit judge and a judge of the United States Commerce Court, and that the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., a corporation, was practically owned by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., which latter company was and is a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce. He further admits that on or about said date said Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. was a party litigant in certain suits then pending in the United States Commerce Court, as stated in said second article, except that as to the pendency of the said suit No. 38 the facts are as follows: Said suit was commenced by petition filed in said court on April 12, 1911. On May 17, 1911, a motion for a temporary injunction was argued, and on May 22, 1911, said injunction was granted. On June 13, 1911, the Interstate Commerce Commission appealed from the order granting said injunction to the Supreme Court of the United States, and on June 16, 1911, the United States appealed from said order to the Supreme Court. At the time in question respondent knew that said railroad company was a party to said suits pending in the Commerce Court. As to the charge contained in said third article that on or about said last-mentioned date he, the respondent, secured from the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. an agreement which permitted him and his associates to lease a culm dump known as Packer No. 3, near Shenandoah, Pa., this respondent states that the facts are as follows: Said culm dump known as Packer No. 3 was owned by the city of Philadelphia as trustee under the will of Stephen Girard, deceased, which trust was administered through a body known as the board of city trusts. Prior to October 1, 1911, said board of city trusts had leased said Packer No. 3 culm dump, with a large amount of other property, to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., which lease at that time had about two years to run. It is true that on or about September 28, 1911, at the request of the respondent, the said Lehigh Valley Coal Co. agreed (as respondent understood) that so far as it was concerned it would make no objection to the said board of city trusts leasing to the respondent and his associates said Packer No. 3 culm dump for a term beginning before the expiration of said lease to it, upon several conditions, one of which was that a certain royalty should be paid to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. for any coal that might be taken from said dump, in addition to the royalty which should be payable to the said board of city trusts, and another of which was that any coal that should be taken from said culm dump should be shipped over the tracks of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.

Respondent avers that he and his associates subsequently arranged with certain coal commission men that if said dump should be acquired by the respondent and his associates, the coal to be taken therefrom, after being washed and prepared for market, should be sold to said coal commission men at the dump. The respondent, however, admits that it was his understanding that the coal, by whomsoever sent to market, would have to be shipped over the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. lines.

As to the averment of said third article that said Packer No. 3 dump contained 472,670 tons of coal, respondent says he has even now no absolute knowledge. His information at the time of the negotiations in question, from one source, was that it contained "about three or four hundred thousand tons," and his information from another source was that it contained a much less quantity.

This respondent denies that in what he did in reference to said Packer No. 3 culm dump, as above set forth, he unlawfully or corruptly or otherwise used his official position or his official influence, as such judge, to secure from the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. said agreement or any agreement.

Wherefore the said respondent denies that he was and is guilty of misbehavior as such judge or of a misdemeanor in such office, as charged in said third article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 4.

For answer to the fourth article, the respondent says:

1. That the said fourth article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said fourth article.

2. The respondent admits that, prior to the 4th day of April, 1911, there was pending in the United States Commerce Court the suit of Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. The Interstate Commerce Commission; that that suit was argued before the United States Commerce Court on the 4th day of April, 1911, and that afterwards, on the 22d day of August, 1911, while said suit was still pending in said court and before the same had been decided and while he, the respondent, was a member of the United States Commerce Court, he wrote to Helm Bruce, who was one of the attorneys for the said Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., a letter, in which he requested said attorney to see one of the witnesses who had testified in said suit on behalf of said company and to get his explanation and interpretation of certain testimony that said witness had given before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and communicate the same to respondent. This letter was written in the endeavor to ascertain the position taken by witness and counsel in regard to what seemed at the time to the respondent to be an ambiguity in the testimony of the said witness, the true construction and meaning of which appeared to the respondent from his study of the case to be contrary to that which had been put upon it by the Interstate Commerce Commission. After receiving the answer of the said Helm Bruce, upon a further consideration of the case, taking the evidence as it stood, without reference to the explanation contained in the letter, the conclusions deduced by the Interstate Commerce Commission were held in the opinion of the court to be unwarranted. As throwing some light upon the matter, however, the respondent inserted the letter in the record at the place in the testimony to which it referred, so that all parties might know and have the benefit of it.

Respondent further admits that afterwards, on the 10th day of January, 1912, while said suit was still pending and before the same had been decided by the United States Commerce Court, he, the respondent, wrote to the said Helm Bruce another letter, in which he said that other members of the United States Commerce Court had discovered evidence in the record with regard to another matter apparently contrary to the statements and contentions made by said attorney, and requested said attorney to make an explanation and answer thereto. This letter was written under the following circumstances:

Upon examination of the evidence by the court after the arguments were closed, a fact was apparently discovered tending to support one of the conclusions of the commission, which is thus stated in the opinion of the dissenting judge:

> For example, the view taken by the commission of the Cooley adjustment is fully justified, in my judgment, by the fact that the relation of rates thereby established in 1886 was departed from, not as to some but as to a great many commodity rates, and that, too, at many times. * * *

Upon this fact an argument adverse to the petitioner was advanced. This fact had not been noticed by the commission or by counsel, and it seemed to the respondent that counsel for the petitioner ought, in fairness and in the interest of justice, to have an opportunity to answer the argument. To give him this opportunity the letter was written.

Respondent denies that in writing or sending either of said letters to said Helm Bruce he was guilty of gross or improper conduct or of a misdemeanor as a circuit judge or as a member of the Commerce Court. He denies that in any proper sense either of said letters was written secretly or wrongfully or unlawfully. He admits that, in so far as he was aware, the fact that either of said letters was so written was not made known to the Interstate Commerce Commission or its attorneys at the time it was so written. But in this connection he avers that in their briefs, and also in the oral argument of the case, the counsel for the Interstate Commerce Commission and the counsel for the United States had distinctly declined to discuss any question relating to the details of the evidence, insisting that the Commerce Court had no right to look into the evidence in the case.

The respondent admits that said Helm Bruce complied with the request contained in each of said letters to him.

Wherefore the respondent denies that he was and is guilty of misbehavior in office or was and is guilty of a misdemeanor, as charged in said fourth article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 5.

For answer to the fifth article the respondent says:

1. That the said fifth article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said fifth article.

2. The respondent avers that some time in November, 1911, he was informed by one Frederick Warnke, whom he had known for a number of years, that a year or two before that time he—Warnke—had been engaged in a coal operation in Schuylkill County, Pa., under a lease which had been executed by the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., as lessors, to other parties, from whom he, the said Warnke, had purchased it; that the said lease included an underground mine and a surface washery, and after having been operated by the said Warnke for some time, during which the washery was burned down and had been rebuilt by the said Warnke, the said Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., through W. J. Richards, its general manager, had refused to further recognize his rights thereto, on the ground that said lease was nonassignable. The said Warnke further represented that he had invested in this operation a large amount of money which he would lose unless his rights should be recognized by said company, and he therefore asked the respondent whether he would not see the said Richards and endeavor to have him recognize Warnke's rights. He further said to the respondent that if he should not be allowed to operate the said mine under the said lease, he would be satisfied if he could get from the said Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., through the said Richards, a lease of the so-called Lincoln culm dump, which, he said, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. apparently cared little about, as it was covering said dump with rock and other refuse, which would seriously and permanently injure it. Solely out of friendship for said Warnke, and because of the serious financial loss which was likely to result to him, the respondent acceded to this request, and on November 24, 1911, arranged with said Richards to meet him at Pottsville, Pa., on November 28 following, on which day the respondent was to be in Pottsville on other business. Accordingly, on the last-mentioned day respondent met said Richards in Pottsville and presented the request of Warnke as above set forth. Said Richards informed respondent that the matter had already been fully considered, in response to requests from several other persons, and that neither of Warnke's requests could be granted, as Warnke had already been told. Respondent did nothing further in this matter, except to report the interview to Warnke.

At the time of said interview respondent did not know, as charged in said article, that the general policy of said company was adverse to the leasing of any of its culm banks; that any communication had been had with George F. Baer, president of said company, with regard to it; or that Warnke had made several attempts, through his attorneys and friends, to have the said George F. Baer and the said W. J. Richards reconsider their decision in the premises, but without avail; or that anything had ever been said to any official of the said company with regard to a lease of any kind to Warnke of the Lincoln culm dump; but respondent is now informed of these facts and believes and admits them to be true.

Respondent further admits that on November 1, 1911, and thereafter until the present time, he was a United States circuit judge, having been duly designated as one of the judges of the United States Commerce Court. Respondent also admits that the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Co. is a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, but whether the entire capital stock of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. is owned by the Reading Co., and whether the last-named company owns the entire capital stock of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Co., as averred in said article, he does not know, but has no reason to doubt or deny. At the times aforesaid, however, respondent knew that there was an intimate relation between the said companies.

Respondent denies that he wrongfully or otherwise attempted to use or did use his influence as such judge to aid or assist the said Frederick Warnke to secure a lease of any kind of the Lincoln culm dump or in any of the matters above referred to.

Except as above admitted, respondent at the times above referred to had and now has no knowledge of and no information sufficient to form a belief of the truth of the other matters set forth in the first and second paragraphs of said fifth article.

Respondent denies that at the time referred to in the third paragraph of said fifth article or at any other time he willfully, unlawfully, or corruptly, or otherwise accepted as a gift, reward, or present from the said Frederick Warnke, in consideration of favors shown by the respondent to said Warnke in the effort to effect a settlement or agreement with the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Co. and the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. or either of them or for other favors shown by respondent to said Frederick Warnke, a certain promissory note for $500, executed by the firm of Warnke & Co., of which the said Frederick Warnke was a member, as the same is averred in the said fifth article. The respondent avers the fact to be that with one John Henry Jones he afterwards rendered services in bringing about the sale by the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co. of a certain culm bank known as the Old Gravity Fill, to the Premier Coal Co., with which last-named company said Warnke was connected, and that a note for $510, made by said Premier Coal Co. and indorsed by said Warnke and other persons connected with said Premier Coal Co., was given to the respondent and said Jones as compensation for such services so rendered by them.

Wherefore respondent denies that he was and is guilty of misbehavior as a judge or of high crimes or misdemeanors in office, as charged in said fifth article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 6.

For answer to the sixth article, the respondent says:

1. That the said sixth article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said sixth article.

2. That while respondent denies that on or about the 1st day of December, 1911, or at any other time, he unlawfully or improperly or corruptly or otherwise attempted to use his influence as a circuit judge or as a judge of the United States Commerce Court with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. and the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., or with either of them, to induce the officers of said companies, or either of them, to purchase any interest belonging to persons known as the Everhardt heirs in any tract of coal land containing 800 acres, or to purchase any interest in any tract of land, respondent is advised and avers that said article is general, vague, and indefinite with regard to the offense sought to be charged therein; that it does not sufficiently inform respondent in what respect he is intended to be charged as having attempted to use his influence as United States circuit judge and judge of the United States Commerce Court with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. and the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., in that it does not state in what said attempts consisted or with what officers or agents of said company, or either of them, or under what circumstances the alleged attempts were made, and does not in any other way give respondent such information as to the real charge intended to be made against him in the said sixth article as will enable him to prepare for trial thereon.

Wherefore the respondent prays that said sixth article shall be adjudged to be null and void and that the same shall be dismissed.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 7.

For answer to the seventh article the respondent says:

1. That the said seventh article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said seventh article.

2. Respondent admits that during the months of October and November, 1908, there were pending in the United States Circuit Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, in the city of Scranton, Pa., over which court the respondent was then presiding, several actions at law wherein a corporation called the Old Plymouth Coal Co. was plaintiff and certain fire insurance corporations were defendants.

Respondent avers that said suits were commenced by the plaintiff in the court of common pleas of Luzerne County, in the State of Pennsylvania, and on October 3, 1908, on petition of the defendants, were removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

On November 18, 1908, said suits came on to be tried before respondent sitting as trial judge, and a jury, all the suits being tried together, at which time one John T. Lenahan appeared as one of the attorneys for the plaintiff. After the plaintiff's evidence was presented, the defendants moved for a nonsuit. Respondent as trial judge denied said motion. Defendants thereupon introduced evidence, before the conclusion of which, on November 21, 1908, an agreement of settlement was reached of all the suits. The jury was thereupon dismissed, and consent judgments for the plaintiff were entered on November 23, 1908. The judgment in the suit against one company, known as the Pacific Fire Insurance Co. of the City of New York, was for $2,500, to be discharged upon the payment of $2,129.63 within 15 days from November 23, 1908. Similar judgments in varying amounts were entered against the other companies.

At the time of said trial, and for some time before, respondent knew that W. W. Rissinger and his brother owned the principal part of the stock of the Old Plymouth Coal Co.

On or about November 28, 1908, at W. W. Rissinger's request, respondent indorsed a note for $2,500 made by said Rissinger and also indorsed by Sophia J. Hutchinson, which said note was indorsed by respondent solely for the accommodation of the said Rissinger, for the purpose of enabling said Rissinger, by discounting the said note, to raise money to use for his own purposes. This note was discounted by the County Savings Bank, of Scranton, and the whole of the proceeds received by said Rissinger, and has been renewed from time to time with respondent's indorsement, the discount being paid by the said Rissinger; and the last renewal is still outstanding. As to the averment contained in said seventh article that before the expiration of said 15 days the said Rissinger, with the knowledge and consent of the respondent, presented said note to the said John T. Lenahan for discount, respondent says that he has no personal knowledge as to the facts, and that if said note was so presented to the said Lenahan for discount it was without the knowledge, consent, or authority of respondent.

Respondent denies that on or about November 1, 1908, or at any other time, he entered into any agreement with said W. W. Rissinger in relation to the purchase of stock in any gold-mining scheme in Honduras or elsewhere which was in any sense wrongful or corrupt. He admits that beginning in September, 1908, he had conversations with said Rissinger and others in reference to a mining scheme in Honduras and that the negotiations between him, Rissinger, and other persons were pending at the time of the trial of said cases. He further admits that three months after said note was executed, to wit, in February, 1909, he received from said Rissinger certificates representing stock in a corporation organized by said Rissinger and others for the purpose of operating a gold placer mine in Honduras. Respondent further avers that when he so indorsed said note he understood that he was indorsing it, as hereinbefore stated, solely for the accommodation of said Rissinger, and that when he subsequently received from said Rissinger said certificates of stock they were given him only as collateral security for his liability as indorser of said note. Respondent has recently learned, however, that said Rissinger claims that the agreement between him and the respondent was that the respondent should purchase stock to the amount of one-third of said note, and that respondent was to be liable for one-third of the note, and that he received such certificates of stock not as security but as the owner thereof. To the best of the respondent's present knowledge and belief there was a misunderstanding between said Rissinger and himself, as indicated above, when said note was indorsed and said stock delivered to respondent. Respondent further avers that whether the understanding of respondent or the understanding of said Rissinger with regard to said transactions is correct, the transactions have no relevancy whatever to the judicial action of the respondent in the trial of said cases. In the ruling which he made during the trial of said cases, referred to in said seventh article, he acted solely upon his judgment as to the merits of the question which had been submitted to him in the motion for a nonsuit.

Wherefore respondent denies that any of said acts on his part were improper or unbecoming, and denies that said acts or any of them constituted misbehavior in his said office as judge, and denies that any of them render him guilty of a misdemeanor.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 8.

For answer to the eighth article, the respondent says:

1. That the said eighth article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said eighth article.

2. Respondent admits that during the summer and fall of the year 1909 there was pending in the United States Circuit Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, in the city of Scranton, over which court the respondent was presiding as the duly appointed judge thereof, a civil action involving a large sum of money, wherein the Marian Coal Co. was defendant. He further admits on information and belief that the said Marian Coal Co. was a corporation and that two-thirds of the stock of said company was owned and controlled by one William P. Boland and one Christopher G. Boland and one James M. Boland. He admits that while said suit was so pending, one John Henry Jones signed a note for $500 payable to the order of the respondent, which note the respondent then indorsed, and that said note was prepared for the signature of the said John Henry Jones by the respondent. As to the averment contained in said eighth article that during the pendency of said suit he, the respondent, wrongfully agreed and consented that the said note should be presented to the said Christopher G. Boland and the said William P. Boland or one of them for the purpose of having the said note discounted, respondent says that the facts are as follows: Said note was indorsed by respondent solely for the accommodation of said Jones, to be discounted for his sole benefit, and it was so discounted by the Providence Bank of Scranton. When respondent indorsed said note he had no knowledge or concern where or by whom it was to be discounted. He did not at any time know to whom it had been or would be presented for discount, except that said Jones, at some time after it was executed and indorsed, respondent is uncertain when, told respondent that one Edward J. Williams, who was interested with Jones in the enterprise for which the money was to be raised, thought that Christopher G. Boland would discount the note because, as he, Williams, claimed, said Christopher G. Boland was indebted to him in a considerable sum of money on account of another transaction, and except also that respondent had a conversation with reference to the discounting of said note by said Providence Bank with one Charles H. Von Storch, the president of said bank. Whether at the time in question respondent knew that Christopher G. Boland was a stockholder in the Marian Coal Co. and interested in the suit against said company then pending in said court, respondent can not now recollect. He does now admit the fact to be that said Christopher G. Boland was at that time so interested in said suit.

The respondent admits that when he was informed, as above stated, that said note might be presented to Christopher G. Boland for discount, he made no comment. If, before that time, he had learned that said Christopher G. Boland was interested in litigation in the court over which respondent was then presiding, that fact did not recur to his mind at that time. The respondent denies that in any proper sense he ever wrongfully agreed or consented that said note should be presented to said Christopher G. Boland for discount, and he denies that he ever, in any way, agreed or consented that said note should be presented to said William P. Boland for discount.

Wherefore the respondent denies that he was guilty of gross misconduct in his office as judge or was and is guilty of a misdemeanor in his said office as judge, as charged in said eighth article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 9.

For answer to the ninth article, the respondent says:

1. That the said ninth article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said ninth article.

2. Respondent admits that on or about December 3, 1909, while he was United States district judge in and for the middle district of Pennsylvania, in the city of Scranton, he, in the city of Scranton, wrote a promissory note in the sum of $500 payable to himself, which said note was signed by one John Henry Jones and indorsed by the respondent for the purpose of having the same discounted. He avers that said note was indorsed by him solely for the accommodation of said John Henry Jones, and that said note is the same note which is referred to in the eighth article. Respondent admits that shortly afterwards said John Henry Jones presented said note for discount to one Charles H. Von Storch, who was then president of the Providence Bank in Scranton. He further admits that thereupon said Von Storch by telephone inquired of the respondent whether he, the respondent, had indorsed said note; that he, the respondent, replied to that inquiry in the affirmative; and that thereupon said Von Storch caused said bank to discount said note. Respondent further admits that said Von Storch at the time in question was an attorney at law, but he avers that to the best of his recollection and belief said Von Storch had never appeared as an attorney in any case before the respondent as a United States judge prior to the time said note was so discounted. He admits that nearly a year before the presenting of said note to said Von Storch as aforesaid a suit in the circuit court of said district presided over by the respondent, in which said Von Storch was a party defendant, was decided in favor of the defendants upon a ruling made by the respondent. The respondent denies that at the time of said transaction he knew that his indorsement would not secure money in the usual commercial channels, and denies that he wrongfully permitted said John Henry Jones to present said note for discount to said Von Storch, and denies that he wrongfully or improperly or otherwise used his influence as such judge to induce said Von Storch to discount said note. On information and belief the respondent admits that said note was discounted by said bank at or about the time of his said conversation by telephone with said Von Storch, and that it has been renewed from time to time for the same amount, except that $25 has been paid thereon by said Jones. He admits that the last renewal is still due and owing.

Wherefore the respondent denies that he was or is guilty of gross misconduct in his said office, or was and is guilty of a misdemeanor in his said office as judge, as charged in said ninth article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 10.

For answer to the tenth article the respondent says:

1. That the said tenth article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said tenth article.

2. Respondent admits that throughout the year 1910 he was United States district judge in and for the middle district of Pennsylvania. As to the averments of the tenth article relating to the alleged receipt of a large sum of money by the respondent from one Henry W. Cannon, respondent denies every allegation of said article except as the same is herein expressly admitted. The facts with regard to the matter are as follows: Said Henry W. Cannon and the wife of this respondent, Elizabeth C. Archbald, are full cousins, in that Benjamin Cannon, father of the said Elizabeth, was full brother to George Cannon, father of said Henry W. Cannon.

On March 23, 1910, Mrs. Archbald received from her cousin, said Henry W. Cannon, of New York City, a letter inviting her to take a trip to Europe at his expense and in his company, for the purpose, among other things, of visiting him at his residence near Florence, Italy, and suggesting the respondent's daughter, Mrs. Anna Silvey, as a companion. It was stated in said letter that the writer supposed that respondent would not be able to accompany Mrs. Archbald, on account of his judicial work, but it was intimated that if the fact was otherwise, he, the said Henry W. Cannon, would be glad to have respondent accompany Mrs. Archbald in place of their daughter. It was necessary that said Elizabeth C. Archbald while traveling should have a companion, because she was in ill health. Respondent had had no vacation for six or seven years prior to that time. Upon consultation with the other judges of the circuit he found that he could be excused from service without detriment to the work of his district, and thereupon respondent, with Mrs. Archbald, accepted the invitation. On April 16, 1910, respondent and Mrs. Archbald sailed, with said Henry W. Cannon, from New York on the steamship Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, traveled with him in Europe, and visited him at his residence in Florence, being gone nearly three months and returning with him to the United States on July 8 following.

When said invitation was given and accepted, and when said trip was made by the respondent and his wife with said Henry W. Cannon, as his guest, respondent knew that said Henry W. Cannon was a director in the Great Northern Railway Co., and that he was president either of the Pacific Coast Co. or the Pacific Coast Steamship Co.; respondent is not sure which, and that the company of which said Henry W. Cannon was president was engaged, among other things, in the mining of coal on the Pacific coast of the United States.

The respondent, when he went with his wife on said trip, did not know that said Henry W. Cannon held the other positions with corporations referred to in said tenth article, and he has no knowledge on that subject now. In this connection the respondent avers that at the time he and his wife made said trip with said Henry W. Cannon at the expense of the said Cannon, the respondent was district judge of the United States for the middle district of Pennsylvania, but that the United States Commerce Court had not then been created, and that respondent had no knowledge or information that any corporation with which said Henry W. Cannon was connected or in which he was interested as officer or stockholder had or was likely to have litigation in the courts in which respondent presided. The respondent denies that the acceptance by him while holding said office of United States district judge of "said favors" from said Henry W. Cannon was improper, and denies that it had a tendency to bring his said office of district judge into disrepute, and denies that it did bring his said office of district judge into disrepute.

Wherefore the respondent denies that he was or is guilty of misbehavior in office, and denies that he was or is guilty of a misdemeanor, as charged in said tenth article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 11.

For answer to the eleventh article the respondent says:

1. That the said eleventh article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor, as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in the eleventh article.

2. Respondent admits that while holding the office of United States district judge in and for the middle district of Pennsylvania on the 16th day of April, 1910, he received and accepted the sum of $525, which was contributed and given to the respondent by various attorneys who were practitioners in the court presided over by the respondent. He avers that the fact that said sum of money or any sum of money was being so raised was unknown to him until the day that he and his wife sailed from New York to go to Europe on the trip referred to in the next preceding article, when it was handed to him in a sealed envelope by Alonzo T. Searle just as the vessel on which respondent was sailing was about to start on its journey across the ocean. Said Searle had formerly been an assistant United States district attorney for the middle district of Pennsylvania, and at the time in question was a member of the judiciary of the State of Pennsylvania. He was one of the persons who contributed to said fund. Said envelope was handed to respondent by said Alonzo T. Searle with the request that it should not be opened until after the vessel had sailed, with which request respondent complied. As to the averments of said eleventh article relating to the manner in which said money was raised, this respondent says that he has no such knowledge or information as enables him to either admit or deny the same. He admits that Edward R. W. Searle at the time in question was clerk of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania; that at that time J. B. Woodward was jury commissioner of said court; and that each of them received his appointment to his said office from the respondent.

With one or two exceptions the persons who were mentioned in the envelope as having contributed to the said fund were close personal friends of the respondent, and the gift was understood by the respondent to be a testimonial of their friendship and regard and was received by him in the spirit of friendship in which he supposed it had been given. The gift could not have been refused without impugning the motives of the givers.

Wherefore the respondent denies that he was or is guilty of misbehavior in office, and denies that he was or is guilty of a misdemeanor, as charged in said eleventh article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 12.

For answer to the twelfth article, the respondent says:

1. That the said twelfth article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said twelfth article.

2. Respondent admits to be true each and every averment of the twelfth article, except that he denies that at the time he appointed said J. B. Woodward a jury commissioner, as set forth in said article, he knew that said Woodward was a general attorney for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. The respondent first learned that fact several years after said Woodward was so appointed.

Further answering said twelfth article, respondent says that by section 2 of an act of Congress approved June 2, 1879 (21 Stat. L., p. 43), which act was in force until the adoption by Congress of the judicial code, on March 3, 1911, and is continued in force by section 276 of said code (36 Stat. L., p. 1164), it was provided that in drawing jurors for the Federal courts in the State of Pennsylvania said jurors should be drawn from a box containing the names of not less than 300 persons, which names, the statute provides, "shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen of good standing, residing in the district in which such court is held and a well-known member of the principal political party in the district in which the court is held opposing that to which the clerk may belong." The middle district of Pennsylvania was created by act of Congress approved March 2, 1901 (31 Stat. L., p. 880), and was made up of 32 counties, of which 21 counties were taken from the western district of Pennsylvania and 11 counties from the eastern district. That portion of said middle district in which the city of Scranton is situated was taken from the western district. It had been the custom and practice for a long period of years in both the eastern and the western districts of Pennsylvania to select a member of the bar as jury commissioner to serve with the clerk. Soon after the creation of the middle district of Pennsylvania Edward R. W. Searle, who was a Republican in politics, was appointed clerk of the district court for that district by the respondent. It thereupon became the duty of the respondent to appoint a Democrat as jury commissioner of that district. The respondent had known J. B. Woodward, who was a well-known Democrat, intimately and favorably for many years, and, conforming to the custom which had theretofore obtained in said eastern and western districts, and believing that said Woodward would discharge the duties of jury commissioner faithfully and intelligently, and exercising his best judgment in the premises, the respondent appointed said J. B. Woodward for those reasons, and for none other.

Wherefore respondent denies that he was or is guilty of misbehavior in office, and denies that he was or is guilty of a misdemeanor, as charged in said twelfth article.

ANSWER TO ARTICLE 13.

For answer to the thirteenth article the respondent says:

1. That the said thirteenth article does not set forth anything which, if true, constitutes an impeachable offense or a high crime or misdemeanor as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said thirteenth article.

2. Respondent is advised and avers that in and by said article it is attempted to combine two distinct and independent charges, depending upon different facts and to be supported and met by the evidence of different witnesses, and that to combine the same in one article operates to the serious prejudice of the respondent, not only by embarrassing him and his counsel in his defense, but in preventing him from obtaining the separate judgment of the Senate upon each of such alleged offenses.

Wherefore the respondent prays that the said thirteenth article be adjudged to be null and void and that the same shall be dismissed.

3. The respondent is further advised and avers that said article is general, vague, and indefinite with respect to the first offense sought to be charged therein, to wit, the obtaining of credit from persons interested in suits pending in the courts over which respondent presided, and does not give respondent such information as to the nature and character of the charge intended to be made against him as will enable him to prepare for trial thereon, in that it does not inform the respondent at what times or at what places or from what persons or under what circumstances or in what way it is intended to charge that the respondent obtained credit, and that to require the respondent to further answer said charge would not be agreeable to law or justice.

Wherefore the respondent prays that he be not required to further defend against the said first charge attempted to be made in the thirteenth article.

4. Not waiving, but insisting, upon each of his foregoing objections to the thirteenth article, but being unwilling to appear to admit even by implication the truth of the charges attempted to be made in said article, the respondent states as follows:

As to the first charge attempted to be made in said thirteenth article, he admits that on the 29th day of March, 1901, he was duly appointed United States district judge for the middle district of Pennsylvania, and that he held such office until the 31st day of January, 1911, when he was duly appointed United States circuit judge and designated as a judge of the United States Commerce Court. Respondent denies that at any time or place he sought wrongfully or otherwise to obtain credit from or through any person or persons interested in any court over which he presided or of which he was a member.

As to the second charge attempted to be made in said thirteenth article, the respondent denies that on the 31st day of March, 1911, or at any other time or place he undertook to carry on a general business for speculation and profit in the purchase or sale of culm dumps or coal lands or other coal properties. He denies that for a valuable consideration he at any time undertook to compromise litigation pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission. He denies that in furtherance of alleged efforts to compromise such litigation or in furtherance of alleged speculations in coal properties he willfully or unlawfully or corruptly or otherwise used his influence as a judge of the said United States Commerce Court to induce the officers of the Erie Railroad Co. or the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. or the Lackawanna & Wyoming Valley Railroad Co., or any other railroad company engaged in interstate commerce, to enter into any contract or contracts or agreement or agreements in which he, the respondent, was financially interested, with Edward J. Williams, John Henry Jones, Thomas H. Jones, George M. Watson, or any other person. He denies that in any contract in which he was interested relating to any purchase or proposed purchase from any railroad company of the character aforesaid he ever concealed or undertook to conceal such interest or connived at such concealment by any other person. He avers that so far as he is aware, in the few such cases in which he had such interest, that fact was disclosed not only to the officers and agents of the company concerned, but to many other persons. Respondent further admits that in the very few cases in which he was interested in the proposed purchase of culm banks or other coal property from railroad companies he did not invest any money or other thing of value, except his own personal services, in consideration of any interest acquired or sought to be acquired by him. He avers that in association with others he rendered services in such cases, but he denies that in attempting to secure any such contract, agreement, or property he used or attempted to use his influence as such judge with the contracting parties thereto or any of them, and denies that he received any interest in any such contract, agreement, or property in consideration of such influence in aiding and assisting in securing same.

Respondent admits that in the year 1911, and until April 15, 1912, the Erie Railroad Co. and the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. were engaged in interstate commerce. Whether the Lackawanna & Wyoming Valley Railroad Co. was so engaged at any time during that period defendant does not know. And whether the other railroad companies referred to in said thirteenth article but not named were engaged in interstate commerce during said period respondent has no means of either admitting or denying, because he does not know to what other companies the thirteenth article refers. He admits that during the year 1911, and until April 15, 1912, the Erie Railroad Co. and the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. from time to time had suits pending in the United States Commerce Court, and that other railroad companies during that time had suits pending in said court. Whether the suits referred to but not described in said article were pending at the time of the execution of the several contracts and agreements referred to but not described in said article the respondent can not say, for the reason that he has no means of knowing to what suits or to what agreements the article refers.

The respondent denies that from the 31st day of March, 1911, until the 15th day of April, 1912, or at any other times, he was continuously and persistently engaged in endeavoring to secure or in securing from said railroad companies or from any railroad companies contracts or agreements as charged in said thirteenth article.

Wherefore respondent denies that he was or is guilty of misbehavior as such judge and denies that he was or is guilty of misdemeanors of office as charged in said thirteenth article.

And this respondent, in submitting to this honorable Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment his answer to the articles of impeachment exhibited against him, respectfully reserves the right to apply hereafter from time to time for leave to amend or add to the same when and as such amendment or addition may become essential to the proper presentation of the defense of the respondent to said articles of impeachment.

ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

R. W. ARCHBALD, Jr.,
A. S. WORTHINGTON,
Of Counsel for Respondent.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following order, which was considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate to the House of Representatives an attested copy of the answer of Robert W. Archbald, additional circuit judge of the United States for the third judicial circuit, to the articles of impeachment.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following order, which was considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to (S. Doc. No. 886):

Ordered, That the answer of the respondent, Robert W. Archbald, additional circuit judge of the United States for the third judicial circuit and designated as one of the judges of the United States Commerce Court, to the articles of impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Representatives be printed for the use of the Senate sitting in the trial of said impeachment.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, the managers desire to know if the counsel for the respondent can at this time furnish to the managers a copy of the answer just made by the respondent to the articles of impeachment.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I regret to say that we had obtained a copy for that purpose, but different newspapers and press associations exhausted the copies, even our own office copy. Otherwise we should be very happy to hand a copy to the managers.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I merely wished it in order to facilitate the work of the managers in the preparation of their replication to the answer.

Mr. President, I believe the order heretofore determined upon is that the Senate will reconvene as a Court of Impeachment on the 1st day of August to receive such replication or other response that the managers or the House may see proper to make to the answer just interposed by the respondent.

I presume there is nothing further to be done by the court to-day, and we will therefore withdraw.

The managers on the part of the House thereupon retired from the Chamber.

The respondent and his counsel withdrew from the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, do now adjourn in accordance with the order heretofore made until Thursday, August 1, 1912, at 1 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate, sitting as a court, do now adjourn in accordance with the order heretofore made.

Mr. BACON. Of course I have no objection to that motion if it is deemed necessary that it shall be repeated every time, but I do not think it is necessary that a motion in the nature of a motion to adjourn should be presented. I think the usual course is for the Presiding Officer to announce that the proceedings of the Senate as a Court of Impeachment are adjourned until a certain date.

Mr. LODGE. No harm can possibly be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is unanimously agreed to.

Thereupon (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting on the trial of impeachment, adjourned until Thursday, August 1, 1912, at 1 o'clock p. m.

CORBETT TUNNEL, WYOMING—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. GALLINGER). The Senate resumes legislative business.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as a privileged matter, I ask that the veto message of the President of Senate bill 4862 be laid before the Senate for consideration and action.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the unfinished business is in order at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not hear what the Senator from Montana stated. I should like to have him repeat it.

Mr. MYERS. I will restate it. I do not know what the rights are about a veto message of the President, but I have understood that it is a matter of the highest privilege to be called up at any time. There was a veto message of the President of Senate bill 4862 communicated to the Senate some days ago. The rules, I believe, provide that immediately upon the receipt of a veto message it shall be laid before the Senate, and that the Presiding Officer shall put the question, Shall the bill pass, notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States? Instead of that being done, at my request the veto message was laid on the table, and it was the understanding that it could be called up at any time.

Furthermore, I had intended to call it up to-day, and I do so at this time because it has been my impression that the Senate is entitled to two hours each day in which to transact morning business or special business or business of a specially privileged nature—in other words, from 12 o'clock to 2 o'clock when the Senate may convene at 12 o'clock. To-day the impeachment proceedings consumed one hour and a half of that time, and it seems to me the Senate ought to have its two hours in which to attend to morning business and business of this nature that may be called up by any Senator.

If I am wrong and if the unfinished business is now the regular order, and it is the desire of the Senator from Connecticut to proceed with it, I will not urge anything further in regard to the matter. It was my impression that, considering the fact that an hour and a half of the two hours for morning business had been consumed by the impeachment proceeding, and the further fact that this is a matter of a privileged nature, I was entitled to have it called up at any time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I had no idea that the matter alluded to by the Senator from Montana was a privileged matter. I remember in looking over the RECORD to have seen that the Chair did lay the veto message of the President before the Senate and stated what the question was. That is as far as it went.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, that is the general provision in regard to all messages. I should be glad if the Senator would point out where the privilege of a veto message is.

Mr. MYERS. I can not now put my finger on any rule, but I have been informed by older Senators that that is the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the RECORD may be correct, the Chair will state that he laid the message before the Senate and stated that the question was whether the Senate would, notwithstanding the objections of the Executive, pass the bill. The Senator from Montana then asked that it might lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Chair to rule that it is a privileged matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the contrary, the Chair holds that it is not a privileged matter.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask for information, when I may have the opportunity of calling up the message for action, at what time during the morning hour, or when will it come up?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I am not responsible in any way, nor is the unfinished business, for the fact that the special order of the Senate, the impeachment proceeding, has taken such a large portion of the time from the morning hour. That was done by a special order of the Senate. I have no disposition whatever to delay or impede any action that the Senate may desire to take upon the veto message to which the Senator from Montana has alluded.

I simply called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the unfinished business is now in order. Certain Senators have spoken to me and said they desire to speak on that subject. The Senator from Montana has asked the Chair a parliamentary inquiry, I understand, and I will desist until that has been answered.

Mr. MYERS. I will withdraw the question and I will ask for information from the Chair on this point, considering the fact that impeachment proceedings have consumed one hour and a half of the two hours provided by the rules for morning business, are we not now entitled to further consider morning business or special business for an hour and a half longer?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announced that morning business had closed and other business was transacted before the impeachment proceedings were entered upon.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not rise to question the ruling that has just been made by the Chair, but the suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts might leave an erroneous impression upon the Senate with regard to our duty respecting veto messages. We have nothing in our rules which specifically refers to such messages, but we have in our Constitution a provision which, I think, points the way very clearly to our duty. I read from section 7, Article I, of the Constitution:

> Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States. If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it.

The Constitution then sets forth the portion of the vote which must be had in order to override the veto of the Executive. To me it seems very clear from this provision of the Constitution that it is the duty of the Senate to proceed immediately, unless there be some other order made by the Senate with respect to it. I do think that a message of the President withholding his approval from an act of Congress has a different standing here from the standing which other messages of the President upon general matters may have. I believe it is our duty to go on and consider this veto message for the purpose of determining whether the will of Congress or the will of the President shall stand.

Mr. LODGE. The clause of the Constitution, which of course is a familiar one, has never been held, I think, to confer parliamentary privilege in either House. At this very moment there is a veto message on the Army appropriation bill in the House of Representatives upon which no action has been taken. It has never been the practice, I think, in either House to construe that clause as meaning that the moment a veto message was laid before the House we must immediately proceed to consider it. The practice is to refer the bill with the veto message to a committee. That has been done in the House in the case I have in mind. It has always been done with veto messages here, I think, since I have been in the Senate. That has been the universal practice. Of course, the time may come to change it, but that has been the practice.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not say it is mandatory to the Senate to proceed immediately to the consideration of a veto message, but I think it is mandatory to proceed in some manner upon the message.

May I say that while it is not so definitely stated in the Constitution of the United States, there is a similar provision in the constitutions of nearly all the States, and to those provisions there is added, I think, almost invariably, that when a veto message is presented the only question shall be, Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the disapproval of the Executive? I do not cite these instances as rules for our guidance, but I do cite them in order to show that when Congress has acted upon a measure and the Executive approval is withheld, then the measure ought to have some higher standing before us than though it were pending here without action or than a message which simply communicated to us the opinion of the Executive with regard to general matters.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is no question whatever that when the question on a veto message is put it must be put in the precise form stated by the Senator from Iowa. The point is, when shall that question be put? The Constitution says the House in which the bill originated shall proceed—proceed, of course, under its own rules and under its own provisions, which has been the universal practice—proceed in its own way; and when the time has come for acting on the veto message, then it is put in that manner. I should like to ask what bill it is that the veto message is on.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts when, in his opinion, does the time come?

Mr. LODGE. When either House to which the message comes chooses to take it up.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will it be taken up as a bill is taken from the calendar, subject to the rules that prevail in such cases?

Mr. LODGE. I think so.

Mr. CUMMINS. And can it be taken up in the morning hour?

Mr. LODGE. It can be taken up under the rules like any other matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. But what are the rules for taking up a veto message?

Mr. LODGE. The same rules that apply to any other matter before a committee or before the House. I desire to know just what bill it is that the veto message is on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be reported.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4862) for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call attention to the proceedings that were had when this veto message was laid before the Senate.

The Secretary read from page 464 of the Journal of July 18, 1912, as follows:

A message was received from the President of the United States by Mr. Latta, his secretary.

The message was read.

The Senate proceeded, as the Constitution prescribes, to reconsider the said bill—S. 4862—returned by the President of the United States to the Senate, in which it originated, with his objections, which bill is in the following words, viz:

* * * * * * *

The President pro tempore stated the question to be, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

When,

On motion by Mr. MYERS,

Ordered, That the bill and message lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to say, under the usual course I think the matter would be referred to a committee. I think that is the usual practice of both Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can either be acted upon, referred to a committee, or, as in this instance, it can be laid on the table.

Mr. BORAH. I presume were it not for the fact that the unfinished business seems to have precedence now, this matter could be called up or that it can be called up to-morrow morning during the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Idaho will permit, the Chair will make reply to the inquiry made a moment ago by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and which will also answer the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho.

It is the opinion of the Chair that it will be in order at any time, either during the morning hour or at any time after the morning business has closed; the Senator can ask for unanimous consent to take the message up or he can move for its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Of course, if the Senate takes it up now by motion it displaces the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly that would be the effect if taken up now.

Mr. MYERS. I have no desire to displace the unfinished business, or even to make a motion to that effect. I give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the order of the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, I will call up this veto message and ask that it be laid before the Senate for consideration and disposition.

REPORT ON "TITANIC" DISASTER.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to call up the Senate resolution 356, providing for the printing of Senate Report No. 806. It has been reported favorably from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall not object to this unanimous consent, but I desire to give notice that after the conclusion of the resolution called up by the Senator from Michigan I shall press the unfinished business.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That 12,000 copies of Senate Report No. 806, Sixty-second Congress, second session, Report of the Senate Committee on Commerce on the Titanic disaster, be printed for the use of the Senate folding room.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported as a substitute.

The resolution was agreed to.

PANAMA CANAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Several Senators have indicated to me a wish to make some remarks upon the unfinished business. I ask the Senator from North Dakota if he is ready to proceed at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am prepared to finish the address I had in mind when I gave way to the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota will proceed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire very briefly to close my argument on this proposition of our right under our treaty to charge tolls to the coastwise trade of any other nation while we free our own coastwise trade from those tolls.

When the treaty of 1901, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, was agreed to by the Senate of the United States it was understood by the Senate, by both the high contracting parties, and by the whole world, that the vessels of every nation, including those of the United States or its citizens, should receive absolute equality of treatment; and it was further understood that this treaty pledged the sacred honor of the United States that as proprietor of this canal it would not discriminate in favor of its own vessels.

Every diplomatic utterance for over half a century stands as a warrant for our good faith. Every message of every President who has discussed the subject of an Isthmian Canal during that period is a national declaration of our policy to maintain as a great world canal such connecting highway between the oceans, dedicated to peace, and within whose zone the clamor of war should never be heard.

The spirit of that great purpose was never intended to be abandoned by this Government when it entered into this agreement. It was never intended by us to set up any right or privilege of discrimination in our own favor because of our investment or the duty of maintenance self-imposed upon us. We went even further and by a vote of 43 to 27 declared specifically that we would never claim a preference for our own coastwise vessels.

We understood when we adopted this treaty, and we so said to all the nations, that it should be dedicated to the whole world on terms of exact equality, and that the great benefits that we should derive by shortening the waterway between our Atlantic and Pacific Oceans 4,000 miles, and the equal tolls we might charge to all commerce which should pass through it to meet the interest upon the investment and cost of maintenance, should be full compensation for that investment.

No strained attempt at construction, no bellicose utterances of Senators, can ever efface one line of our historic attitude on this subject or wipe from our records the decisive vote of the Senate which refused to claim a discriminatory right.

If there were no other reasons, a deep pride in the honor of my country, in its standing before the bar of judgment of the civilized world, demands that I should raise my voice and cast my vote against the attempt to cast a stain on that national honor.

And, Mr. President, we can not excuse ourselves from this laxity of a deep concern in our national integrity by suggesting that if our right be questioned we may submit it to The Hague tribunal, because the same spirit that will violate the strict letter and intendment of this treaty will have no difficulty in voting a violation of that treaty which would send the matter to The Hague. The same arguments which are made to sustain our right to avoid the obligations of this treaty would be urged to withdraw the particular subject from the operation of the other treaty. True, that treaty provides that disputes as to the proper construction of a treaty shall be submitted to the international tribunal, but that treaty also provides that certain matters, which would include questions of national safety, honor, or internal policy, are excepted from any provision requiring submission to arbitration.

Those Senators who can see their way clear to avoid the clear letter and purpose of this agreement will, I anticipate, find little difficulty in discerning an avenue of escape from the spirit of the other treaty, based on a claim of internal policy.

When we have violated both agreements, when we have refused to abide by our obligations in this treaty, and followed that by a refusal to submit the question of such violation to The Hague tribunal, what then? War? No; not for one moment. No nation on the face of the earth can afford to go to war with us, and probably least of all the nation with whom this treaty was concluded. Our great expanse of territory, our vast population, our unequaled wealth and almost inexhaustible resources stand as a proclamation to any nation or combination of nations of the futility of any resort to arms as a settlement of an international agreement with us. In these days war's favors are not to the nation that can strike the first or the quickest blow, but to the one which can strike the last blow. It is a contest of endurance. So it will never be a question of war, but solely one of national faith. The very fact that we are immune from the danger of war, except one that we ourselves may declare, ought to appeal to a greater degree to our high sense of duty to maintain to the utmost the good faith of our contractual obligations. A nation struggling for its very existence may find excuse for failure to maintain its national word; a nation independent and having every advantage in the world in the race for national prestige and greatness is bound by the highest duty to hold its obligations sacred.

I have not had time to examine the decision twice read here in the case of a wharf charge imposed upon foreign vessels under the laws of Texas, but I caught enough of its purport to understand that it had no bearing in this case. Undoubtedly the treaty referred to in the decision was not intended to cover within its purposes our coastwise trade, in which the other contracting party had no possible interest. In fact, as I remember, the case was not really tried upon the question of the violation of a treaty, but that matter was only brought up as an afterthought and incidentally referred to by the court. But the Hay-Pauncefote treaty has for its very foundation not only all the commerce in which the two contracting parties have an interest, but also the coastwise trade of each and every country or state in the Western Hemisphere.

Let us look at these matters just as they are.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator seems to be about to take up another branch of the subject. The Senator stated in his opening remarks that it was understood by everyone at the time of the adoption of this treaty that its construction was such as to preclude us at this time of admitting free our coastwise trade through the canal. The Senator was in the Senate at that time, I think, and I should like to ask him if he understands that the debates in the Senate show no divergence of view upon that subject?

Mr. McCUMBER. The debates disclose a divergence of purpose upon that subject. There were those who claimed that we ought to so modify the treaty that we would have the right to discriminate in favor of our coastwise trade. That was brought to a focus and a vote had upon the amendment offered by the then Senator from California, Mr. Bard, which amendment specifically provided for the right to discriminate in favor of our coastwise trade. That amendment was voted down by a vote of 43 to 27.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is it not true—I have not read the debates at that time——

Mr. McCUMBER. The debates are not published. They were held in executive session.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not true, then, that some Senators expressed the view that it was not necessary to have such an amendment in order that we might be permitted to discriminate in favor of our coastwise trade?

Mr. McCUMBER. I never heard an expression of that kind in the debate. I might not have been present at every moment of the debate, but I was here all the time, and there was no expression of that character.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator will remember that Senator Bard, in a letter embodied in the report of the House committee, stated that that was the general understanding. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], however, said that he was not aware of any such general understanding and that he did not think there was any such understanding, so that there is a difference of opinion about that.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] suggested that that was his understanding about it.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not true that the Senator from Massachusetts understood that it was not necessary to adopt the amendment which was submitted by the then Senator from California in order to enable us to discriminate in favor of our coastwise trade?

Mr. McCUMBER. If he had that understanding, it was not made very public to my knowledge. Senators may have had some views to which they gave no expression, and I can not tell what those views were; but the general consensus of opinion was that the treaty did bind us to treat all vessels alike. We discussed the general question of whether or not we ought to so amend the treaty in that particular, but it was quite conclusive from our diplomatic correspondence that if we so amended the treaty it would not be agreed to by the other party.

It seems to me that common honesty and candor required of us if we purposed to give that treaty a construction contrary to its fair import, we should then and there have so notified the other party to the agreement. If we so intended and the instrument was susceptible of either construction, national integrity demanded that we should adopt the Bard amendment and made our purpose clear.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he proposes to discuss in his remarks the proposition of the effect the change of sovereignty of the Canal Zone has as to our right to disregard or avoid the treaty.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will touch upon that; but I can say right here that I think it was properly expressed by the President when he said in his message that while we practically have all the rights of sovereignty, the titular sovereignty actually remains in the Panama Government. Of course we did not buy that territory and make it wholly American territory. If we should fail to accomplish the building of the canal and fail to operate it as a canal, no one would claim that that zone was a part of our territory, over which we might have exclusive jurisdiction to dispose of or do anything else with that we saw fit. We had the right of operation, and that right of operation necessarily carried with it such a control—and I admit that the control was very complete—over that portion of the territory which was necessary, not only for the operation of the canal, but for its proper protection, and we not only had the 10-mile strip but we also had the right to use rivers, streams, and so forth, in order portions of Panama outside the Canal Zone as might become necessary for the operation of the canal.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator's contention, then, is that we have and can exercise no such sovereignty over the Canal Zone as we do, for instance, over the Territory of Alaska, or any other Territory belonging to the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me read one article of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which the Senator from Connecticut calls to my attention, namely, article 4:

ARTICLE 4.

It is agreed that no change of territorial sovereignty or of international relations of the country or countries traversed by the before-mentioned canal shall affect the general principle of neutralization or the obligation of the high contracting parties under the present treaty.

It seems to me that the article I have just read fully answers the question of the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not advance this as my view, because I have not yet formed an opinion as to that proposition; but those who do take that position say that that article of the treaty contemplated simply a change with reference to the countries surrounding the canal, the Central American countries, and that we would have no power to negotiate a treaty which would in anywise diminish or abrogate our rights of sovereignty over our own territory.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will read the first article of the treaty he will ascertain that that treaty gives us the authority either to build and own the canal ourselves or to allow our citizens to own it. It allows us to control it or to loan the money for its construction; but there was no distinction drawn as to the rights guaranteed to the other party to the treaty in reference to the neutralization of the canal and equality of treatment, whether we adopted the one course or the other. Absolutely no distinction between the two at all was made, and the Senator, if he will read the first article, will see that it contemplates that we may adopt either course.

Now, let us view another proposition. We are, of course, the greatest country in the Western Hemisphere and will continue to be the dominant power. But we have never claimed that by reason of that domination the principles of the law of nations did not bind us. We have never claimed, and I hope never will claim, that each and every American State has not as complete a sovereignty as the United States. We have never claimed that any other country or the citizens or subjects of any other country had not as great a right to construct that canal as we had. I say as great a right, not as great an interest. All we have claimed was a right of control or domination equal to that of any other country, to the end that no country should secure, by virtue of the construction of any connecting isthmian highway an advantage over us, and to the further end that such highway should always be a world highway, as free as though nature herself had connected those seas. To assure that, we entered into the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which bound upon both this country and Great Britain the duty to refrain from building or controlling this passage without the consent of the other. In that treaty we acknowledged the cointerest not only of Great Britain but of all other nations in such a canal. In that treaty we solemnly contracted that it was to establish and declare forever equality of world interest as an American policy.

It is worse than idle talk to claim that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was not regarded as a binding obligation because of a claim of breach of faith by the other contracting party. The very treaty under consideration, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, acknowledges its validity and declares that it is entered into for the express purpose of modifying that provision of the old treaty which prohibits us from building and controlling the canal. We can not in the same breath seek to modify a treaty and claim that it is an obligation and also claim that it is void and we were not bound by it.

The most that any man has ever claimed until the other day is that the act of Great Britain in reference to a claim of sovereignty over the Mosquito territory made the Clayton-Bulwer treaty voidable at our option. If we ever had an option, we have exercised it several times in our diplomatic utterances, in every one of which we held that that treaty was binding on both countries.

In the face of all our history and in the teeth of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, it certainly requires a man whose courage can not be checked by any array of facts, no matter how formidable, to now assert that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was not regarded by this country as in full force and effect until the adoption of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Admitting that we do not claim that our sovereignty extends from the North Pole to the South Pole, over the whole Western Hemisphere, let us look at facts straight in the face.

Prior to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and the treaty with Panama, had we any greater right to build that canal than Canada? Not were our interests greater, but were our national rights greater than hers? She has a coastwise trade. Her Atlantic and Pacific shore lines are nearly equal to ours. She has important cities on both oceans. Her eastern population needs the products of her western shores, and vice versa. In time of war both shores must be defended. As long as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was in existence she was assured of the same toll for her coastwise commerce or her warships as we might receive.

Let us look at Panama or Nicaragua side of the questions. Panama will undoubtedly have a coastwise trade. It may not be important when measured by ours, but when measured by her entire commerce it may be proportionally as important to her as our coastwise trade is to us. If we have a right to say that our coastwise trade shall be free while the coastwise trade of Canada shall pay a toll, we, of course, have the same right to say that the coastwise trade of Panama, of Nicaragua, or any other Central or South American country shall not have the same rights as our coastwise commerce. If we insist upon freeing from tolls our own coastwise vessels, we will be violating our treaty with Panama under which we were authorized to construct this canal, for that treaty bound us to the same concessions that were required of the French Panama Canal Co.—absolute equality of treatment in reference to the use of the canal.

When we entered into our treaty with Panama, we said to her: "We will see that the obligation which was incurred by the Panama Co. shall be our obligation," and that obligation by the canal company was to operate this canal on equal terms with all nations of the world.

Let us remember also that Great Britain had important possessions in the Pacific Ocean and the Caribbean Sea. Australia affords a market for the products of Jamaica and British Guiana. Jamaica might need the forest products of British Columbia. In the provisions of the old treaty she had insisted upon equal rights for these countries. In surrendering certain rights which she claimed by virtue of the old treaty she still insisted upon retaining equal benefits for herself, her dependencies, and all nations.

What were the reciprocal conditions, the rights obtained, or the benefits surrendered by either party to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty? The United States asked Great Britain for a new treaty which should so modify the treaty of 1850 as to allow this country to construct, control, and operate a canal across the Isthmus, or would allow her to lend her support to any other company that might do so. She asked Great Britain to surrender her right to ever build any canal across the Isthmus of Panama, and this last right was a most important one.

Remember that Great Britain could not to-day take advantage of a treaty she had with Nicaragua to construct a canal there, because under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty she obligates herself never to construct or operate any canal across the Isthmus of Panama; and we asked her to enter into that obligation with an assurance upon our part that if she would so obligate herself we would see that the commerce of the whole world was treated with the same consideration.

Under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty Great Britain obligates herself to surrender every right she had obtained from Nicaragua or any other Central American country to construct an isthmian canal. Under it she obligates herself never to construct such a canal. Under it she further concedes to the United States the exclusive right to exercise that which she surrendered. And in consideration of the surrender of all those rights the United States obligates itself to allow Canada and Jamaica and Australia and Panama and Great Britain and every other country the same use of that canal, without any discrimination whatever, which she might enjoy. The consideration for the investment was fully answered in the report of Senator Davis on the first Hay-Pauncefote agreement, in which he says:

> That our Government or our people will furnish the money to build the canal presents the single question whether it is profitable to do so. If the canal, as property, is worth more than its cost, we are not called on to divide the profits with other nations. If it is worth less, and we are compelled by national necessities to build the canal, we have no right to call on other nations to make up the loss to us. In any view it is a venture that we will enter upon if it is to our interest; and if it is otherwise, we will withdraw from its further consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. To what part of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty does the Senator from North Dakota refer when he says that Great Britain agreed never to construct a canal uniting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans?

Mr. McCUMBER. I refer to the provisions contained in the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty that neither of these countries could construct a canal without the consent of the other; and Great Britain simply agreed to the modification of that provision to the extent that the United States might so do, but it was not so modified that she herself might construct that canal.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not read the treaty in that way. As I read the treaty of 1901, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was entirely abrogated and superseded by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and there is no provision in the latter treaty which contains any obligation on the part of Great Britain with respect to any canal. Great Britain is as much at liberty to construct a canal across the Isthmus as she ever was, so far as this treaty is concerned. There may be other doctrines held by the American people that would prevent Great Britain from constructing such a canal, but I can not see in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty any obligation of that sort, nor do I believe that there is any obligation of that kind outstanding so far as treaties are concerned.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am certain when the Senator from Iowa will again read over carefully in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and then in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty the provisions relating to what Great Britain surrendered and what the United States surrendered that he will change his mind upon that matter. In a report submitted to the Senate, prepared by such lawyers as the then Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Davis, and the then Senator from Alabama, Mr. Morgan, at least one of them declared specifically that that was the construction to be placed upon it. If the Senator will read the report made by Senator Morgan, he will find that that subject is discussed fully. I can not now, as I have not the papers before me, turn to the two treaties, but before we get through the discussion I will agree with the Senator that I will call his attention specifically to that part of the argument.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will say I will be very glad to have that done. I have the two treaties before me now. I agree that in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty there was such an obligation on the part of Great Britain; that is, it was a reciprocal obligation and rested on the United States as well, but all obligations under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty were abrogated and there came into existence new obligations, which, as I read the treaty, rested only upon the United States. I am not contending against the argument of the Senator from North Dakota that one of the considerations for the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was the surrender on the part of Great Britain of the obligations of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; I am only saying that there is nothing in our treaty obligations with Great Britain that would prevent her from constructing a canal anywhere on earth.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am going to show the Senator right now—I thought I did not have the records here to show him, but find I have some of them—and I will read from a portion of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and the new treaty discussed in the report of Senator DAVIS and contained in the confidential printed documents of the Fifty-sixth Congress, in volume 14, on pages 9 and 10. It is stated here—

> The purpose of this convention is—

Then it quotes from the new convention—> to facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and to that end to remove any objection which may arise out of the convention of April 19, 1850, to the construction of such canal under the auspices of the United States—

The object of the new treaty is here declared to be to that end, to remove the objection "to the construction of such canal under the auspices of the United States," not to the end that such canal may be constructed by either party to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, but that it might be constructed under the auspices of the United States.

Then, the Senator proceeds:

The "objections" that may arise under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty are—

Here he quoted the treaty itself—

(1) That neither the one nor the other (Government) will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship canal.

Both binding themselves in that agreement never to maintain any exclusive control over the ship canal.

(2) That neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume, or exercise any domain over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America.

(3) Nor will either make use of any protection which either affords or may afford, or any alliance which either has or may have to or with any State or people, for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or of occupying, fortifying, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same.

(4) Nor will the United States or Great Britain take advantage of any intimacy, or use any alliance, connection, or influence that either may possess with any State or Government through whose territory the said canal may pass, for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for the citizens or subjects of the one, any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal which shall not be afforded on the same terms to the citizens or subjects of the other.

And then the report proceeds:

Of this series of restrictions there are few, if any, that are not or may not become "objections" to the enjoyment of "all the rights incident to the construction (of the canal) as well as to the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal." These grounds of objection to our exclusive control of the canal are all removed by this convention, except those that relate to fortifications which, being expressly restated, are retained in a new or modified form.

This sweeping modification of article 1 of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as to all its restrictions upon the right of the United States under its auspices, to construct the canal and to have and enjoy all the rights—such as ownership—incident to its construction as well as the exclusive right of providing for its management and regulation, leaves no ground, substantial or conjectural, on which Great Britain could hereafter contend for any of the restrictions contained in that article (not expressly excepted) as remaining in force against the United States.

She consents to remain under the prohibitions of that article and consents that the United States shall be released from them in her negotiations with Costa Rica and Nicaragua for such exclusive rights in or relating to the canal as they may concede to the United States.

If this convention is ratified Great Britain could not negotiate with Costa Rica or Nicaragua or any other American State for any right to build, own, control, manage, regulate, or protect a canal to connect with the oceans, while the United States is left free to enter upon and conclude such negotiations.

That is all relating to that particular subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am entirely familiar with that report. My question was as to that part of the treaty of 1901 to which the Senator from North Dakota referred. I do not believe that Great Britain, under the Monroe doctrine, could build such canal across Central America or the Isthmus.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why could not she or her citizens build it as well as the citizens of France, who were proceeding to build it with our full concurrence and without question?

Mr. CUMMINS. But I do say that there is nothing whatsoever in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that creates any obligation whatever upon the part of Great Britain, except to obey the rules which are adopted as a part of the treaty, and that every obligation on the part of Great Britain which had been created by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was abrogated and that there remains no promise of any kind on the part of Great Britain toward us, although I freely admit that the surrender of this treaty and the obligations which it had created formed a part, if not all, of the consideration of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901.

I have no doubt that this report proceeded upon this theory: That the canal question was settled for all time by it, and that there would be no attempt on the part of Great Britain to construct a canal at this quarter of the earth, simply because the project had been adopted by the United States.

I would not want the treaty of 1901 to be construed as the Senator from North Dakota construes it as creating this obligation on the part of Great Britain.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, Great Britain imposed the obligation upon herself when her representatives signed the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. Now, if we will go back to the last treaty and read the beginning of it—its purposes—it will be made manifest that while the United States was to be freed from her obligations under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty not to construct a canal of which she should be the owner or of which she should have the control, Great Britain was not freed from that, and it practically so states in the wording preceding article 1, which reads as follows:

Whereas a convention between the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, by whatever route may be considered expedient, and to that end to remove any objection which may arise out of the convention of the 19th April, 1850, commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, to the construction of such canal under the auspices of the Government of the United States, without impairing the "general principle" of neutralization.

Now, take these words:

And to that end to remove any objection which may arise out of the convention of the 19th April, 1850, commonly called the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, to the construction of such canal under the auspices of the Government of the United States.

In other words it goes only to the extent of relieving the United States from her obligations and not Great Britain:

The United States of America and His Majesty Edward the Seventh, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British dominions beyond the seas, King and Emperor of India, being desirous to facilitate the construction of a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, by whatever route may be considered expedient, and to that end to remove any objection which may arise out of the convention of the 19th April, 1850.

Only to the end that would allow the United States to control it. The other portions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty are still in existence, so far as it binds Great Britain.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator read article 1?

Mr. McCUMBER (reading)—

The high contracting parties agree that the present treaty shall supersede the aforementioned convention of the 19th April, 1850.

Certainly; it superseded it, but it superseded it with the understanding that these matters which we are discussing were to remain in force.

I proceed now to the consideration of the claim that as we own the canal, as our money built the canal, that no nation has a right to say whether we shall grant free passage to our own ships or to the ships of any country; that it is our property to do with it as we see fit. If that had been our agreement, if we had not bound ourselves in order to get rid of the other agreement not only with the contracting party with which we made the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, but bound ourselves by an open declaration as relating to a specific contract made with Nicaragua and afterwards with Panama, I presume we would have a right to obtain a portion of the Isthmus of Panama and construct a canal thereon, to own it and control it, the same as we would any other outside territory.

But we were not the owners of any Panaman territory; we had no rights that other nations did not also possess over that territory, and in order to obtain those rights we were compelled to impose upon ourselves certain obligations, the principal one of which was to guarantee equality of treatment of all vessels using the canal which we purposed to construct.

The rights surrendered by Great Britain and the rights acquired by the United States were most valuable rights, constituting a consideration of great moment, and the obligation created thereby ought therefore to be held most sacredly inviolate. If we wish further concessions let us proceed, as we did before, to secure a modification through the treaty-making powers of the two Governments in connection with a modification of the treaty made with Panama.

I have grave doubts myself if the other party to this contract would seriously object to a modification of that treaty which would allow us to differentiate in favor of our coastwise trade. All it could possibly directly affect would be the Canadian Provinces and the small amount of trade in the Caribbean Sea which Great Britain holds in connection with her possessions. I believe that an abrogation of the strict letter of the treaty could be obtained, but until that abrogation is obtained, or until an effort is made to obtain it, and until such conditions arise as would allow any nation to declare at an end any treaty made with another, we ought to stand by this agreement in accordance with the general rules and policies which govern great nations that are bound by a sense of national integrity.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with the Senator from North Dakota in this, that we ought faithfully and honestly to comply with and fulfill our agreement; but I wanted to ask him whether he had fully considered the proposition he has just stated, namely, that Great Britain is only concerned in our coastwise trade and with favor shown to the coastwise trade in so far as commerce with the British possessions is concerned.

It seems to me that Europe is just as much concerned in our coastwise trade as she is in our foreign trade. I put the illustration the other day. England, France, Germany, Belgium, Norway, and Sweden especially desire trade with San Francisco, with Portland, with Seattle, and San Diego, and in trading with these cities of North America and of the United States are in strong competition with our own people, especially our own people in the eastern part of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not in our coastwise trade. Of course, that would not be coastwise trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator does not quite understand me. They are in competition in the trade. Of course, they can not carry from New York to San Francisco, but they can carry from Liverpool to San Francisco.

Mr. McCUMBER. I gave an illustration of that. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, if the commodities which Great Britain was endeavoring to sell in San Francisco were ordinary commodities, such as New York is endeavoring to sell in San Francisco, then Great Britain would have just as much interest in having the same tolls upon her ships passing from Liverpool to San Francisco as the United States charges on our ships passing from New York to San Francisco.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; but she could not complain if she had no further interest, whether we charged tolls or did not charge tolls in the coastwise trade in which she could not possibly take any part. That it would affect her interest, in competition, of course, to the extent of those tolls is admitted.

Much is sought to be made of the phrase "to vessels of commerce and war of all nations," used in article 1 of the treaty. It is claimed that as payment of toll upon our own war vessels would be nothing more than the transfer of money from one pocket to another, the words "of all nations" could not have been intended to cover our own vessels. But that argument falls to pieces the moment it is brought face to face with the first article of the treaty. It is agreed that the canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States, either directly at its own cost, or by gift or loan of money to individuals or corporations or through subscriptions to or purchase of stock or shares.

So the words that are to be used must be sufficiently broad to cover any one of those contingencies, although they might not be applicable in any one single contingency.

As the question whether the United States might become the actual owner or whether the canal might be owned by others was not certain, those who drafted the treaty very properly refrained from making an exception as to our own warships. On the other hand, if we should become the actual owner of the canal, the failure to so except could not possibly do any harm.

So, too, when we consider the history of the phrase and how persistently we have held to certain words, even in cases where they might well stand a modification in order to be more specific, the claim can have but little force. The same words, "the vessels of commerce and war of all nations on terms of entire equality," had been inserted so often in our preceding treaties and diplomatic utterances to express the equal right of all nations and peoples in any canal that might be constructed that it was most natural that the same phrase should be reinserted in the same words in another treaty in which that same purpose was intended to be carried out, even though by the nature of the toll transaction, which might have been fairly in contemplation, the war vessels of the United States might have been excepted, because the payment of such tolls would be equivalent to a mere bookkeeping transaction.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. At this point I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether it has come to his notice that in a treaty made with Panama—I think about two years later than the Hay-Pauncefote treaty—the United States agreed to pass ships of war of the Republic of Panama through the canal free, without any tolls, and if he has considered that agreement, made so shortly after this treaty was entered into, I should like to know what conclusion, if any, he deduces from this latter treaty?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is but one possible conclusion, and that conclusion, no matter under what construction you attempt to arrive at it, is that if we make an agreement with any nation to allow its warships to pass through the canal free, under this treaty, we are obligated to give the same rights to other nations.

Mr. CUMMINS. So we are in this situation, if this construction is to prevail, that, having agreed with the Republic of Panama to pass its warships through the canal without charge, we must pass the warships of all nations through without charge until we abrogate or modify in some way the treaty with Panama.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would necessarily follow. Let me ask the Senator, also, would the Senator claim that, under the construction he would place upon this treaty, that we would have the right to make a difference between the warships of Panama and any other country?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not claim it. On the contrary, I think it is all an illustration of the hopeless confusion into which diplomacy of that kind seems to have placed us. I do not know how to explain it. I do not know what the United States will now do concerning it, because I suppose if the treaty with Panama is to be observed, then this bill ought to contain a provision that the warships of all nations should go through the canal free.

I did not ask the Senator the question for the purpose of antagonizing the argument he is now making, but because I wanted to know what his opinion was with regard to that apparent contradiction.

Mr. McCUMBER. The simplest, the easiest way, the most honorable way, is to comply with the letter and the spirit of our obligations.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. FALL. I merely wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa, with the permission of the Senator who is speaking, to the fact that the United States has another treaty with another country, in which she guarantees no tolls for ships of war through the Panama Canal, and that is the treaty of 1907 with Colombia.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that is true. I confess that I am somewhat bewildered when I pass through these treaties and find these irreconcilable things in them.

Mr. FALL. With the permission of the Senator from North Dakota, may I suggest to the Senator that if he will examine these treaties with Colombia and Panama and Great Britain in connection with the concession which we bought from Colombia originally, he may find there is a very distinct connection between the treaties then and the concession which might throw some light on the interpretation of the treaty?

Mr. CUMMINS. However, the agreement that I have suggested is not found in or was not acquired by the United States under any concession. It is in the treaty by which we secured the concession from the Republic of Panama.

Mr. FALL. I am speaking now of the original concession, according to my idea.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that our war vessels were not to claim greater rights in time of war than others, except in so far as they might be required to protect, maintain, and operate the canal, was unquestionably the understanding. It was not supposed—and that is one thing we should keep in mind—that this would be a war zone. During all the time of this discussion here the consensus of opinion of all Senators who spoke upon the question was that it should be a zone somewhat similar to that through which the Suez Canal is operated. It was specifically declared in the instrument itself that it should be free from war, not only the canal, but for a distance of 3 marine leagues from either end thereof.

For a distance of 3 marine leagues from the shores of the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans, for a distance of 10 miles along the canal, the sound of war was not to be heard; and when finally Senators claimed that we should protect either end of the canal by fortifications it was not claimed that it should be protected simply because it would be a war zone, but to assist in assuring that it should not be a war zone and for the protection of the canal itself against those who might attempt to destroy it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. What would be the obligation of the United States with respect to war vessels of a power that was engaged in war with the United States? Take, for instance, war between Great Britain and the United States or war between Japan and the United States. What would be the obligation of the United States with respect to vessels being permitted to pass?

Mr. McCUMBER. A condition of war is always abnormal, and as an abnormal condition we can not always determine what we would be justified in doing to protect ourselves. When the life of a nation is at stake, it may be defended and protected even to the extent of breaking its obligations, and it often happens that nations do break their obligations in case of war, but immediately give notice that they will respond in damages for the breach of it to the other nations. Those who are at war are always accorded certain rights, or, I might better say, certain excuses for failure to adhere to their national obligations. In time of war other nations do not hold them up to the same strict obligations that they do in time of peace.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether he thought it very probable that a nation at war with us would intrust its war vessels with us through the canal.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to touch on that a little later.

Mr. CUMMINS. While it is true, as the Senator from North Dakota says, that in time of war little regard is paid to treaties, this treaty specifically provides for the conduct of somebody during war, and the question of the Senator from Oregon seemed to me to ask of the Senator from North Dakota——

Mr. McCUMBER. He seemed to ask whether it would live up to its obligations in time of war.

Mr. CUMMINS. No. It was what the treaty provided should be the attitude of the United States toward nations in time of war. In other words, suppose we had a war with Great Britain. I have no doubt whatever that this treaty requires us to pass the commerce of Great Britain through the canal just as though we were at peace.

Mr. McCUMBER. Undoubtedly, but the Lord pity that commerce when it gets beyond the 3-mile limit.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I do not believe the treaty requires us to pass the war ships of Great Britain through the canal in time of such conflict.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to say that was an impossible thing. It is scarcely to be conceived.

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe that is true. I think it is hardly conceivable that this treaty attempts to establish a status for just such situations. And I think that the question of the Senator from Oregon related to their status under this treaty, and it is only material, as it seems to me, as it sheds light upon the interpretation of the first rule of the treaty respecting ships of commerce.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know the Senator agrees with me that in time of war nations do not hold too strictly to their contractural obligations. For instance, in the Japanese-Russian War the Russian fleet fired upon a British fishing fleet and killed a number of persons. That was excused. They immediately acknowledged that in time of war they had mistaken that fleet for hostile vessels. Great Britain did not claim that act was war on her people. Russia said, we will respond in whatever are proper damages to those who suffered loss by reason of our act. It was a breach of the laws of nations and of neutrality and of property rights, yet it was excusable in time of war.

Now, let us put another case. Let us suppose that Great Britain was at war with Japan. Great Britain has the control in the Suez Canal——

Mr. CUMMINS. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. Japan desires to send her war vessels through that canal. Could Great Britain object to it under the general agreement that it had with reference to it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly not, but I say——

Mr. McCUMBER. It is controlled either by Great Britain or British subjects.

Mr. CUMMINS. Great Britain does not control, I understand, a majority of the stock of the Suez Canal.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand the Senator will correct me if in error that Great Britain, in connection with British subjects, holds the majority stock?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is my understanding.

Mr. CUMMINS. But this treaty is perfectly clear with regard to the attitude which the United States should occupy toward two belligerent nations other than the United States. Our duty is as clear as sunlight. The only difficulty arises when the United States is one of the belligerents, and I think the Senator from North Dakota will find great difficulty in applying the treaty as he interprets it to such a condition.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, I would find the same difficulty that I would in the United States first charging her own vessels and then putting the money into the Treasury and paying it out again for the expenses of the vessel. There are certain difficulties in reference to that treaty in time of war, but either the word "all," when it says "all vessels of any country," includes war vessels and must either be applied to all or else it need not be applied to other vessels. We can not say that it does not apply to war vessels and at the same time say it does apply to other vessels. If we have not a right to discriminate in favor of our own war vessels or of the war vessels of any country, because it becomes impossible for us to discriminate in reference to our own war vessels, as what we pay out we pay to ourselves; if the word "all" does not refer to war vessels generally, then it does not refer to merchant vessels generally.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt whatever it refers to all war vessels; but the whole trouble disappears the moment you exclude the United States from the phrase "all nations." Then every difficulty disappears.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then if that difficulty disappears you have another difficulty which immediately comes up, and that difficulty is to square our agreement with our act in getting rid of the difficulty.

If by a modification of the original Hay-Pauncefote treaty we were allowed to fortify, it was understood that the fortifications were to assure its protection and were not an invitation of other nations to make that canal a seat of war or subject to attack.

Mr. President, if in a bellicose mood, if with a chip on our shoulder, we publish to the world that we fortify this canal as a means of war and not as a means of police protection, if we declare to the world that in case of war in which this country is engaged, we shall use the guns of these fortifications to fire upon the vessel of an enemy, either of commerce or of war, at the very mouth of the canal, then in case of such war with a power of any importance the cost of protection will be ten times the benefits we will ever derive from it. Then it will become a source of weakness and not of strength.

No, Mr. President, we said in that agreement that Colon and Panama for a distance of 3 marine leagues therefrom should be neutral ports, and that no act of hostility would be committed therein by ourselves or allowed to be committed by another. The safety of the canal depends upon the good faith with which we keep that contract. Outside that 3-mile limit we may meet the enemy. If he passes our vigilance and our Navy he has a right to pass through that neutral territory unmolested, and we can meet him at the other end, outside the 3-mile limit. I am not for one moment conceding that such a condition would ever arise. There are other reasons which make it almost impossible. Only one vessel can pass through at a time. That vessel must proceed without delay. It can not wait until other vessels pass through and are assembled in the neutral port and then leave. It must take its chances alone outside the 3-mile limit as against the navy of a whole nation that might be there to meet it. With that zone declared by us as neutral, the whole world would be pitted against any nation that would attempt to violate its neutrality. With that zone declared by our acts not to be neutral, a single bomb surreptitiously brought to any point could destroy the grandest structure the world has ever seen and our hundreds of millions of investment become but a memory.

Mr. President, the question which we now have before us is a simple question of construction, whether this country is bound not to discriminate either in its own favor or in favor of its citizens. For, if the word "all" does not include the United States as owner of the canal, then the United States can discriminate in favor of all American vessels as well as those engaged in coastwise trade. If the word "all" does not include the United States, then we can discriminate in any other case. That is the only question here now. The question how we may avoid charging our coastwise vessels the same toll as the coastwise vessels of Canada and other countries I hope will not arise. I hope this because I am opposed to giving the vessels in our coastwise trade which now have a complete monopoly any bonus which must be paid for by all the people of the United States, and the benefit, if there should be any benefit in the remission of such toll, could inure to only a few coast cities. I do not believe that a gift of free tolls will, so long as that monopoly exists, benefit anyone but the direct recipients of the Government's favor. But if it should operate in some slight reduction in the cost of freights, it would be infinitesimal and only to the seaboard cities. The great interior of the country which must pay the taxes that go into the pockets of the stockholders of these ships would secure no benefit whatever.

Much has been said, Mr. President, about our right to use this canal, particularly to lower the freight rates over our transcontinental roads, and it is assumed that unless we shall be able to give to our coastwise trade the benefit of free tolls we shall not be able to accomplish that very beneficent result. I can scarcely agree with that logic. We have given the coastwise-trade vessels of this country a monopoly of the trade from one port to another all along the United States borders. No other nation can take one pound of goods from one of our ports and land it in another. We now seek to give this monopoly created by our laws an advantage over those that are not monopolies. We are now prepared, according to this bill, to give to the cheaper transportation—transportation by water—a subsidy in effect as against the more expensive mode of transportation.

I doubt very much, Mr. President, that any reduction will follow. Why? First, because the coastwise freight from one ocean to the other by remitting the tolls would not be lessened a sufficient amount to make it felt anywhere in the interior of the country. Every section of this country is taxed to pay interest on that $400,000,000 of investment and several million dollars of expense. Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, and the Dakotas must pay their share according to the consumption or according to their wealth and population. What benefit will they secure to compensate them for paying out not only the interest upon this investment but also that which amounts to a subsidy in the remission of the canal tolls? The very most, I think, that could be claimed would be that the canal tolls might affect goods in transit from the shore inland, for a few miles, it may be from New York to Pittsburgh, probably from Seattle to Spokane, although I am very doubtful if Spokane or Pittsburgh would reap any benefit whatever, and all the territory lying between those sections is called upon to pay the expenses of the canal, with the interest upon our $400,000,000 of investment, and, in addition to that, the amount which would be equivalent to a remission of the tolls, without any benefit to be derived from it.

Now, will it lower the cost of transportation by inland rail? Let us see. I want to call the attention of Senators to this fact: Some few years ago we in the interior, west of the Mississippi, were receiving practically all our lumber from Washington and Oregon, brought there by rail, brought there almost as ballast, with just enough charge placed upon it to pay the running expenses of running the cars back filled instead of bringing them empty. We got the benefit of that meager freight charge. There is no doubt in my mind that when the canal is opened much of the trade in the western timber, for instance, can pass through the canal and reach New York by that route. New York, of course, may get the benefit, but whilst she is getting the benefit of free tolls we, on the other hand, by a well-known factor in determining freight rates, will lose. Freight rates are fixed according to the volume of business. They have always to be sufficiently high to pay the running expenses and make a little profit. If we decrease the volume of business of any of the great transcontinental roads, like cutting off, for instance, most of the lumber trade and the fruit and transporting them through the canal, I am not certain that we will not in the end pay more in the interior States for our freight than we would if we had no Panama Canal.

Mr. President, I do not doubt our right to grant a ship subsidy to any and all of our vessels. I do not doubt the right of this country to place the amount of that subsidy at any figure we see fit, and therefore I do not doubt the right to fix a bounty that will be about the equivalent of the tolls charged. I am not questioning our right to help out any of our shipping in a way that might possibly be equivalent to tolls, but I do deny that we have a right to rebate or refund the tolls on our own ships which we have agreed shall be equal to the tolls charged to other vessels.

We may provide for carrying coastwise or foreign mails over such routes as our judgment may direct, and we may give a subsidy for carrying those mails; but we may not by any kind of underhanded or indirect means violate an agreement to charge our coastwise or any other vessel the same tolls as we charge the vessels of Canada engaged in the coastwise trade or the vessels of any other country engaged in any trade. If we offset tolls by a subsidy it must be based upon such conditions as would justify the subsidy irrespective of tolls. Otherwise it would not be a good-faith transaction.

I believe also, Mr. President, that we of the interior are interested that the tolls should be the same for another reason, and that is that we may have honest and fair competition, that we may not increase the power of the coastwise vessels of this country to drive other vessels out of the market which might bring our products possibly in competition with them upon an equal basis.

Let me give one illustration, that of vessels from a Canadian port to our own. Seattle may be a port for coastwise trade for lumber designed for New York. Victoria may be another port which would be a competitor of that port for the New York trade. While I would not change our laws so that the Canadian vessel shall take a cargo from Seattle to New York, I would make it so that a Canadian vessel might take a cargo of lumber from Victoria to New York in competition with the American vessel.

Mr. BRADLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Crane	McCumber	Simmons
Bacon	Crawford	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Bailey	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Fall	Massey	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Gallinger	Myers	Smoot
Brandegee	Gronna	Overman	Swanson
Bristow	Heyburn	Page	Thornton
Burnham	Hitchcock	Paynter	Townsend
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Watson
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Poindexter	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Jones	Pomerene	Williams
Clapp	La Follette	Shively

Mr. WATSON. My colleague [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on account of personal illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD pages 27 to 41, inclusive, of Document No. 875, entitled "The Relation of the Panama Canal to the Traffic and Rates of American Railroads," by Emery R. Johnson, special commissioner on Panama traffic and tolls.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IV. TRANSCONTINENTAL RATES TO AND FROM INTERIOR POINTS: EFFECT OF WATER COMPETITION.

(A) RATES BY RAIL AND WATER TO AND FROM INTERIOR POINTS IN THE EAST AND WEST.

The steamship lines now engaged in the coast-to-coast business obtain a part of their freight from interior points in the Eastern States for shipment to the Pacific coast. The manifests of cargo show that a small tonnage is obtained from places as far west as Chicago and St. Louis, and also state that some of the west-bound freight shipped by water is destined to interior points in the western part of the United States. The great bulk of west-bound freight, however, originates at the eastern terminals of the water lines—at New York and points not far distant therefrom—and is destined to the Pacific-coast terminals and to places not far inland. The evidence secured by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Spokane and other cases led the commission to state that "The principal movement by water is from the Atlantic seaboard itself, from New York and from points having water communication with New York, and from interior territory immediately contiguous. There is a considerable movement as far inland as Buffalo and Pittsburgh, and an occasional movement from Detroit, Chicago, and similar points. A movement of starch from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, of considerable proportions was shown, but, generally speaking, up to the present time comparatively little traffic originating west of the Buffalo-Pittsburgh zone has reached the Pacific coast by water." (City of Spokane et al. v. Northern Pacific Railway Co. et al., 21 I. C. C. Reps., 420.) The present east-bound freight of the steamship lines, to a larger degree than is true of their west-bound tonnage, originates and terminates near the seaboard.

The competition of the intercoastal water lines with the railroads has benefited the sections near the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards more than the interior section, because for most shipments to and from interior points via a combined rail-and-water route the through rate is the sum of the rail rate to or from the coast and the rate by water from coast to coast. There are also transshipment or rehandling charges.

Table XIV, compiled by the division of tariffs of the Interstate Commerce Commission, contains a tabulation of the rail rates from Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Paul, and Omaha to New York on the same commodities as are listed in Table IX, in which the transcontinental coast-to-coast rates of the railroads and the water lines are quoted. Though the rail rates are not in direct proportion to distance, the charges between the interior points and the seaboard are greater the farther the inland place of origin or destination is from New York. For points west of the Pittsburgh-Buffalo zone the rail rates to New York soon become so high that most goods move directly to the Pacific coast by rail at rates which are usually the same from all places east of the Missouri River. On some commodities the rail rates to the Pacific are less from the Central West than from the Eastern States.

The addition of the rail rates from the interior to New York to the intercoastal—if always made in fixing through rates—would have prevented interior points beyond Pittsburgh and Buffalo from making as many shipments as have been made via the water lines between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Fortunately for the interior eastern shippers, the coastwise steamship lines sometimes absorb all or a part of the rail rates to and from the seaboard on west-bound shipments.

NOTE.—Rates from St. Louis and points east of Mississippi River governed by official classification; rates from Kansas City, St. Paul, and Omaha made on Mississippi River and Chicago combinations; proportions west of Chicago and Mississippi River governed by western classification.

The Panama Railroad Steamship Line, which makes the westbound rates applying over its line and Pacific coast connections, deals as follows with charges from interior eastern points. From its New York pier to Pacific coast points the following "minimum rates" apply:

	Per 100 pounds.
To East San Pedro, Cal	$0.50
To Los Angeles, Cal	.55
To Oakland, Cal	.50
To Portland, Oreg	.52½
To Sacramento, Cal	.55
To San Francisco, Cal	.50
To Stockton, Cal	.55
To all other Pacific coast ports	.60

The tariff then provides that, except in case of special rates from New York pier on rates which do not exceed the above minima, the water rates quoted "may apply from interior points, and when a rate is at least 20 cents higher than the minimum, the Panama Railroad Co. will assume the charges from shipping point to New York pier not exceeding 20 cents per 100 pounds, any excess over this absorption to be shown on bill of lading as 'advance charges' to be paid by shippers or consignees, as the case may be. When a freight rate is not at least 20 cents higher than the minimum the Panama Railroad Co. will assume the difference between the minimum and said rate." For example, Table 14 shows that the carload rate on harvesters and reapers, knocked down, from Philadelphia to New York is 10½ cents, which is absorbed by the steamship line, because the water rate on harvesters and reapers from New York pier is 88 cents, or more than 20 cents above the theoretical minimum charge of 50 cents on any commodity from New York to San Francisco. So also is the 18-cent rate from Pittsburgh absorbed; but the Cincinnati rate of 26 cents is absorbed only to the extent of 20 cents, the shipper or consignee being obliged to pay the excess. The 28-cent Indianapolis rate is absorbed only to the amount of 20 cents, and the same is true of the 30-cent Chicago rate, etc. When the water rate on the commodity in question does not exceed the theoretical minimum water rate by 20 cents the Panama Railroad Co. absorbs the rail rate only to the extent of the excess of the actual water rate over the minimum water rate, and if the actual rate is only equal to, or is less than, the minimum, the shipper or consignee is obliged to pay the entire rail charge from the inland point to New York.

The policy of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. is to "make its rates from the terminals." (G. S. Dearborn: Testimony Jan. 24, 1912, in hearings on Panama Canal by House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.) It does not absorb any of the rail rates to New York; but as the rates of this company are not published, it is probable that traffic of large shippers from interior points is solicited at such rates from New York to the Pacific coast as to allow the inland shippers to pay the rail charges to New York and yet enjoy a favorable through rail-and-water rate.

At the Pacific destination of west-bound traffic the Panama Line and connections absorb the rates to certain points not on the coast. The tariffs apply alike to the following points: San Francisco, Sacramento, Stockton, Oakland, Berkeley, Los Angeles, San Diego, Santa Barbara, San Pedro, Redondo, Vancouver, Portland, Astoria, Seattle, Tacoma, Port Townsend, Everett, Anacortes, New Whatcom, and Victoria.

As is shown above, different minima water rates prevail from the Atlantic seaboard to those points on or near the Pacific coast, but upon any particular commodity the same actual rates are quoted from New York to all the above-named Pacific destinations. The actual rate on any given article shipped from an interior point near the Atlantic via New York to any one of the Pacific destinations will depend both upon the amount of rail charge from the interior point to the Atlantic seaboard absorbed by the steamship lines and also upon the minimum water rate from New York to the Pacific destination. The minimum bill of lading for single shipments, likewise, varies from $2 to $2.75. The American-Hawaiian Line does not absorb the rail rates from the Pacific-coast terminals to any interior destinations.

Table XV states the rail rates, on the same list of articles as is included in the former tables of west-bound rates, from San Francisco to Sacramento, Stockton, Fresno, Reno, Salt Lake City, and Denver. Since no interior rates beyond Sacramento and Stockton are absorbed by any line, most of the traffic that reaches the west coast by water does not go far inland, although some freight is carried to points as distant as Reno, Nev.

Table XVI gives the rail rates from Seattle to Spokane and Walla Walla, Wash., and to Butte and Helena, Mont. The east-bound freight moved via combined rail-and-water from and to interior points in the West being relatively light, it has not been thought necessary to present a detailed compilation of rail rates between inland points and other Pacific seaboard terminals.

The Sunset-Gulf Line from New York to the Pacific coast takes traffic from interior eastern points via New York and New Orleans or Galveston at through rates equal to the all-rail rate from the interior eastern points to the Pacific coast. It thus absorbs the rail rate to New York in that the rate is paid out of the through charge. The Sunset-Gulf route, however, is to be classed with the transcontinental rail lines, and not with the intercoastal water lines, because its rates are the same as those by the all-rail carriers.

(B) EFFECT OF WATER COMPETITION ON RATES TO AND FROM INTERIOR POINTS.

Neither the trunk-line nor the transcontinental railways have favored the shipment of commodities from the Middle West to the Atlantic seaboard for carriage thence by water to the Pacific coast. The policy of the railways generally, under the leadership of the western lines, has been to hold to the all-rail lines the traffic to the Pacific coast, both from the Atlantic seaboard and from interior points.

The rivalry of the railways from the Central West to the Atlantic with those from the Central West to the Pacific, and the industrial competition of the Mississippi Valley with the Eastern States, which can ship to the Pacific coast by water lines, brought about the system of blanket rates for most of the traffic to the west coast from the entire section east of the Missouri. The competition of the rail and water lines at the Atlantic seaboard controlled transcontinental rail rates from the Eastern States, and the railroads and the industries of the Middle West insisted upon reaching the Pacific coast on equal terms with the railroads and industries of the eastern section. Upon some articles the rates from the Central West are lower than from the Atlantic seaboard, there being some grading downward of rates by successive lettered rate groups westward from the Atlantic coast.

The policy of the carriers interested in the transcontinental rail traffic from the East and from the Middle West and the influence upon rail rates exercised by the intercoastal water lines are concisely explained by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the decision in the Spokane case. The commission, speaking through Mr. Prouty, says:

"Carriers maintain the same transcontinental rate from Chicago as from New York, not by reason of the direct effect but rather as an indirect result of water competition. The reason for this will be best understood by an actual illustration. Assume that a building requiring the use of a large amount of structural steel is to be erected in San Francisco. That steel is manufactured both at the seaboard and in Chicago. That which is made at the seaboard can be taken by water from the point of origin to the point of destination, and the rate at which it can move is therefore determined by water competition.

"The cost of producing steel is the same at both points. In order, therefore, that the producers may stand an equal chance in competing for this business it is necessary that the rate from both points should be the same, and the business can not move from Chicago unless the rate from that point is as low as from the seaboard.

"The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway begins at Chicago. If this steel is bought at Chicago and moves by that line, the entire freight money is retained by it. If, upon the other hand, the steel is bought at New York, moved by some line to Chicago, and there delivered to the Santa Fe, that line receives only a part of the through charge. The service performed by it is the same in either case, but the amount of its compensation is larger when the freight originates at Chicago. It is therefore for the interest of that line to name a rate from Chicago which will originate the business at that point instead of allowing it to originate upon the seaboard. The interest of the line from New York to Chicago is that the business should be taken up at New York, and as a compromise it is finally agreed to apply the same rate from both these points. This clearly shows how water competition, if it does not actually extend to the interior point, may and does dictate the rate from that point.

"What would be true of the steel entering into the construction of this building is true also of almost every article of commerce which moves between the East and the West. The Middle West to-day manufactures nearly everything which is produced upon the Atlantic seaboard, and the effect of this policy of the railroads has been to make the Middle West the almost exclusive market of origin for the intermountain country and largely for the Pacific coast itself." (21 I. C. C. Reps., 422.)

The effect of water shipments upon the interior has, as Commissioner Prouty states, been indirect rather than direct. The tonnage of transcontinental traffic carried from the Mississippi Valley to the Atlantic seaboard for shipment thence by water to the west coast has been relatively small, but the actual or possible shipment of a relatively large volume of commodities by water from the Atlantic coast has controlled the rail rate from the Central West to the Pacific. Water competition has exercised less influence upon east-bound rail rates from the western section to the Middle West and the East; but even on east-bound traffic most rates are blanketed over the entire region east of the Missouri River. There is more grading by distance of east-bound than of west-bound rates; but the difference between the east-bound and west-bound transcontinental rate systems is one of degree, not of kind or of principle.

Such has been the past effect of intercoastal water transportation upon the rates of the transcontinental all-rail lines. There remains for consideration the influence that the Panama Canal may be expected to exercise upon the rates and rate policies of the transcontinental railroads.

V. PROBABLE ADJUSTMENT OF TRANSCONTINENTAL RAIL RATES RESULTING FROM CANAL COMPETITION.

The railroad-rate system that has been worked out by the transcontinental railroads is a complicated structure that has been evolved slowly. It is the resultant of the interaction of numerous forces, of the competition of rival sections, of rival industries, and of rival carriers. As these forces of competition change from time to time the rate system is modified in detail to keep transportation charges adjusted as closely as practicable to economic conditions. The opening of the Panama Canal will so greatly change the industrial relations of different sections of the United States and the competition of the transcontinental railroads and the intercoastal water lines as inevitably to require many changes in the present system of transcontinental rates.

Just what rate policies the railroads will adopt to meet the situation created by the Panama Canal can not be predicted in advance of experience. The railroad companies will solve the problems as they arise, and will cross no bridge until it is reached. It is possible, however, to indicate the rate problems which the canal will probably create and to point out the possible policies open to the railroads. Such an analysis of the probable effect of the canal upon transcontinental railroad rates may, moreover, enable the Panama tolls to be fixed with a clearer understanding of their effects.

1. The railroad rates most completely subject to the competition of the intercoastal lines using the canal will be those west bound to the Pacific coast from the section of the United States between the Buffalo-Pittsburgh district and the Atlantic seaboard. Even under present conditions the transcontinental rail rates between the two seaboards are largely affected by the competition of the routes via the Isthmuses of Panama and Tehuantepec, and it is estimated that one-half of the traffic carried from this eastern section of the United States to the Pacific coast now moves by the water routes. Is it probable that the railroads will endeavor to meet the rates of the intercoastal water lines with the view to holding to the all-rail routes the traffic between the two seaboards? It is hardly to be expected, for the following reasons, that the railroads will make a desperate effort to hold this traffic against the water lines:

In the first place, the tonnage involved constitutes, at the present time, a comparatively small percentage—only 20 to 22 per cent—of the total traffic carried to the Pacific coast by the transcontinental roads—those running from Chicago to the west coast. Only 35 per cent of the through business of these lines originates in this eastern section and in the Buffalo-Pittsburgh territory. In other words, more than two-thirds of the through traffic of the transcontinental lines now comes from the Central West.

In the second place, the system of blanketing rates from the Atlantic seaboard westward to the Missouri River—a system that will probably prevail—will carry through to the Missouri River any rate reductions which the railroad lines may make on traffic from coast to coast, and it is hardly to be expected that the railroads will reduce rates unnecessarily upon two-thirds to four-fifths of their traffic in order to compete more successfully for the remaining minor portion of their possible tonnage. It will be more profitable for the transcontinental rail lines to lose the major portion of their traffic from the Atlantic seaboard section in order to maintain paying rates on the west-bound traffic from the middle section of the United States.

In the third place, it is probable that the eastern trunk lines as well as the Pacific lines originating at Chicago and central western points will be opposed to the policy of reducing coast-to-coast all-rail rates to the lowest possible minimum in order to meet the competition of the water lines. It will be to the advantage of the eastern trunk lines to haul traffic from points within 500 miles of the Atlantic to the seaboard for shipment by water rather than to prorate with their western connections low, through all-rail rates from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

2. The transcontinental railroads may be expected to endeavor to hold as much as possible of the traffic from the eastern seaboard States to intermediate points in the Rocky Mountain States. The steamship lines through the canal, with the cooperation of the Pacific coast jobbers, will endeavor to supply the cities within a thousand miles of the Pacific coast with supplies handled by way of the canal and the Pacific gateways. Up to the present time the railroads interested in transcontinental traffic have adhered to the policy of charging higher rates to intermediate points in the mountain States than to Pacific coast terminals, and have thus assisted in maintaining the Pacific coast cities as the jobbing centers from which many of the supplies required by the mountain States are obtained.

After the canal is opened the railroads will be obliged to decide whether it is wiser to continue to favor the Pacific coast jobbing trade, or, by reduction of rates from the East to the intermountain cities, to cause those cities to secure their supplies directly from the East and not by way of the Pacific. While it is impossible to predict which of these two policies will be deemed wiser, it would seem a priori that the railroads will prefer to supply the intermountain States directly from the eastern sources of supply.

3. The principal eastern termini of the transcontinental railroads are St. Paul, Duluth, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Omaha, and these railroads are concerned, first of all, with the effect which the Panama Canal may have upon the west-bound rates from the central section of the country. The rates to the Pacific coast from Chicago and other points as far east as that city must, after the opening of the Panama Canal, meet the through rates by rail-and-water lines via Atlantic and Gulf ports. It is the expectation of the trunk lines that they will be able to divert to the Atlantic seaports transcontinental traffic originating at points as far west as Cleveland and Indianapolis. It will also probably be possible for the railroads to the Gulf to attract some west-bound transcontinental traffic to Gulf ports from points as far north as St. Louis. This indicates that the transcontinental lines must reckon with the canal route in making rates from the eastern and southern parts of the Mississippi Valley to the Pacific coast.

4. At the present time the transcontinental railroads have a relatively large and a highly profitable traffic from the Central West to intermediate points in the mountain States. The rates generally being the same from the Middle West as from the Atlantic seaboard to the States in the intermountain section of the far West, the manufacturers and other producers of the Middle West have secured most of the trade of the mountain States. Formerly traffic moved from the Atlantic seaboard around to the Pacific coast and from there inland to the intermountain States. Now it moves mainly by direct rail haul from the Middle West

With the opening of the Panama Canal an effort will doubtless be made by eastern producers to regain a greater or less portion of the trade of the intermountain States by shipping commodities at low rates through the canal to the Pacific coast for distribution thence through the intermountain States. The Pacific coast jobbers interested in this trade will be able to secure commodities either from eastern producers by way of the canal or from Middle West producers by way of the railroads. It has thus far been deemed profitable by the transcontinental lines to make through rates to the Pacific coast much lower than to intermediate points, and thus favor the jobbing trade of the Pacific coast. This policy has been justified by the fact that the low through rates were at least slightly profitable and that the distribution of traffic by rail from the Pacific coast through the mountains at high local rates was highly profitable. It seems probable that the Panama Canal will cause the through rates to the Pacific coast to be so low as to make it more profitable for the railroads to carry traffic from the Middle West directly to intermediate points than to haul it to the Pacific coast for subsequent distribution. This view has been expressed in the following words by the traffic manager of one of the transcontinental railroads:

"The railroads have maintained normal rates to these interior points and have resisted the natural demand for rates insuring direct movement of these commodities from eastern sources of supply, because they knew that they were carrying 85 per cent of the tonnage to Pacific coast terminals, and for that reason their revenue on eastern manufactured goods shipped from Seattle to Walla Walla, Spokane, etc., was not measured by the rate charged for that final movement of the traffic, and so far as the competition of water-borne commodities, including imported merchandise, was concerned, there was consolation in the fact that we were getting a comparatively high rate from Seattle to these interior points.

"But we should ask ourselves, What would have been the adjustment of rates to interior points in the absence of these compensating conditions? If the town of Walla Walla uses 10,000 kegs of nails per annum, it is the duty of the railroad traffic manager to make that business contribute as much as possible to the earnings of his railroad. Heretofore we have not worried when we saw these nails coming in from Portland or Seattle, for the reasons above stated, but when we stop carrying the original shipments to Seattle, and when the business from Portland begins to seek the open river route, then we will realize that we must make rates from the East which will insure the direct movement of these commodities to these interior points.

"As to the ability of the railroads to do this, I do not see how there can be any question so far as the territory east of the Cascade Mountains is concerned; they may be driven out of the Pacific coast business but they will stay in the business east of the Cascade Mountains, because they must stay in it so long as it represents any rate over and above the actual cost of the service when considered as additional traffic within the capacity of the railroad, and that is just exactly what it will be."

5. The probable effect of the canal upon east-bound transcontinental rail rates may be briefly considered, because much of the preceding analysis of the relation of the canal to west-bound rates is applicable to east-bound charges. The tonnage carried by rail from the Pacific coast through to the Atlantic section east of Pittsburgh and Buffalo is relatively light and consists in large part of perishable freight, of which green fruits constitute an important item. It is possible that the steamship lines through the canal will handle some of the green fruits from the west coast to the eastern markets, but in all probability the present methods of shipping and marketing fruit will prevail, and the traffic, in spite of somewhat higher rates, will continue to move mainly by rail. The principal markets for all the products of the west coast are in the Rocky Mountain section and the Mississippi Valley, and the transcontinental railroads will be concerned chiefly in maintaining east-bound rates from the west coast to those sections and will hardly decide to reduce rates on traffic destined to points throughout the eastern half of the United States in order to hold against the steamship lines a portion of the comparatively small tonnage which the railroads haul through from the Pacific to the Atlantic seaboard section.

6. The rates on fruits, barley, fish, lumber, and other west-coast products to the mountain States and to the Mississippi Valley are of prime importance to the transcontinental railroads. The traffic taken from the west coast by rail to the southern and eastern portions of the Mississippi Valley must be secured in competition with the combined water and rail routes by way of Panama and the Gulf or Atlantic ports, but for the major share of the east-bound traffic from the Pacific coast over the mountains the railroads will not be seriously affected by canal competition.

7. The traffic from the mines and ranches of the mountain States east bound to the Atlantic coast section comprises a comparatively small tonnage. The rail rates on wool and some other products will, after the opening of the canal, necessarily be influenced by the through rate by rail to the Pacific coast and on by steamship lines through the canal. It is not probable, however, that much traffic will move from points east of the Sierra Nevadas to the Pacific coast for transhipment east bound through the canal.

8. The principal markets for the productions of the Rocky Mountain States are in the Mississippi Valley. It will not be possible for the canal to divert from the railroads the traffic from the western mountain States to destinations west of Buffalo and Pittsburgh, nor will the canal have much effect upon the rates which the railroads may charge for this traffic.

9. The general effect of the canal will be to lower transcontinental railroad rates. If the foregoing analysis proves to be sound, it will be the policy of the railroads to allow a portion of the traffic that might be held to the rails to be shipped coastwise through the canal and to maintain rates upon the traffic which can readily be prevented from taking the canal route. It is probable that the railroads will adopt the general policy of surrendering without serious struggle the minor portion of their traffic in order to maintain profitable charges upon the major share of their tonnage. The immediate effect of the canal will be to lessen railroad profits; the ultimate effect may be the enhancement of the prosperity of the railroads. The canal will aid the industries and trade of the United States. Like other transportation facilities, it will create the need of other means of transportation; and, should the transcontinental railroads be obliged to face reduced profits for a period of years, they need have no serious apprehension as to their future prosperity. The railroads connecting the Mississippi Valley and the Pacific coast are among the most profitable lines in the United States. The country they serve is certain to have a large development during the next quarter century, a development that will unquestionably be appreciably aided by the Panama Canal.

VI. SUMMARY OF THE PROBABLE EFFECTS OF THE PANAMA CANAL UPON TRANSCONTINENTAL TRAFFIC AND RATES.

The probable influence of the Panama Canal upon the trade of the eastern and of the central sections of the United States with the western part of the country, and the anticipated effects of the canal upon the carriers interested in that trade may be broadly summarized as follows:

1. The Atlantic section of the United States will obtain a somewhat larger share of the trade of the Pacific coast and will secure more benefit from the cheap water route than will the Middle West.

2. The inroads upon the trade now possessed by the middle section of the country will, however, probably not be serious, because (a) the Middle West now has a firmly established hold upon the west-coast trade; (b) the Middle West producers, aided by their rail carriers to the Pacific coast, will probably be able to compete successfully with eastern producers not located in or near the Atlantic ports. The Middle West will lose a part but not all of the trade of the Pacific coast seaboard cities, but may be expected to hold nearly all of the trade of the cities in the intermountain States; (c) the trunk lines to the Atlantic seaboard will doubtless aid inland producers east and just west of the Alleghenies by making low through rates from places as far west as Cleveland and Indianapolis to the Pacific via the Atlantic ports and the canal. The rail lines to the Gulf likewise will draw trade from Memphis and St. Louis and possibly Kansas City to the Gulf for shipment through the canal to the Pacific coast; (d) the transcontinental rail lines running west from St. Paul, Chicago, St. Louis and the cities on the Missouri River may be expected to assist in building up the direct trade from the Mississippi and Missouri Valleys to the cities in the intermountain States, and thus to limit the entry of goods from the eastern part of the United States via the Pacific coast into the inland markets of the mountain States.

2. The intermountain States will probably secure lower freight rates for their trade with the eastern section of the country and with the Middle West. Instead of cutting deeply into the rates between the eastern part of the United States and the Pacific coast terminals, and thereby, under the ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Spokane and Reno cases, automatically depressing all rates to intermediate points, the railroads will more probably decide to maintain fairly remunerative through rates to the west coast, to suffer the major share of the coast-to-coast traffic to be supplied by eastern producers and to be carried through the canal, and to make only such reductions in the rates to and from the intermountain territory as may be required to cause that section to continue to trade mainly with the Middle West. The policy of the railroads will probably be to make it advantageous for the intermountain cities to trade less through Pacific-coast jobbers and more, without the intervention of middlemen, directly with the central and eastern sections of the country.

3. The canal will assist the Pacific Coast States in trading with the eastern and southern parts of the United States. Much trade not now possible will develop. The importance of the west-coast cities as jobbing centers may be lessened by the growth of direct trade between the intermountain States and the sections east of the mountains, but this loss will be more than compensated for by the growth of new trade.

4. The effects of the canal upon American trade and upon rail rates will not be much affected by the exemption of coastwise ships from the payment of Panama tolls. If the nonpayment of tolls were to reduce freight rates by the amount of the tolls, the freight rates—which will be from $6 to $20 a ton—might possibly be 60 cents a ton lower. That would be of some assistance to the Pacific-coast jobbers and large shippers, and would somewhat increase the advantage which the canal will give the East over the Middle West in trading with the west coast.

It is not probable, however, that the exemption of the payment of tolls will appreciably affect the rates charged by the regular steamship lines. The nonpayment or remission of tolls will chiefly aid the owners of the coastwise marine, and not the shippers. Most traffic will be handled by the regular lines, which will charge common rates fixed in conference; and competition, while not eliminated, will be so regulated as to enable the carriers to keep charges well above the lowest rates at which traffic can profitably be carried. Whether there be tolls or no tolls, the line steamship rates will not be based on cost of service, but will be such as the traffic will bear and increase.

Canal tolls, being a part of the cost of service, will not make line steamship rates higher, nor will the omission of tolls cause the freight rates to be lower. This is not true of the rates payable on bulk cargoes of traffic handled in individual vessels operated under charters. Charter rates are competitive, and the few large shippers who can use a chartered vessel will be benefited by being relieved of the payment of canal tolls. As is explained in Chapter XIII, it is probable that the payment of tolls by ships engaged in our coast-to-coast trade would affect neither the rates of the regular steamship lines nor the charges of the transcontinental railroads.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I deny that the people of the United States have known all the time or know now that our Government has no right to extend any privileges to our commerce which goes through this canal. Had the people of the United States thought that such would be the result, the canal would never have been constructed. They never would have been willing to expend $400,000,000 to build a canal for the joint use of all the nations of the earth in which they had no superior right.

I affirm as the first proposition that under the treaty now in force the Government of the United States has the right to give preference to its own commerce as well as its battleships.

In the second place, I affirm that if this be not true and if the treaty is to be given the strict construction contended for by those who oppose us, that the treaty is an absolute nullity, because by its terms we have endangered the very life of our own country.

In the third place, I affirm that the United States having become the owner of this territory, having become the sovereign therein, for which right they have paid, the United States having bought all the rights and property of the New Panama Canal Co., for which it has paid, not only the canal but the land which adjoins it is the absolute property of the United States, as much so as is Alaska, as much so as is the District of Columbia; and that any question which may arise in regard to these matters is not subject to arbitration, because it is a domestic question, and the United States never has submitted and never will submit the decision of a domestic question to any court of this earth.

In the fourth place, our only duty as to the nations of the world—aside from our own—is to give them perfect equality in the use of the canal, to preserve strict neutrality as between them in case of war and to charge them no more than just and equitable tolls.

In the fifth place, now that the United States has become the sovereign of the country through which the canal passes, our right to control it is purely a domestic right, and any question affecting the same is not the subject of arbitration by The Hague or any other tribunal, but must of right be settled by ourselves. That the changed conditions render the treaty voidable whatever may be its construction.

In order, Mr. President, to understand the exact position of all parties, I call attention to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which was adopted in 1850. I think that a comparison of that treaty with the present Hay-Pauncefote treaty, together with the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which as amended by the Senate was rejected by Great Britain, throws great light upon the construction of the existing treaty.

In the Clayton-Bulwer treaty it appears plainly, first, that neither the United States nor Great Britain proposed to build the canal, and, as stated to-day very forcefully by the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], it is very doubtful, to say the least, whether England would, under the Monroe doctrine, have a right to build an isthmian canal in this Hemisphere, but, be that as it may, neither one of these nations then contemplated the building of the canal.

The sole object of that treaty was to insure the safety of Great Britain and the United States as far as possible. Hence the agreement was made that if any persons or company, having authority from the local Governments through which the canal was to pass, undertook its construction, Great Britain and the United States would protect them from commencement to completion from unjust detention, confiscation, seizure, or violence.

The next provision was that the contracting parties would use their influence with the States through which the canal passed to induce such Governments to facilitate its construction.

Next, they would use their good offices to procure the establishment of two free ports—one at each end of the canal.

The next stipulation was that they would protect the canal when completed from interruption or unjust seizure and guarantee its neutrality, so that it "may forever be open and free and the capital invested therein secure."

Next, they reserved the right to withdraw the protection of both or either of the Governments if the persons or company undertaking the construction or management of the canal should adopt regulations for the traffic thereof contrary to the spirit or intention of the treaty by making unfair discrimination in favor of the commerce of either of the contracting parties or any others, or by imposing excessive exactions or unreasonable tolls upon the passengers or commerce of either.

In the sixth place the treaty provided that each of the contracting parties would enter into treaty stipulations with such of the Central American States as was deemed advisable to carry out their great design. What was that design? The construction and maintenance of the canal "as a ship communication between the two oceans for the benefit of mankind, on equal terms to all and of protecting the same" when completed.

They next agreed to invite every State in the world with which either or both of them were friendly to enter with them into this agreement, and, in the next place, it was provided that the parties owning or constructing the canal should impose no other charges or conditions of traffic than should be approved by Great Britain and the United States as just and equitable.

In the ninth place it was agreed that the vessels of the United States and Great Britain traversing the canal should in case of war between them be exempt from blockade.

Mind you, the canal was not to be built by either Government; it was not to be the property of the United States, and the canal being so constructed it was provided that in case of war between the two countries their vessels should be exempted from detention or capture by either of the belligerents, "and this provision shall extend to such a distance from the two ends of the said canal as may hereafter be found expedient." It was further provided that neither of the contracting parties would ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive jurisdiction over the canal, nor erect any fortifications commanding the same.

These were the conditions, none of which existed under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. Those conditions as between the two countries at that time were equitable. They did not agree to expend a single cent in the building of the canal; they simply agreed to protect those who did build it, and, in the event it was constructed, it was to be made a great waterway connecting the oceans for the benefit of all mankind, and neither country was to have any advantage over the other in case of war.

There was a consideration for that treaty. It was a common enterprise, for which both were equally liable and in which both were equally to share; the consideration was mutual. Under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, however, nothing was done, except that the old Panama Canal Co. made a futile effort to build a canal. That was the end of it.

What was the object of the new treaty? I have very serious doubt in view of the changed conditions, the United States building the canal herself with her own money, whether she did not have a right to do so, whether the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was abrogated or not, because under that treaty England as an independent nation had no right, in view of the Monroe doctrine, to construct the canal. She never had that right, and she has no such right to-day. Therefore she conceded nothing in agreeing to the new treaty. Under that treaty Great Britain expends nothing and incurs no responsibility. What is the responsibility of Great Britain under the present treaty? She does not even agree to stand by the United States, as she agreed to do under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as to the persons or company which should construct the canal. Her responsibility under the treaty of 1850 was to guarantee protection to the persons or company building the canal. This she does not undertake under the new treaty? Why? Because the United States did not ask her to do so, and did not desire her to do so. The United States felt that she was able to attend to her own business, take charge of her own property, and while constructing the canal to protect herself without assistance.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRADLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let me suggest at this point—I know the Senator from Kentucky will emphasize it during the course of his remarks—that the only agreement or obligation entered into by Great Britain in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was the agreement that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty might be abrogated and the new treaty should supersede it. That is the only promise or obligation contained in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty so far as Great Britain is concerned.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the Senator for his suggestion, and quite agree with him in what he has said.

As I have said, Great Britain has not furnished a dollar to build the Panama Canal. It is a matter entirely in the hands of the United States; but now when the canal has been about completed we are told that Great Britain objects to the United States managing her own canal, which she has built and paid for with her own money, and objects to us giving our vessels any preference. Great Britain desires to be put on the ground floor with us. She desires to get the benefits of the canal without paying for them. She is like an old man of whom I once heard. He imagined that he was a philanthropist, and he provided in his will that upon his death his herd of cattle should be slaughtered and the product sold to the highest bidder, but, considering his wonderful sympathy for the poor, he provided that the horns, hoofs, and tails should be divided equally among the poor. [Laughter.] That is a fair illustration of the liberality of Great Britain, which come here after we have built the canal and asks us now to allow that country every privilege which we have ourselves.

Now, Mr. President, let us come to the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty. It becomes necessary to look at what occurred in connection with that treaty in order to find what is meant by the last Hay-Pauncefote treaty, because when we examine the two treaties we will find they are essentially different. The distinguished Senator who just took his seat referred to the provision which was attempted to be placed in the treaty giving the United States the right to regulate the traffic, tolls, and so forth, on the canal. That provision was offered to the first but not to the second treaty. It is true it was defeated, but it was defeated because it was thought that there was no necessity for it. In the first treaty the United States was given the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal. Now, mark you, in the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty both countries adopted the rules which should govern the canal, and the same rules which were applicable to the Suez Canal. It is said there is some contradition between the provision adopting those rules and the right that was given to the United States exclusively to manage and regulate the canal, but I will not take the time to discuss that, because it is not necessary to this argument. In the first treaty there was inserted by the Senate a very important provision by reason of which it is claimed Great Britain refused to ratify the treaty. That provision was:

It is agreed, however, that none of the immediately foregoing conditions and stipulations in sections Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this article—

Those were the sections regulating tolls, the ingress and egress of vessels, neutrality, and so on—shall apply to measures which the United States may find it necessary to take for securing by its own forces the defense of the United States and the maintenance of public order.

That amendment was adopted by the Senate of the United States, and by reason of its adoption Great Britain refused, as I have said, to ratify the treaty. Some provision similar to it was probably offered in the discussion of the second Hay-Pauncefote treaty, the one which was finally ratified, and I want to show you, Mr. President and Senators, that this provision which was apparently necessary in the first treaty was not necessary in the present treaty, because of the material change in the language of the two treaties.

Under the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty it was provided that no fortifications should be erected commanding the canal. I call your attention to the fact that under the present treaty that provision is eliminated, so that under the present treaty the United States is not prohibited from building fortifications. As showing that Great Britain is of that opinion it is sufficient to say that notwithstanding an appropriation has been made to erect fortifications and that fortifications are now actually being constructed, Great Britain has never protested against such action, and all she protests against is as to any advantage that may be given to the commerce of the United States. The omission of this very important provision of the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty from the second Hay-Pauncefote treaty goes a long way to show that I am right in my contention.

Let us see why the provision referred to was omitted from it. In the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty, although the United States was to be allowed to build the canal, under article 2 Great Britain and the United States jointly adopted seven rules concerning the operation of the canal; in other words, the two countries made a solemn agreement between themselves as to what rules should govern the canal.

In the present treaty Great Britain does not participate in the adoption of the rules for the administration of the canal; but the United States alone adopts the rules, showing that it was clearly considered between the two countries that the United States, being the builder of the canal, was conceded the right to prescribe the rules, and that Great Britain had nothing to do with the matter. As to the enforcement of the rules, Great Britain is not to-day bound under any of the terms of the treaty. In the last instance the concession to Great Britain allowing her participation was merely a matter of gratuity on the part of the United States in carrying out the original intention that the canal should be neutral.

What is meant by neutrality except that the canal shall be neutral territory as to all nations of the earth except the United States? If Great Britain and Japan should go to war, then the United States could prohibit either of them taking advantage of the canal in any way. She could prohibit any nation on earth from doing so as against a belligerent; but at the same time she does not estop herself from the right of self-protection. By failing to insist on a provision allowing her participation in the making of rules for the canal Great Britain conceded that the United States alone had the right to make the rules. The United States alone having adopted the rules, it could not be considered for a moment that she included herself in the term "all other nations." It is perfectly plain that she did not include herself, and that the rules which were adopted by her for the nations at large do not apply to her, because there is nothing to indicate anything of the kind.

You will find that there is another change in the last treaty. In the first treaty there was nothing specifically binding on the United States or any other country as to tolls. Now, bearing in mind that the Government of the United States is the owner and the proprietor of the Panama Canal, and that she was to build it, a provision was inserted in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that the United States will not collect unjust or unreasonable tolls. That was not in the first treaty, because in the first treaty it was provided that the traffic should be open and equal to the world; but now that the position of the United States is fully understood and admitted, she agrees, so far as tolls are concerned as to the commerce of other nations, they shall be just and equitable.

Mr. President, I call attention to the further fact that in the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty, while the United States was given the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal, its control was subject to the rules then adopted by both countries. In the present treaty the United States is given exclusive right, without any agreement as to rules provided or to be promulgated by the two contracting parties, but with the sole provision that there shall be entire equality of treatment for all nations and that the charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

I refer to these matters to show what view Great Britain and the United States took, at the time the treaty was written, of the provision as to tolls. It is a mere concession by the United States, which stands as the mistress of the situation. In view of these changes, the exception added to the first treaty was omitted and was no longer necessary, for the United States reserved the right of self-protection in case of war.

It is perfectly plain that Great Britain recognized the justice of this change. It can not be contended that her diplomats were ignorant of changed conditions. So the agreement was made that the United States was to have exclusive right to provide for the regulation and management of the canal. Stripped of former conditions, the United States had, first, the right to direct, order, rule, and govern, because all those terms are synonymous with the term used, which is to "regulate." She had the right to direct, govern, control, order, and conduct, for each of those words is synonymous with the word "manage," and those two words "manage" and "regulate" are the words employed in the present treaty as showing the absolute right of the United States.

I must be pardoned for being a little tiresome when I call attention again to the fact that under the rules jointly agreed to between the two countries in the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty they were to govern the canal. In every contract there must be two parties, and those two parties must agree on something. This treaty is nothing in one sense of the word but a contract—a contract between nations—and, so far as the present rules are concerned, Great Britain does not even agree that they shall be adopted, but the United States, on her own motion, adopts the rules and makes them the basis of operating the canal.

What is the expressed reason for this treaty? In the present treaty the expressed reason is that the parties are desirous of facilitating the construction of the canal without impairing the general principle of neutralization established in article 8 of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. What is meant by "neutralization"? That the United States, having now become the controller of the situation, guarantees neutrality, so far as she is concerned, between and among all the nations of the earth, always reserving her own right of self-protection.

As I said a moment ago, in the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty it was provided that no fortifications should be erected. That was eliminated from the present treaty. Following the adoption, as I said, of the present treaty, we commenced building fortifications, and against that action there has been no protest. The acquiescence of England by her silence in the construction of fortifications for the defense of the canal speaks eloquently and forcefully as to her opinion of the rights of the United States. If she thought the United States had no right under the treaty to do it, she would have protested against it long ago; but her diplomats know that under the changed conditions the United States has such a right.

Now, let us look at this treaty and give to it the construction that is given by Senators who argue on the other side of this question. If they are right, these conditions apply alike to all nations; in other words, that the Government of the United States is bound by each and all the conditions—not bound in part, not bound partially as to one condition in one respect and released in the other; but, if we take this ironclad construction, the United States is distinctly bound by all these rules.

It has been said that honor requires that we shall accede to the views of Great Britain. No Member of the Senate holds in higher estimation the honor of his country than do I, and I will add that no Member of the Senate holds higher in estimation the protection and life of his own country than do I; but I affirm that no nation is bound, in honor or otherwise, to destroy herself by any treaty, even if the construction contended for by those who do not agree with me is correct.

The first proposition, if we are to adopt the construction contended for, is that—

> The canal shall be free and open to the vesels of commerce and of war of all nations—

Including the United States—

> observing these rules, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any such nation, or its citizens or subjects, in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

It we are bound by that, we have no right in case of war to give ourselves any advantage. But that is not the worst part of this treaty by which it is said we are bound. Let us go a little further:

> The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

What does this mean? We must take it at its face value, for we are told that we are governed by this instrument as by bands of iron. What does it mean? That the canal shall never be blockaded, though it may be necessary for us to blockade it for our own self-defense. No right of war shall be exercised. We have no right to take a battleship through that canal in case of war against us in order to protect ourselves, nor have we any right to prevent a battleship from passing through the canal to attack us; nor have we any right to unload munitions of war in the Canal Zone. We can not embark or disembark troops if we should become involved in war with another nation. We can not stop a moment in the canal, except in case of an accidental hindrance of transit, and then the vessel must resume its voyage with the utmost dispatch. What else? The provisions of this article shall apply to whom? It applies to all belligerents. It applies to us as well as everybody else. No vessel shall remain within 3 marine miles of the canal longer than 24 hours. We can not allow our own battleships to remain in these waters longer than 24 hours. What else?

> Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not remain in such waters longer than 24 hours at any one time, except in case of distress, and in such case shall depart as soon as possible; but a vessel of war of one belligerent shall not depart within 24 hours from the departure of a vessel of war of the other belligerent.

If we were involved in war to-morrow, this canal completed, and our ships were there for the purpose of protecting us from the invasion of a foreign foe, and some ship of such a foe should come within 3 marine miles of the canal, we would have to wait 24 hours before we could pursue it. In other words, we would be compelled to allow it to escape, although it intended to inflict or had inflicted injury on our commerce or our possessions, because we must stand still 24 hours. O Senators, Senators, what a ridiculous construction! What a comment upon our manhood and intelligence that we have given away our birthright, our freedom, and our safety for less than a mess of pottage, and that we must go hat in hand to Great Britain and on bended knee and ask her to agree that we may attend to our own business under our own flag.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky why it was necessary for the treaty to especially provide for the policing of the canal.

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not think it was necessary at all. I think we had the right without it.

Mr. POMERENE. If we had the right to blockade it without a provision in the treaty, certainly we had the right to police it, I should think.

Mr. BRADLEY. You misapprehend my proposition. I say the proposition about blockading has nothing at all to do with us. It applies to foreign nations and does not apply to us.

Mr. POMERENE. Assuming that to be so, I still do not understand why these great international lawyers should be so specific when it comes to the matter of policing of a property which belongs to us, according to the theory upon which the Senator is proceeding. I frankly confess that I am disturbed by this matter.

Mr. BRADLEY. I beg to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Great Britain has nothing to do with that. Great Britain does not provide that we shall police this strip. We ourselves provide that certain rules shall govern, and Great Britain has nothing to do with it. She guarantees nothing.

Mr. POMERENE. But this is a pact made between the two high contracting parties.

Mr. BRADLEY. That is right, and without any consideration as to one of them.

Mr. POMERENE. One of the things especially stipulated for is our right to police our property.

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me?

Mr. BRADLEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The treaty also provides for the possibility of the canal being constructed by somebody else aside from the United States, and under those conditions it might be necessary to police it or do something of that kind. So various constructions have been put upon or reasons given for this particular provision.

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not blame the Senator from Ohio for saying he is disturbed about this matter. We all are disturbed about it, because, if the construction is to be given this treaty contended for by certain Senators upon this floor, we have bound ourselves hand and foot and delivered ourselves into the hands of any nation that sees fit to go to war with us.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to suggest to the Senator that at the time the treaty was made it was not contemplated that the United States would be a sovereign over the land, but it did happen and circumstances did occur under which this country has become the absolute sovereign over that strip of land; and perhaps that was the reason the policing power was mentioned in the treaty.

Mr. POMERENE. But, Mr. President, article 4 of this treaty——

Mr. BRADLEY. I am coming to that in a moment, if the Senator will not anticipate me.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well. I appreciate the force of the Senator's argument upon the question as to what the treaty ought to be, but the question before the Senate now is, What is the treaty?

Mr. BRADLEY. That is the very question I have been discussing. I am not discussing what it ought to be. I am discussing what it is. As I say, every condition in the treaty was put there on our own motion and is not agreed to or disagreed to by Great Britain, and it simply shows the kindness and generosity of the United States as to other nations and not that the United States intended to rob or destroy herself. We can not, we dare not, look our people in the face and tell them that we have expended $400,000,000 to build a canal in order to enable the nations of the earth to invade our own territory, to reach us that much easier and destroy our commerce. It never was the intention of the United States and it never was the intention of this treaty to do anything of that sort, but, as I said in the beginning, if you are going to give this construction as contended for by gentlemen who are on the other side of the question, if you are going to say that under these rules we have crippled ourselves and destroyed our right of self-defense, then I affirm that under the law of nations the treaty is an absolute nullity. I read from Vattel's Law of Nations, section 160, page 194:

> Since, in the formation of every treaty, the contracting parties must be vested with sufficient powers for the purpose, a treaty pernicious to the State is null, and not at all obligatory, as no conductor of a nation has the power to enter into engagements to do such things as are capable of destroying the State, for whose safety the Government is intrusted to him. The nation itself, being necessarily obliged to perform everything required for its preservation and safety (book 1, section 16, etc.) can not enter into engagements contrary to its indispensable obligations.

So I say that if the construction is to be given this treaty which is contended for, it is a nullity, because those who represent us had no right to bind our Nation to anything of the kind.

The rules adopted by the United States in the treaty apply to nations other than the United States who are at war, and under its terms the United States will maintain neutrality as between them, treating them exactly alike, and in addition will treat all alike as to tolls, charging no toll that is unjust or inequitable.

It is all right to say that under this treaty no nation engaged in war with another shall commit an act of war in our canal or embark or disembark troops or munitions of war therein except in case of accident, as provided. It is all proper to compel their vessels of war to effect their transit through the canal with the least possible delay. It is all right to prohibit vessels of foreign nations engaged in war from remaining within 3 marine miles of either end of the canal for more than 24 hours. And, finally, it is all proper for the United States to agree that there shall be no discrimination in favor of one foreign nation against another and that the tolls shall be just and equitable; but it is the height of absurdity and most shameful injustice to apply these rules to our own Government.

Now, which construction of this treaty will we adopt? Will we adopt this ironclad construction which would render the treaty a nullity under the law, even if it should be correct, or will we adopt the construction which is in harmony with the law as well as all the surrounding circumstances and every principle of justice and reason as well?

I come now to the last proposition that is involved in article 4, concerning which the Senator from Ohio inquired. I was impressed the other day with the position taken by the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], that under conditions as they now exist the management of this canal has become a purely domestic question. Now, let us see if that is correct. But before doing so, let us consider article 4, which it is said prevents a construction of that character. In article 4 it is said:

It is agreed that no change of territorial sovereignty or of international relations of the country or countries traversed by the before-mentioned canal shall affect the general principle of neutralization or the obligation of the high contracting parties under the present treaty.

I have already shown that Great Britain did not agree specifically nor bind herself to the rules adopted by the United States. Article 4, with its broadest interpretation, has no effect on the present situation. What was meant by it? As we all know, revolutions were common in Central and South America at that time. It was not known how long after this treaty was formed this strip of land, which then belonged to Colombia, would be its property.

Now, the only object of this article of the treaty was that if either of the countries through which the canal was to run, Nicaragua or Colombia, with which we had made this contract, should be taken possession of by another State, the change of sovereignty should not be held to destroy our right to the canal which we had built, and that we were still entitled to exercise all our rights. Otherwise it may be well questioned whether the United States would have been willing to expend her money. About the only thing Great Britain agrees to in this treaty that amounts to anything is that the United States, whatever may be the change of sovereignty of the canal in the country through which the canal is to be constructed, through revolution or otherwise, should have the right to protect and use its canal. It does not mean that the United States shall not buy adjacent territory, because the canal itself is the property of the United States. It does not mean that the United States shall not acquire sovereignty of the country through which the canal runs or become the absolute owner thereof. But it does mean, if any other nation overcomes the nation which has given to the United States the right to construct the canal, Great Britain will stand by the United States in protecting the rights she acquired from the nation she dealt with, despite the fact that another nation has become sovereign.

What is the condition of the Panama Canal to-day? Let me read so much of the language of the treaty with Panama as I think is necessary to this discussion.

The Republic of Panama grants to the United States all the rights, power, and authority within the zone mentioned and described * * * which the United States would possess and exercise if it were the sovereign of the territory * * * to the entire exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama or any such sovereign rights, power, or authority.

Now, the United States is the sovereign in Panama, having paid $10,000,000 therefor; just as much the sovereign there as she is in the District of Columbia. Suppose a question would arise here about something that was to be done in the District of Columbia? What Senator would be bold enough to contend that we should arbitrate that matter at The Hague tribunal? What has The Hague tribunal to do with our domestic affairs? This is an affair of our own. It is a right which we possess under these treaties and under the laws of our country, and it is a right that we propose to exercise, and not to ask any nation for its consent; nor do I believe there will be any trouble growing out of our actions. England is too wise and, in my opinion, too just to raise any disturbance without the slightest reason to sustain her contention. I am satisfied that this whole controversy will be adjusted at last by a proper diplomacy and not by turning ourselves over to The Hague tribunal, to a court necessarily constituted of the certain nations of the earth, which nations have an interest directly opposed to ours, and in which we could not have the slightest hope for justice.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that the treaty which was defeated here a few months ago by a very narrow margin proposed to endow an international commission with authority to pass upon questions of a justiciable character. That treaty would have deprived the Senate of original jurisdiction in the question referred to by the Senator from Kentucky, and the Senate very appropriately withheld its consent on the ground that a question which was purely national could be best considered by an American tribunal, without the assistance of foreigners unfamiliar with our domestic concerns.

The rule of national independence advanced by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky must never be lightly ignored.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the distinguished Senator for his observation. As to what effect this change of sovereignty in Panama has, I call attention of the Senate, first, to page 357 of Hall, the greatest English authority on international law:

The principle which has been mentioned as being a sufficient test of the existence of obligatory force or of the voidability of a treaty at a given moment may be stated as follows: Neither party to a contract can make its binding effect dependent at will upon conditions other than those contemplated at the moment when the contract was entered into, and on the other hand a contract ceases to be binding so soon as anything which forms an implied condition of its obligatory force at the time of its conclusion is essentially altered. If this be true, and it will scarcely be contradicted, it is only necessary to determine under what implied conditions an international agreement is made. When these are found, the reasons for which a treaty may be denounced or disregarded will also be found.

In a recent work in our own country—the most recent that has been published—by our own gifted and forcible law writer, Hannis Taylor, on the subject of international law, this rule is announced (page 400):

After the validity of an international agreement has been firmly established by the concurrence of such antecedents, it may become voidable through the operation of subsequent events, which might not have such an effect in the case of private contract. So unstable are conditions of international existence and so difficult is it to enforce a contract between States after the state of facts upon which it was formed has substantially changed, that all such agreements are necessarily made subject to the general understanding that they cease to be obligatory as soon as the conditions upon which they were executed are essentially altered.

Now, I ask, suppose at the date this treaty was negotiated the Government of the United States had paid for and become the owner of this Canal Zone, had paid the former company for all of its rights, and was absolute monarch of all it surveyed, would our country have ever entered into a treaty with Great Britain to give us the right to manage our own domestic affairs?

If article 4 of the treaty has the effect contended for by our opponents, then it follows that the Senate of the United States has the right, as the treaty-making power, to dispense with and surrender the sovereignty of a part of this country. It can not do it. The sovereignty of any part of this country can in the most extreme case, if at all, be surrendered alone by the action of the Executive and Congress, not by the President and one House of Congress; and if such was the intention, then the treaty is absolutely void, because the agreement is without authority of law. By such a construction we would give the treaty-making power the right to transfer and surrender a sovereignty which our Government did not possess; in other words, to convey something we did not own.

The United States is the only country on the globe that had the courage, the manhood, and the genius to build this canal. It undertook and has well nigh completed it. It is our canal, paid for with our money, constructed by our energy and enterprise, and the people of the United States will never consent that the government of that canal shall be given to foreign countries.

We seek no trouble. Neither do we retreat from it. We only propose to protect our own territory and our own rights. This country has never failed to protect both. Our fathers did not fail and their sons will not fail. The spirit of American liberty and American manhood exists to-day as it existed in seventy-six, in 1812, and during the War with Spain. That spirit has lived through all these years and will continue to live as long as our Government shall stand. And by that spirit, coupled with the intelligence and sense of justice of our own people, shall this and all other questions of a similar character affecting the well-being of this country be decided. The United States has never submitted and will never submit to any other nation or court of arbitration any question affecting the authority to govern itself or to control its domestic institutions.

Mr. CLAPP. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of this bill to the fact that some time ago we reported a bill to fix liability under bills of lading. It is a very important measure, and I should like to get it before the Senate, if there is no one else to speak on the Panama bill this afternoon.

Mr. MASSEY. Mr. President, I had intended this afternoon to occupy some of the time of the Senate in discussing the Panama Canal bill, but I will waive——

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. MASSEY. But I will waive that and yield to the proposition suggested by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not want the unfinished business to be laid aside so long as any Senator desired to speak upon it.

Mr. CLAPP. I would not ask for it, and in view of the statement of the Senator from Nevada I withdraw my suggestion. I thought if no one was ready to proceed on the pending bill we might take up the other bill.

Mr. MASSEY. Mr. President, the importance of the questions involved in the passage of the act now pending before the Senate and reported by the Senator from Connecticut is the only justification or excuse I have for consuming at this late hour any of the time of the Senate in discussing this measure and these amendments.

Not only is it important to our shipping and the prosperity of our commercial enterprises, but the bill before the Senate involves the question of the good faith of the American Nation in so far as it may contract respecting its relations and its properties and its rights under the Constitution and the laws of the Government.

I propose, Senators, if possible—and I believe it is possible under well-established rules of legal construction, rules founded upon justice, approved by the judgment of the Anglo-Saxon race in the administration of equity—to eliminate, so far as this bill is concerned, absolutely and unqualifiedly the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. In other words, I propose to address myself to the proposition that, so far as American rights are concerned, so far as American interests are involved, and in so far as the Congress of the United States, with the approval of the Executive, is concerned, the Panama Canal as nearly constructed is not within the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and is not governed thereby, and that Congress has absolute power for the purpose of legislating not only in a discriminating way in favor of American shipping and in favor of American interests of all kinds, but, in so far as it may desire, to regulate the tolls of other nations, without regard to any of the terms or conditions of the treaty which has been so ably discussed by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY].

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to one or two propositions of interpretation and construction that, to my mind, are conclusive and relieve this question of any international importance so far as this legislation is concerned.

A treaty, as was well said by the Senator from Kentucky, is a mere compact between nations concerning matters over which the respective sovereignties to such treaties have power to contract; and when those treaties are made they stand at the bar of the civilized world as the rights of individuals stand, where construction and interpretation are necessary; and they must be controlled by the same rules of construction, upon just and equitable grounds, as the rights of individuals, and must be determined in so far as rights under a contract may be extended or limited.

I shall assume, Senators, in the discussion of this question that this treaty is not certain and definite in its terms. I think I have a right to say at this time, justified by the diversity of opinion expressed by distinguished Senators on this floor, that the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, in the language found therein, by which we would be controlled, are not so certain and so definite as that we may not resort to contemporaneous history, to the subject matter that the contracting parties had under consideration for the purpose of determining whether or not the provisions of that treaty are sufficient to extend over and cover the rights of America in the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Panama Canal at the present time.

In doing this I intend to call upon English authority. I intend to rest my conclusion and my contention, to rest the basis of my vote, on the attitude of the Government of Great Britain and upon the statement that emanated from her foreign office when the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was under consideration and before its adoption by either of the two great signatory powers.

I intend to occupy but a few minutes in the discussion of this matter. I call Senators' attention to a letter, and read therefrom, which emanated from the British foreign office on the 22d day of February, 1901. It is a letter of instruction to the ambassador to this country with respect to the very treaty which is now under consideration and involved in the bill that is before the Senate. It shows that England, one of the great powers, did not contemplate, never considered, and had no such thought in her mind, that the treaty which was then being negotiated would ever be extended to the Panama Canal as subsequently acquired by negotiations from the Government of Panama and as constructed by this Nation subsequent to the execution of that treaty and under the obligations by which we contracted with Panama. That in every consideration of that matter she was guided exclusively by the idea that the canal to be constructed under the provisions of the treaty was to be constructed by the American Government or by private parties under authority of the American Government upon soil that was entirely foreign and not upon territory belonging to herself.

Let me read now to show that not only does this treaty not apply, but there is, to my mind, absolutely no question that could be submitted to The Hague conference, because no controversy could arise about that which was never contemplated by the parties to the treaty at the time of its execution in 1901.

On the 22d day of February, 1901, the British foreign office, in instructing their ambassador to this country and in discussing a proposition involved as to the right of this Nation to fortify any canal that should be constructed under the then contemplated treaty, objected seriously to a provision to be incorporated into that treaty, and in discussing this matter the following language was used:

> The other two amendments present more formidable difficulties. The first of them, which reserves to the United States—

Note the language—

> the right of taking any measures which it may find necessary to secure by its own forces the defense of the United States, appears to His Majesty's Government to involve a distinct departure from the principle which has until now found acceptance with both Governments—the principle, namely, that in time of war as well as in time of peace the passage of the canal is to remain free and unimpeded and is to be so maintained by the power or powers responsible for its control.
> Were this amendment added to the convention, the United States would, it is presumed, be within their rights, if at any moment when it seemed to them that their safety required it, in view of warlike preparations not yet commenced but contemplated or supposed to be contemplated by another power, they resorted to warlike acts in or near the canal—acts clearly inconsistent with the neutral character which it has always been sought to give it, and which would deny the free use of it to the commerce and navies of the world.

And what was the English foreign officer at that time discussing? I call the attention of Senators to the rule I stated a moment ago, that in the construction of treaties we have a right to consider facts as they existed and about which the contracting parties were stipulating at that time. The Senate knows that the Panama Canal as constructed now was not dreamed of in this country, so far as legislative action was concerned; that the rights to the construction of the Panama Canal at that time were in the possession of a French company, though not engaged at that time in the actual construction of the canal. The Senate knows and must know that at that time the only matter under consideration by the American people or the American Congress was the construction of a canal on the Nicaraguan route, for which concessions had been obtained and upon which rights were fixed as to the ultimate route determined upon and the route upon which it was to be actually constructed either by corporations or individuals or by the Government itself. The English Government at that time was protesting against what? It was protesting against an amendment to the treaty for the construction of the canal upon foreign soil, under a grant that gave to the United States a mere easement, a mere right of way for its construction and maintenance, which would have been contrary and violative of the rights guaranteed by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and which to a certain extent, as Senators know, involved the then existing rights of Great Britain.

Now, note the argument of his excellency as to why, and you will see the gist of my contention as to why an amendment of that kind was not to be permitted to go into the treaty then under contemplation by these two great powers:

It appears from the report of the Senate committee that the proposed addition to article 2 was adopted from article 10 of the Suez Canal convention, which runs as follows:

"Similarly, the provisions of articles 4, 5, 7, and 8 shall not interfere with the measures which His Majesty the Sultan and His Highness the Khedive, in the name of His Imperial Majesty, and within the limits of the firmans granted, might find it necessary to take for securing by their own forces the defense of Egypt and the maintenance of public order."

The English foreign office, calling attention to the asserted rights under the American treaty by amendment providing for defense, similar to that guaranteed under the treaty by which the Suez Canal was constructed, said:

In case—

Still quoting—

In case His Imperial Majesty the Sultan or His Highness the Khedive should find it necessary to avail themselves of the exceptions for which this article provides, the signatory powers of the declaration of London shall be notified thereof by the Imperial Ottoman Government.

It is likewise understood that the provisions of the four articles aforesaid shall in no case occasion any obstacle to the measures which the Imperial Ottoman Government may think it necessary to take in order to insure by its own forces the defense of its other possessions situated on the eastern coast of the Red Sea.

Now, we have the milk in the cocoanut, when His Excellency called attention to the very provision I have been discussing with respect to the sovereignty of the United States and the sovereignty of the Sultan and the Egyptian ruler over the territory in which the Suez Canal was constructed.

It is—

Says the foreign office—

I understand, contended in support of the Senate amendment that the existence of the above provisions in the Suez Canal convention justifies the demand now made for the insertion of analogous provisions in regard to the proposed Nicaragua Canal.

But the analogy which it has been attempted to set up fails in one essential particular. The banks of the Suez Canal are within the dominions of a territorial sovereign, who was a party to the convention, and whose established interests it was necessary to protect, whereas the Nicaragua Canal will be constructed in territory belonging not to the United States, but to Central American States, of whose sovereign rights other powers can not claim to dispose.

Moreover, it seems to have escaped attention that article 10 of the Suez Canal convention receives most important modification from article 11, which lays down that "the measures which shall be taken in the cases provided for by articles 9 and 10 of the present treaty shall not interfere with the free use of the canal."

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this treaty was made by the British Government. It was signed by the high officers of the British Crown in contemplation of the construction of a canal by the Nicaragua route, upon foreign territory, and under conditions of sovereignty as to which neither Great Britain nor the United States could dispose of. She therefore objected to an amendment which gave to the Government of the United States the right of defense, and it was never considered or never thought of or dreamed of; and, as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, the American people would never have tolerated the idea that upon American territory this Government, through any officer, would surrender the right of self-defense in time of war. They were not negotiating with respect to that. It was never contemplated; it was never thought of; it was never dreamed of.

My contention is that this treaty stipulation can not be extended to matters that were not contemplated by the parties to that treaty at the time it was authorized and at the time of its ratification by the two great signatory powers, and that in the construction of that treaty we have a right to look and must look to the conditions as they existed at that time, as we have a right to determine and must determine the ambiguous and uncertain terms therein; but we must interpret the treaty in the light of those facts and construe and interpret that treaty as Great Britain intended it should be interpreted when she placed the restrictions upon the authority of the ambassador to this country with respect to such limitations, basing that limitation as to matters of defense and war upon the idea that the canal, about which this particular agreement was being made, was not to be constructed upon American soil or soil thereafter acquired which might be American, but upon foreign soil, over which neither of the signatory powers possessed jurisdiction and which they could not dispose of by treaty.

And here, Senators, let me ask three or four questions just suggested by the unilateral character of a contract of this kind. As it is sought to be applied to the legislation now pending before the Senate it is absolutely one-sided. What did Great Britain ever give for any rights secured to her under this treaty as applied to existing conditions at Panama to-day? What right has she surrendered to the United States? What privilege, contractual or otherwise, existing under this treaty or under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty did England surrender for the purpose of acquiring an asserted right of interfering in the management of the Panama Canal? Our right to build the Panama Canal does not rest upon anything found in the Clayton-Bulwer or Hay-Pauncefote treaties. It rests upon the Panama treaty, made after the execution of the last treaty and upon rights subsequently acquired. Not only that, but what right had Great Britain surrendered to Panama at the time we acquired the cession under the Panama treaty upon which to base any claim for the enforcement of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty so far as the pending legislation is concerned? She had nothing whatever to surrender; she gave us nothing for it; she surrendered to us nothing; and now, when the fruition of these years of labor is to be realized, when we expect to celebrate the opening of the Panama Canal as a monument to American courage, as a monument to American brains, as a monument to American energy, in the great Panama Exposition of the Pacific coast, at the time when the union of these two great oceans shall be made, she steps in for the first time and says, or is reported to have said, that she is interested in the management of American territory, which under this treaty was not considered by her as involved and could not, at that time, have been so considered or contemplated as involved. It is absolutely a unilateral agreement as applied to existing conditions.

Now, just one word about sovereignty, so far as the canal is concerned. I have heard disputed upon the floor of this Chamber the character of authority that we have in Panama upon the line of the canal. I call the attention of the Senate to the expressed words in the treaty which are an absolute grant of a power, and not only of power but of territory, in so far as the strip of country included within the boundaries mentioned in that treaty is concerned. Not only that, but words of exclusion were used in one of the paragraphs of that treaty which intended to convey and did convey so far as the authority of the American Nation was concerned, sovereignty to the exclusion of Panama; and there can be found no limitation upon that sovereignty in the treaty except such limitations as would protect property then held in private ownership and the rights of citizens then upon the Isthmus of Panama.

If I am rightly informed, Congress has already construed that treaty. Where a treaty or a contract or a stipulation is of uncertain terms, where it is ambiguous, those upon whom devolve the function and duty of its interpretation have a right to take the practical construction by the parties to the contract, for the purpose of making that certain which was uncertain, and that definite which was indefinite; and Congress, exercising its power to legislate over territory of the United States, if I am advised correctly—and if I am not I trust some Senator will call my attention to the error—has already said that that territory shall be fortified for the defense of American interests upon a strip of land ceded by Panama under the treaty. Not one word has been heard in protest from the British Government against the act of this Government in so fortifying the canal, notwithstanding in the original treaty, involving the Nicaragua route, they said they objected to fortifications upon the canal route because the parties thereto had no power to dispose of that territory and it was not within the jurisdiction of either of the signatory powers.

I may be mistaken, but I understand that fortifications are being constructed on the Isthmus of Panama under the authority of the Congress of the United States; and if that is true, England has already acquiesced in and has already accepted the construction that I have sought to place upon this treaty by taking from its terms, as not contemplated by the signatory powers, the Panama Canal, in territory, in construction, in maintenance, and in operation and as a part of our country and of our territory.

Holding these views, Senators, I shall square my conduct with my oath, believing that in so doing I am not surrendering, and that I have not surrendered, any right of America over American territory and that this Nation, our Nation, our country has not violated in spirit or letter any of the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty of 1901.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive business the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 30, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 29, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God our heavenly Father, who fillest the heavens with glory and the earth with goodness, humbly we bow in Thy presence and acknowledge our indebtedness to Thee for all things temporal and spiritual. Enrich our minds with wisdom and knowledge and fill our hearts with grace divine, that with all diligence and perseverance we may discharge the obligations resting upon us, private and public. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 27, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21213. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 18041. An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, County of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7315. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clearwater River at any point within the corporate limits of the city of Lewiston, Idaho.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 7315. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Clearwater River at any point within the corporate limits of the city of Lewiston, Idaho; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution and bills:

H. J. Res. 340. Joint resolution making appropriation to be used in exterminating the army worm;

H. R. 21480. An act to establish a standard barrel and standard grade for apples when packed in barrels, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 25598. An act granting a pension to Cornelia C. Bragg.

RADIO COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6412) to regulate radio communication.

The title was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I take it the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] does not desire to consume the day on this bill. Of course it has a privileged status.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think it will take more than an hour to dispose of it, unless there is some obstruction to it, which I do not anticipate. There are a number of amendments that I expect to offer to meet conditions which have developed since this bill was originally considered by the committee. Some of them have been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], to which we readily concede. I do not know of anyone else in the House who has studied this question as closely as he, and I do not know of any objection that will come to its consideration from any source.

Mr. MANN. To be frank with the gentleman, I think it would take more than an hour with a long bill like that, with a number of amendments, and a number of things that would possibly be controverted. I think it would run more than an hour in any event. I think the bill can easily be reached later under the status that it has.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Under the special rule, at the present rate we are going, I do not think we would reach it.

Mr. MANN. At the present rate we are going, if we would reach it in October it would be in plenty of time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the gentleman appreciates the importance of this bill. It ought to be considered during the present session and ought to be passed. I think with his cooperation we can get it through in an hour and a half at the outside.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that I shall object, but I will say to the gentleman frankly that there are a large number of bills, in which various gentlemen of the House are interested, that probably can pass by unanimous consent, and would not be reached for consideration in any other way. This day is not a Monday under the rules for unanimous consents or District day, and because of the situation the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and myself agreed the other day, as far as we were concerned, that this day might be set apart for unanimous consents, in the hope that we would get through with them, and possibly at some time reach the suspension calendar. Now, it is quite certain, if the House takes up bills like this, that will consume an hour or two hours or perhaps three, the purpose of setting aside this day for unanimous consents will not be accomplished. I think the gentleman's bill can easily be reached.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If we can dispose of this bill to-day it will simply open the way to consider two or three other bills that are included in a special rule in which other gentlemen besides myself are interested. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the author of one of those bills. Another relates to the physical valuation of property of railroads, and there is still another from the Committee of Agriculture, in which all the agricultural districts represented here are vitally interested. I think we can dispose of this bill in a very short time, and unless there is objection I shall plan to dispose of it as quickly as possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, there are probably 60 or 70 bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. So far as I recall, I did not put any of them on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I think it would be an entire departure from the theory of the Unanimous Consent Calendar and the diposition of bills in that way to take up a bill that is certain to take up a lot of time, and I would like to suggest to the gentleman that I think the gentleman has already printed the amendments he proposes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. This is the third time this bill has gone over by request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think, under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF PROCESS OR RENOVATED OR ADULTERATED BUTTER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24828) to amend the law relative to manufacture and sale of process or renovated or adulterated butter.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, that bill may go off the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that, but it can not be got off the Calendar for Unanimous Consent unless somebody objects.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

PATENTS TO ENTRYMEN FOR HOMESTEADS UPON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5545) providing for the issuing of patents to entrymen for homesteads upon reclamation projects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I believe the committee has reported a substitute bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the committee has reported a substitute bill for the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Colorado that he ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the original bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I ask that that be done, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent that the substitute bill be read in lieu of the Senate bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That any homestead entryman under the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, including entrymen on ceded Indian lands, may at any time, after having complied with the provisions of law applicable to such lands as to residence, reclamation, and cultivation, submit proof of such residence, reclamation, and cultivation, which proof, if found regular and satisfactory, shall entitled the entryman to a patent, and all purchasers of water-right certificates on reclamation projects shall be entitled to a final water-right certificate upon proof of the cultivation and reclamation of the land to which the certificate applies to the extent required by the reclamation act for homestead entrymen: Provided, That no such patent or certificate shall issue until all sums due the United States on account of such land or water right at the time of issuance of patent or certificate have been paid.

"SEC. 2. That every patent and water-right certificate issued under this act shall expressly reserve to the United States a prior lien on the land patented or for which water right is certified, together with all water rights appurtenant or belonging thereto, superior to all other liens, claims, or demands whatsoever for the payment of all sums due or to become due to the United States or its successors in control of the irrigation project in connection with such lands and water rights.

"Upon default of payment of any amount so due, title to the land shall pass to the United States free of all encumbrance, subject to the right of the defaulting debtor or any mortgage-lien holder, judgment debtor, or subsequent purchaser to redeem the land within one year after the notice of such default shall have been given by payment of all moneys due, with 8 per cent interest and costs. And the United States, at its option, acting through the Secretary of the Interior, may cause land to be sold at any time after such failure to redeem, and from the proceeds of the sale there shall be paid into the reclamation fund all moneys due, with interest as herein provided, and costs. The balance of the proceeds, if any, shall be the property of the defaulting debtor or his assignee: Provided, That in case of sale, after failure to redeem under this section, the United States shall be authorized to bid in such land at not more than the amount in default, including interest and costs.

"SEC. 3. Upon full and final payment being made of all amounts due on account of the building and betterment charges to the United States or its successors in control of the project, the United States or its successors, as the case may be, shall issue, upon request, a certificate certifying that payment of the building and betterment charges in full has been made and that the lien upon the land has been so far satisfied and is no longer of any force or effect except the lien for annual charges for operation and maintenance: Provided, That no person shall at any one time or in any manner, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, acquire, own, or hold irrigable land for which entry or water-right application shall have been made under the said reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, before final payment in full of all installments of building and betterment charges shall have been made on account of such land in excess of one farm unit as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior as the limit of area per entry of public land or per single ownership of private land for which a water right may be purchased, respectively, nor in any case in excess of 160 acres, nor shall water be furnished under said acts nor a water right sold or recognized for such excess; but any such excess land acquired at any time in good faith by descent, by will, or by foreclosure of any lien may be held for two years and no longer after its acquisition; and every excess holding prohibited as aforesaid shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction; and this proviso shall be recited in every patent and water-right certificate issued by the United States under the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to designate such bonded fiscal agents or officers of the Reclamation Service as he may deem advisable on each reclamation project, to whom shall be paid all sums due on reclamation entries or water rights, and the officials so designated shall keep a record for the information of the public of the sums paid and the amount due at any time on account of any entry made or water right purchased under the reclamation act; and the Secretary of the Interior shall make provision for furnishing copies of duly authenticated records of entries upon payment of reasonable fees, which copies shall be admissible in evidence, as are copies authenticated under section 888 of the Revised Statutes.

"SEC. 5. Jurisdiction of suits by the United States for the enforcement of the provisions of this act is hereby conferred on the United States district courts of the districts in which the lands are situated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the substitute for the Senate bill.

The question was taken, and the substitute for the Senate bill was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL AND WOOLENS AND THE EXCISE BILL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make two privileged reports from the Committee on Ways and Means. I desire to report back to the House the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, with the recommendation that the House disagree to the Senate amendments, and also to report back to the House the bill (H. R. 21214) to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations to persons, and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special excise tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships, with the recommendation that the House disagree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] reports back the wool bill and the excise bill, with the recommendation that the House disagree to the Senate amendments thereto. The Clerk will report the bills.

The Clerk read the titles of the bills, as follows:

An act (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool. (H. Rept. 1092.)

An act (H. R. 21214) to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations to persons, and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships. (H. Rept. 1093.)

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, after the reading of the Journal, I shall move to take up these bills and move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the fact that there is a special order for to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, when, it is provided, the Indian appropriation bill is to be disposed of. Probably it will not take very long.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I would like to take up these bills. I presume under the special order it would take only a few minutes to send these bills to conference. In view of the desire for an early adjournment, I would like to take them up promptly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman could do that by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] gives notice that as soon as he can do so to-morrow he will call up these reports and have them disposed of. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], as I understand it, has obtained an order for consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; a special order for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would have to examine that order in order to see if any conflict would occur between the two as to which would come first. The Chair can not do it now, inasmuch as there is not sufficient time. The special order obtained by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] is that the Indian appropriation bill shall be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow. In the meantime these reports will be ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

PATENTS TO SEMINOLE ALLOTTEES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23184) directing the Secretary of the Interior to deliver patents to Seminole allottees, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to forthwith deliver all patents or deeds to Seminole allottees covering their respective allotments: Provided, however, That the delivery of such patents or deeds shall not in any manner operate to validate any void or voidable titles or add to the weight of evidence required to avoid the same, or serve to remove restrictions that have not heretofore been removed by express act of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object, and will permit me to explain this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has already objected.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires, I will reserve the objection for a short time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that this bill applies only to the Seminole Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, one of the Five Civilized Tribes. The other four tribes—the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Cherokees, and Creeks—have had their patents or deeds delivered to them by the Secretary of the Interior. For some reason, unknown to me and also unknown to the committee that has this matter in charge, the department have been withholding from the Seminoles their evidences of title. Congress passed an act April 21, 1904, whereby it removed the restrictions from the surplus lands of adult freedmen in the Seminole Nation. May 27, 1908, Congress passed another act with reference to removing restrictions upon alienation upon lands of allottees in the Five Civilized Tribes, of which the Seminole Tribe is one. The provisions of that act removed all restrictions upon all allottees who were not Indians by blood, and upon the lands of all allottees who were Indian by blood but who were less than half blood, and upon the surplus allotment of allottees who were one-half blood or more and less than three-fourths Indian by blood. The act also gave the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, the right to remove restrictions upon application by the allottee from the lands of either the homestead or surplus allotments of those who are one-half blood or more than one-half blood and up to full blood.

In view of the fact that Congress has passed the acts of April 21, 1904, and May 27, 1908, removing restrictions from certain lands of all allottees in the Seminole Nation and from a portion of allotments from other allottees, the committee believes that the patents or deeds to the lands should be delivered. Up to the date of the report upon this bill there were but a few deeds delivered to these Indians. Before the deeds are delivered the land is not taxable. Seminole County, Okla., in which these Indians are located, has a county government to maintain by taxation, including public schools. Neither the State of Oklahoma or the county of Seminole can levy a tax on these Indian lands for school purposes or any other purposes until these deeds are delivered. By the deeds or patents the title passes from the Indian and the land becomes taxable.

It is a matter of great importance to the people of this county that they be permitted to have their title deeds to the lands on which they are now living and upon which their homes are located. Their evidences of title have been withheld, in one instance since 1906, and in the other instance for more than four years. I think the department should be directed by this bill to do what the law requires them to do; that is, to promptly deliver these deeds. Why they have been so dilatory I can not explain to the House, but I have given the reason why this bill should pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, all the gentleman states may be correct. This is a bill to direct the department to deliver certain patents. I think it is the practice of the committee to send bills of this sort to the department for a report, so that Congress may be informed of the views of the department and the facts within the knowledge of the department. I do not know whether this bill was sent to the department for a report, but I know that if it was and the report was obtained it is not included in the report of the committee. Hence I assume that the department gave some unanswerable reason why the bill should not pass, and for that reason the committee, in reporting, not thinking the reasons given by the department were good, left the report of the department out of the report of the committee. Until the committee can furnish a report from the department I shall object, and therefore I do object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, before the objection is formally made, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT], who introduced this bill, or who is interested in it, is now absent, and I will ask the gentleman if he will not consent to allow the bill to be passed without prejudice and let it retain its position on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent to pass this bill without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I think I will not object to that, although I believe I have made this same statement on three or four previous occasions, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] or some one else has made the same statement which he has just made. It seems to me that if gentlemen intend to ask to pass this bill without prejudice they ought to ask it before we go over this same discussion every time.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to state to the gentleman from Illinois that it does not make a particle of difference whether these patents are delivered, so far as the ability of the allottee to transfer is concerned.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman going to discuss the merits of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. Just briefly.

Mr. MANN. Because if the gentleman is going to do that I shall object. If the gentleman wants to discuss the bill when it comes before the House at some future time, I shall have no objection to that.

Mr. CARTER. I do not care anything at all about discussing it now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota that this bill be passed without prejudice?

There was no objection.

DAMS ACROSS DUCK RIVER, HICKMAN COUNTY, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24197) to authorize Carl J. Kiefer and Laurent Lowenberg to construct two dams across Duck River, in Hickman County, Tenn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Carl J. Kiefer and Laurent Lowenberg, their successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate two dams across Duck River, in Hickman County, State of Tennessee, at points suitable to the interests of navigation, one about 5 miles east of Centerville, near mouth of Swan Creek, and the other about 4 miles east of first dam, near mouth of Willeys Branch, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BATHRICK, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. RAINEY, Mr. FOWLER, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] reserve the right to object. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; I reserve the objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state to the gentleman that this river at the point where this dam is proposed to be erected is not a navigable stream, and never can be a navigable stream at that point. The people there are anxious to develop the water power there, and I would be very glad if the gentleman could see his way clear not to offer an objection. It is a small stream. The consent of Congress is asked simply out of abundant precaution, so that the men may invest their capital and undertake this enterprise in security and without the hazard of interference hereafter. I would be very glad indeed if the gentleman would withdraw his objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that it is a local company who desires this, made up of residents of the gentleman's own district, and they propose to make this improvement.

Mr. PADGETT. Not alone. There are some men from other places who are cooperating with the local people.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would state that I would be perfectly willing to take up this bill to-day if the House sees fit to do so, and to discuss the matter of what ought to be provided in these water-power bills, but I am not willing to do so unless the House so decides to give all the time necessary. I judge that it would take several hours to do that, at least it would take some time to take up the different phases of this question and settle them. I would suggest that if the gentleman who has charge of this bill and the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would be willing to discuss some amendments with reference to imposing a reasonable charge for the use of the water after making due allowance for operating expenses, fixed charges, maintenance, and so forth, and that the proceeds might be used for the improvement of that river or any tributary stream, and also that the Federal Government shall reserve the right to regulate the charges for the use of the water power when in its judgment the State or municipality are not able to do so, and that the parties granted this right should file with the Secretary of War their acceptance of these conditions imposed by the Federal Government, then we might proceed with the consideration of this bill. If the gentleman is willing to take the time and discuss these points I am willing to take it up, but I would not be willing to do it upon a limitation of time in which to discuss the matter.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, as I am included in the hypothetical or conditional statement the distinguished gentleman from Illinois made, I wish to repeat again what I have said to him time and again, that if he has any amendments to offer to this bill, he should stand up flatfooted and squarely and offer them instead of preventing consideration of the bill by objecting thereto, and he should take his chances with the intelligent Members of this House and offer the amendment and permit the House to vote on the amendment. If this House wants to adopt the amendment, we can not help it, whether we vote for it or against it. The way in which he states the question shows that he knows nothing about the general dam act, nothing about the policy of the Congress for the improvement of water power so as not to interfere with navigation, and if he will listen to the speeches made and the reports made by men who have studied the question instead of reading the statements of irresponsible sensationalists outside, who are theorists instead of practical statesmen, he will come to the conclusion that if I were to agree to the amendment in advance it would not be agreed to by this House. Nine-tenths of this House, in my judgment, would rise up and vote it down, if he and I should agree upon it. Let the gentleman be fair, let him do like we do, submit his proposition, and if he is right this House will adopt his amendments, and I will guarantee if I am on a committee of conference that I shall stand by the action of the House until the lower regions freeze over.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, in the opinion of the gentleman from Georgia I may not know much about this proposition, and with his present idea of the disposition of power sites in this country I think it an honor and a distinction to be so considered by the gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I want to say to him that so far as I am concerned as an individual Member of this House I propose to exercise what little influence and right I may have here to protect the rights of the people of the whole country and in the communities in which these concessions are to be granted. And I propose to stand by that, irrespective of what the gentleman from Georgia or any other man in this House or this country may say. [Applause.] I want to say to him that if he is willing to take up this question to-day or any other day and discuss it along these lines if the House decides against me I am willing, and I will do my duty, because I do not consider that in defeating these bills any little victory I might gain is worth anything to me personally and I care nothing for that; but I propose to stand here and do my duty whether there is another man in this House who stands with me or not. When I have done that, I shall have the consciousness at least of having discharged my duty as a legislator in this body, and representing people who sent me here as I do, and as I believe they want me to do, on the floor of this House. I propose to guard the rights and interests of the people of this country against any monopoly wherever it may be situated, whether it is in the district that I have the honor to represent or the district of any other man, and I care not how good a friend of mine he may be, upon this floor. I propose to stand here and assert my right as an individual Member regardless of the opinion of the gentleman from Georgia or any other man on the floor of this House. This is not a local matter. As I view it, these concessions ought to pay considerable revenue into the National Treasury. [Applause.]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois withhold his objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I will withhold my objection for a moment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I have no water-power sites, no water-power bills, and I simply happen, by the partiality of my colleagues here, to be honored with the position of chairman of this committee. I have my ideas and the committee has its ideas.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman inform the House if there have been any hearings on this bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know that there have been any hearings at this session by the committee formally on this bill.

Mr. RAINEY. How much water power can be developed here?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will state, Mr. Speaker, on the general principle of granting this consent under the general dam act, we have had hearings three times since I have been on the committee. We have had a report from the Chief of Engineers upon this bill. As to the details of the locality, I shall have to refer the gentleman to the author of the bill, Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. RAINEY. Has the gentleman acquired any information at all as to how much power can be developed here?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to let the gentleman from Tennessee answer that question.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman that this is a small river, and at certain seasons of the year for several months the quantity of water that flows is very small. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is perfectly familiar with the situation. The river rises in the State and empties in another river in the State, and at this point above Centerville it is not a navigable river for boats; and there are times when the shoals are so shoaly that it prevents the going down of a canoe and they have to drag the canoes over the shoals.

Mr. RAINEY. All of which I did not ask about. Do you know, or does anybody know, how much water power can be developed?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not.

Mr. RAINEY. Does the gentleman know, or does anybody know, anything about the solvency of these people who are asking for this franchise?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know whether they are solvent; I do not know what their money worth is. I think it is utterly immaterial what they are worth; but the people want this development and need the development and ought to have it.

Mr. RAINEY. If they are asking for this franchise, which is a valuable one, although nobody seems to know how valuable, how does it happen the persons who have asked for it are not important enough in the financial world to even be rated in Bradstreet?

Mr. PADGETT. As I said to the gentleman, it is a small river, and there are many people who go into enterprises of a local character who are not in Bradstreet.

Mr. RAINEY. Not in building a plant costing a million dollars.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois I did not ask Dr. FOSTER to withhold his objection to continue a discussion of the merits of the case, but—I understand he is going to object to it—to reply to a suggestion he made.

Mr. RAINEY. I simply wanted to find out if I could the facts of the financial standing, which nobody seems to know, of these people.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is the part of the case I am endeavoring to express our views on if I can. We simply say if the States are willing for them to build these dams they can build them if they do it under the requirements specified by the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War is charged with seeing that all the necessary conditions are put upon it——

Mr. PADGETT. And built in accordance with the laws of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. ADAMSON. But what I rose to say in reply to the distinguished gentleman, Dr. FOSTER, of Illinois, is this: We have no objection to debating the question ad libitum. I admire his courage and the zeal with which he represents his people and the people of the United States. He is right on so many questions in his patriotism and good judgment that I am inclined to bear with him occasionally when he is wrong, which is very seldom. I do not say he is wrong in wanting to amend these acts. What I say is he is wrong to interpose any objection to considering the bills instead of being able enough and strong enough to offer his amendment fairly and openly, have it debated before the House, and let the House adopt it or not, and say what is right, regardless of the gentleman or myself.

Among the hallucinations and sensational romances circulated in connection with water power, the following is one specific enough to notice:

One of the uncomfortable charges which opponents of these bills are making relates to the different treatment accorded to various bills. For example, there are some bills to grant municipalities the right to develop local powers for producing city light. These bills, obviously in the public interest, don't get reported; they stick in the committee; while the measures which are more than suspected of representing the Power Trust get out.

Congress has consented to a great many bridge projects to be undertaken at the expense of municipalities and counties, but in no instance, except one, has any city or county applied to Congress through the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for a bill granting consent to build a dam. In so far as granting the consent of Congress is concerned, the same principle identical applies to both dams and bridges. Congress merely consents that a structure, whether bridge or dam, which might otherwise be an obstruction to navigation, may be constructed if it is done in strict accordance with conditions, specifications, and plans approved and imposed by the Secretary of War, the effect of which is intended to prevent the structure, while useful to promoters, from operating as a substantial obstruction to navigation at all. Bridges without draws can be constructed so as absolutely not to obstruct navigation. Where a draw is requisite, however, it is well nigh impossible to avoid the delay of vessels. In cases of dams it is expected that the ponds or lakes created by the dams will greatly aid and facilitate navigation, in some cases for many miles above the dams over the beds of the streams that but for raising the water by the means of dams would defeat navigation. Of course, locks will cause some delay to vessels in passing, but that obstruction is much more than overbalanced by the benefits already enumerated. It must be apparent that cities and counties may by legislative authority wisely undertake the construction and control of bridges, because the expense thereof is comparatively light while the necessity to facilitate travel by the congested population is great. That, however, is rarely resorted to when by other means and through private enterprise the project can be financed; but the expense of constructing and maintaining dams is so great that cities and counties seldom assume the expense themselves. There is little reason for a county ever to do so. A city would only do so when the great necessity for light and power can not be met by private enterprise. That condition seldom arises, and in only one case has a bill been referred to our committee during this Congress for that purpose; that was where a small town asked Congress to grant it consent to build a dam at the same site on which the committee had already reported a bill granting consent for a private company to build it, which bill had been introduced more than a month earlier and was favorably reported by the Chief of Engineers of the War Department. The bill in favor of the town has not been reported by the War Department. On conference with the author of the bills it was determined that it would look silly to grant the consent to two corporations to build at the same site, and it did not appear that the city involved was specifically authorized by law to undertake that enterprise or that it was necessary for such city to do so with a local company, under control of the laws of the same State, offering to do so, or that the city was willing or ready to do so.

Insinuation that the committee would discriminate against a city in favor of the Water Power Trust is entirely gratuitous and unwarranted.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has directed that the chairman, in case the city of Branson should indicate a desire and manifest preparation and readiness to undertake the enterprise, offer the following committee amendment whenever either the omnibus dam bill or the bill in favor of the Ozark Power & Water Co. (H. R. 25035) shall be taken up for consideration by the House:

On page 5, line 6, after the word "meridian," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following language:

Provided, That this consent shall not become available nor operate to permit the Ozark Power & Water Co. to exercise any rights in conformity with it if within 12 months from the approval of this act the city of Branson, Taney County, Mo., shall officially announce its purpose to construct a dam upon the same site or at any site which would conflict with this grant, and in such event the consent of Congress is on the same terms hereby granted to the city of Branson when authorized by the laws of the State of Missouri to construct, maintain, and operate a dam within 5 miles upstream from the city of Branson. If the said city of Branson shall fail within one year from the approval of this act officially to announce its desire to proceed and file with the Secretary of War for approval the necessary plans and specifications, then the Ozark Power & Water Co. shall be permitted under this consent to proceed, and the limitations of time shall be counted against it from that date instead of from the approval of this act.

If objection is to be made to the consideration of all the water-power bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER. I will still reserve my right to object.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Is not the gentleman willing to allow debate?

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, I am willing to debate it forever. I have no limitation to put upon the debate.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Dr. FOSTER asked if the gentleman would allow us to debate the question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have said a hundred times that if the gentleman will stand flatfooted and offer amendments I am willing the question shall be debated as long as he can hold out, as far as I am concerned. I have no objection; I introduced an omnibus bill for that purpose after the consideration of the individual bills had been prevented by objection. The way to debate and amend them is to consider them.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the Government of the United States heretofore adopted any policy of any kind concerning the building of these dams for the purpose of improving navigation resulting in the development of water power?

Mr. ADAMSON. It certainly has; and I will set that out in the remarks which I secured permission to extend. I endeavored to state last Thursday in my speech that we adopted a permanent policy nine years ago and amended it two years ago, and we have now ordered hearings with a view of amending it again, if gentlemen who are dissatisfied with that policy will kindly show wherein it ought to be amended.

Mr. FOWLER. I am aware that half a dozen power bills have been passed here for that purpose and certain rights given, and that afterwards Congress has repealed the law giving those rights in some instances.

Mr. ADAMSON. There has not been a case since the general dam act that Congress gave anybody anything. Congress has simply consented that a dam may be placed in a navigable stream if the parties building the dams will submit to the conditions that may be imposed by the Secretary of War, which are intended to prevent, in reality, the apparent obstruction from being a real obstruction, and which are intended to restore the stream after the dam is built to substantially the same condition of navigability as if the dam had not been built there.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that there is a great rush after this cheap water power?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know. I know of a scope of about a thousand miles square where the people are victimized by two trusts, a railroad trust and a coal trust, and where they are praying and begging for the development of water power that will relieve them from the unjust coal barons and excessive railroad freight, and all that they want is permission to develop this power and they can run the machinery at half the cost that they can under present conditions.

And they can not get money except from people who have money, and they get capital when they can, and organize it when they can; but in every one of those cases the States with which I am familiar have performed their duty as States as to laws regulating charges and practices, and do not come to Congress and ask Congress to do what the State is willing and able to do—control the internal affairs of the people and their operations in that State.

Mr. FOWLER. It is admitted on all hands that this power is going to be a very cheap power, is it not?

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course.

Mr. FOWLER. And if that is true, in the consideration of such bills as you have reported, will you agree that there may be an amendment to these bills giving to the Treasury of the United States 7 per cent of the gross income from that water power?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not have to agree. If you offer that amendment in this House, and the House adopts it, you will have it.

Mr. FOWLER. I give notice now that as long as I am a Member of this House no public-corporation bill can be passed here without my offering an amendment thereto of this character.

Mr. ADAMSON. I know the Coal Trusts and railroads will be glad to hear that. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. I know, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country would have been glad long ago to have had somebody stand for their rights and secure to the Treasury of the United States money enough to defray the expenses of this Government, instead of having those vast franchises given away to corporations, whereby they can prey upon the people of this country at will.

Mr. ADAMSON. There are some people in this country, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], who understand something about the principles of this Government and the truth of the situation, and they know the difference between sensational agitation on one side and rational interpretation of the law and Constitution on the other.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman that, while I am young here in this body and do not pretend to have as much learning as the sage from Georgia, yet I do have in my heart a schooling upon the question of right and wrong from my mother and my father and from the common people, a schooling which teaches me to stand by their rights, and I intend to do it as long as I am a Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. I commend the gentleman, and I am glad he called me a sage and not a sager.

Under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit the following letter, in answer to one sent to all Members of Congress to-day:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
Washington, D. C., July 29, 1912.

Hon. GIFFORD PINCHOT,
Colorado Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 27th instant, with inclosure as stated, of which certain newspapers had given notice on yesterday. Your inclosure suggests nothing new to this committee. I do not know of any member of the committee who is interested in any development of water power, but they have studied the subject and, in all fairness, they believe, men who pretend to know more about it than they do ought to enlighten them by specific charges and evidence as to the unworthy projects instead of obstructing development and reflections upon the motives of honest Members of Congress and committeemen by meaningless generalities and insinuation.

If, instead of resorting to objecting to the consideration of bills, men who know of any valid objection to any of these projects would come upon the floor of the House or before the committee and offer substantial suggestions and verify them nobody would be more ready or willing than the members of the committee to pursue the proper course in the matter.

The committee nine years ago adopted a general policy, or rather recommended it to Congress and Congress adopted a general policy, for the development of water power without interfering with navigation. The committee made no mistake to the injury of the Government or the people, but safeguarded all of those rights. The difficulty with those who object is they have never studied the scheme nor the subject in its true light. If there is any State unwilling or unable to cope with the control and regulation of corporations, that contingency is amply provided for in the general dam act. The Government certainly has power as a condition of its consent to impose fair conditions. At the insistence of people of your way of thinking, the committee arrested the development of water power for two or three years until it could amend the general dam act in conformity, as we honestly thought, to the views of the objectors, but it appears that the objectors have again become active.

This committee proposes now to begin having hearings and invite all persons who know anything about it to come before us and make suggestions to help us amend that act so as to improve it, if possible, but we have not thought that pending that it was fair to delay the promoters of the projects in question. Therefore, we have suggested on the floor of the House two or three times that such of these bills as can not be shown to be objectionable ought to be passed at this session.

It should always be borne in mind that projects reported by our committee and considered by Congress do not in any sense antagonize any of the reasons or objections urged by the present objectors. Their objections are all misapplied, for the reason that we don't deal with projects undertaken by the Government at all. Every project to which the consent of Congress is granted on our favorable recommendation is one in which all the property rights are in individual citizens of States under the control and regulation primarily of States, Congress neither enlarging nor multiplying those rights; nor do we confer any of them; we merely consent that, provided they are exercised under the direction of the Secretary of War so as not to interfere with navigation, the Government will consent to the structure. If the impotency of any State to prevent injustice to the public should at any time be demonstrated, it would not be necessary to mention the State at all in odious comparison or contrast, but the authorities of the General Government could, in strict compliance with the terms of our consent, proceed to do anything necessary to the protection of the public.

In the general dam act we not only vest the Secretary of War with plenary power to impose all rational conditions and restrictions, but we reserve to Congress expressly the right to revoke, amend, repeal, or modify at any time without liability to anybody therefor. The broader propositions to deal with the public domain, to deal with those projects in which the Government furnishes the money and constructs dams and locks, becoming itself the owner of private property as well as the sovereign in relation thereto, are referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The water-power bills referred to us, as well as those referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, are all ultimately in the last resort referred to the War Department and the Chief of Engineers for approval of plans, who has it absolutely in his power to operate all the acts in perfect harmony with the promotion of navigation and protection of the interests of the Government and the rights of the public, while at the same time permitting private citizens to enjoy the benefits of their property and improve and utilize the assets which their labor and money have bought.

If trusts and combinations mar the general harmony of these operations, it is no more than usual for avarice and greed in every other avenue and relation of human effort. The way to meet it is for statesmen and publicists to use their brains and study out practical methods and specific remedies instead of indulging in indefinite insinuations and inuendo.

There is a very large scope of our country where there is no coal, and two trusts operating—a railroad trust and a coal trust operated to the oppression and throttling the development where a great and industrious people are anxious to utilize the magnificent elements of prosperity with which Providence has bountifully endowed them, but are retarded or prevented from doing so by the extortions of railroads and the coal combines. To generate horsepower is almost prohibited, at least it renders manufacturing unprofitable, by depriving them of the power to compete with other sections less bountifully blessed by nature. In all of these regions there is abundant water power in streams where the Government finds it too expensive to develop navigation at the cost of the Treasury. All of these States are genuine decent States, with power and disposition to regulate their internal affairs, control public-service corporations, fix prices and practices without aimlessly and senselessly hollering to the Federal Government to exercise arbitrarily imperial power to prevent the conservation of abundant water power in their midst, to protect them from the oppression of the coal and railroad trusts. We believe the true conservationists are the men who urge the liberty of private property owners to develop and use their resources, and not the men who would throttle and prevent in order to promote and perpetuate the merciless grasp of coal and railroad trusts upon a struggling people.

I do not mean to say that is their purpose. I recognize that many of them are honest men with good intentions, and some of them are intelligent men, but you know the Lord once said regretfully, "My people doth not consider." I think many of them would be able to reach the truth and practice justice if they would get out of their minds the original prejudice with which they started, and with which they continue to becloud their reason. The committee does not claim to be wiser nor more honest than anybody else. We are open to conviction if we are wrong, and if any people who insist that we are wrong and that they are right would only come before our committee and show us the reasons and the facts, we would gladly report an amendment to the general dam act.

Yours, very truly,
W. C. ADAMSON.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, what is the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary situation is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and three or four other Members have reserved the right to object, and they are trying to find out whether they are going to object or not.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is there any limitation?

The SPEAKER. There is no limitation as long as some gentleman does not demand the regular order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. Is it in order for me to object now?

The SPEAKER. It is in order for anybody to object.

Mr. LEVER. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] objects, and the bill goes off the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 16518. An act for the relief of the Fifth-Third National Bank of Cincinnati, Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 368):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Thursday, August 1, 1912, to Saturday, August 10, 1912, both inclusive.

PENSIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17470) to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects, and the bill goes off the calendar.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

RIGHTS UNDER HOMESTEAD ACTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5309) to amend section 3 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 140).

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 140), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That any settler upon lands theretofore designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to the provisions of sections 1 to 5 of the enlarged homestead acts of February 19, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 639), and June 17, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 531), shall be entitled to the preference right of entry accorded by this section, provided he shall have plainly marked the exterior boundaries of the lands claimed as his homestead: And provided further, That after the designation by the Secretary of the Interior of public lands for entry under the nonresidence provisions of the enlarged homestead acts of February 19, 1909, and June 17, 1910, any person who shall have plainly marked the exterior boundaries of the lands claimed under said provisions of law and made valuable improvements thereon shall have a preference right to enter the lands so claimed and improved at any time within three months after the date on which such lands become subject to entry; but such right shall forfeit unless the settler or claimant under the provisions of the enlarged homestead acts shall annually cultivate and improve the lands in the form and manner and to the extent therein required following date of initiation of his claim hereunder: And provided further, That this act shall apply to all claims, locations, or entries made under the above-mentioned acts, where no adverse claims have intervened.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 7, by striking out the word "theretofore."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following amendment was read:

On page 2, strike out all on line 24, after the word "hereunder," and lines 1 and 2, on page 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INVESTIGATION INTO THE HIGH PRICE OF ANTHRACITE COAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House resolution 578, directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to ascertain and report to the House of Representatives certain facts regarding the cost of anthracite coal and the increased demand upon the public consumer.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 578.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to obtain and report to the House of Representatives, through the Bureau of Labor, full information concerning the different elements of cost and profit included in the present high price of anthracite coal, specifying as far as practicable how much and in what particulars the coal miners were benefited by the recent strike agreement, and how much and for what reasons and by what means the cost of coal to the general consumers was at the same time increased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves the right to object——

Mr. MANN (continuing). I think the suggestion was made that this investigation might be made by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, without requiring that it be done through the Bureau of Labor, so that he might utilize that bureau or other bureaus in the department. Is the gentleman willing to strike out the words "through the Bureau of Labor"?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I am.

Mr. MANN. I think that suggestion was made by Mr. Neill, the Commissioner of Labor, himself.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Yes. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement. When this matter was up two weeks ago inadvertently the word "bill" slipped into my remarks when it should have been "report," and it places Mr. Neill and myself in a very awkward position, for the reason that Dr. Neill had nothing at all to do with the drafting of the resolution, but he made some suggestions regarding the report. I desire to make this statement in order to be fair with Dr. Neill as well as myself and the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Yes; I will let him get in.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman said he would yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to know whether the gentleman thinks his resolution is broad enough to cover the question of transportation as it affects the price of coal? I think that is a polite question.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I do think it does.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does think that it covers that point, so that we may ascertain whether it is cheaper to transport coal by rail or by water? The gentleman thinks his resolution is broad enough to cover that?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Yes; I do. I will say that I have a communication from the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which Mr. Marble takes the position that the Interstate Commerce Commission could not go into an investigation unless the trade extended beyond a particular State. Now, we in Pennsylvania are suffering more particularly from this increase in the price of coal than possibly the people of any other State, for the reason that our freight charges are greater in proportion from the anthracite region to the city of Philadelphia, for instance, than they are to New York. We find that this increased cost to the consumer has been placed upon the sizes of coal that are used for domestic purposes, and we find great complaint in the vicinity in which I live and the region through which most of this coal in Pennsylvania is distributed.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I hope this resolution will pass, in view of the statement that was made by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce this morning, when he stated that the railroads were in a trust, and that the coal of the country was in a trust, and that some relief ought to be granted by and through the water powers. Now, if they are turned over to a trust without any restraint whatever, as the effort now seems to be, without collecting anything for the use of this valuable commodity for the benefit of the United States Government, they will have a circle around the people of this country from which there will be no escape, and no relief whatever can be secured.

Now, this resolution proceeds upon the basis——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman that unanimous consent has not been obtained to consider this resolution. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana, if he desires recognition.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; for a short time, to complete my statement. Now, if the purpose of this resolution is to investigate this condition—the very condition of which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] spoke a moment ago—and if it is passed, it calls upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to furnish the information bearing upon the cost of the production of coal and the cost of putting it upon the market all of which necessarily has to be borne by the ultimate consumer. And if the water powers are turned over to the Water-Power Trust of this country, and the timber, which has already practically passed into the hands of the Timber Trust, the people will be without opportunity for fuel and power altogether.

I am heartily in sympathy with the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, that not a single right should be granted to any water-power company unless there is affixed to it not only a charge from the time that it begins to operate, payable to the United States Government, but also the power to regulate that charge from time to time so long as used for the power, or as long as it is continued to be used by the company.

If these things are to go on, the people of the country will have the coils of the trusts more strictly and stringently drawn around them, and I hope the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] will pass.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I imagine that there is no objection to the passage of this resolution. But I have been very much edified in listening to the centralizing, Federalizing, bureaucratizing arguments on the Democratic side in connection with the so-called water-power or dam bills.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope the gentleman does not mean me. I have never followed Hamilton in my life.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we have assumed that the Democratic Party stood for a constitutional government, as established by the fathers. We think that the Republican Party has always stood fairly and squarely for a constitutional government, as provided by the fathers. But our Democratic friends have, time out of mind, plumed themselves as being the peculiar champions of those wise provisions that were placed in the Constitution of the United States by the fathers, whereby the great majority, the overwhelming bulk, if I may use the word, of the sovereignty of the people rests in the people in the States.

The Federal Government has limited authority in regard to certain matters. Among other things, the Federal Government has control of navigable streams, with regard to their navigability, and for no other purpose under heaven. If any of the gentlemen who are now insisting upon the extension of bureaucracy, upon the centralizing of this Government, can find anything in the Constitution of the United States that gives this Nation any authority or power or dominion or control over the navigable streams further than to control in the matter of navigation, I hope the gentleman will arise and enlighten us right here and now on the subject.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman doubt that the General Government, which by this resolution is proposing to investigate the cost of coal produced, transported, and consumed wholly within the State of Pennsylvania, has an equal right, when it grants permission to construct a dam across a navigable stream or a bridge over a navigable stream, to grant that right upon conditions, one of those conditions being that a revenue shall be paid, or that the Government shall be allowed to fix the charges?

Mr. MONDELL. The Federal Government can not legally or constitutionally do that indirectly which it can not do directly, and as the Federal Government can not directly shorten the sovereignty of the people within the States in the control over their own domestic corporations and in the use of the water over which the State has dominion and control, the Federal Government can not, by indirection, do that which it can not do directly. It may attempt to do it, but there is no power under the Constitution to do it, and it would be unwise to attempt to do it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the General Government can not do indirectly what it is not permitted to do directly. Did not the gentleman vote for the bill to put a heavy tax upon the manufacture of white phosphorus matches and thereby do indirectly what it could not do directly—suppress the manufacture of those matches within the boundaries of a State?

Mr. MONDELL. My recollection is I did not happen to be in the House when the bill passed. If I had been, I should have voted for it, and we did it as directly as though we had struck that particular industry right square between the eyes with our fists.

Mr. MANN. You did not collect any taxes on the matches, so you did not do anything directly.

Mr. MONDELL. We did it directly.

Mr. MANN. You passed a law to put a tax on a certain kind of matches for the purpose of indirectly preventing any manufacture of them, a clear case of doing a thing indirectly which you can not do directly.

Mr. MONDELL. We did it as directly as possible, and put the industry out of business by statute law.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to.

Mr. FOWLER. I will ask you if on May 2, 1895, the United States Congress did not pass what is known as the lottery law, which resulted in the absolute destruction of the lottery business?

Mr. MONDELL. Congress passed the bill, which was clearly within the power of the Federal Government over postal affairs.

Mr. FOWLER. I will ask you if that was not under the theory of the constitutional power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know anything about the theory. I am not a constitutional lawyer.

Mr. FOWLER. I say was not the law passed on that theory?

Mr. MONDELL. The law was passed under the power of the Federal Government over post offices and post roads and over interstate commerce. But, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOWLER. And did it not result in the destruction of the lottery business instead of regulating the traffic in lottery tickets interstate?

Mr. MONDELL. It was intended to. That was its intent, just as it seems to be the intent of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] to destroy opportunities to create cheap power, thereby perpetuating the control of the Coal Trusts.

Mr. FOWLER. Was not the lottery law sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in an able opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan in United States 188, page 321?

Mr. MONDELL. There was an opinion, and it was able, because Justice Harlan's opinions always were able.

Mr. ROBINSON. The power in that case, if the gentleman will permit, was derived from the commerce clause of the Constitution, and it dealt with the matter as a commodity of commerce. The destruction of the business was, of course, a result of prohibiting it being transmitted through the mails.

Mr. MONDELL. I thank my friend, the future governor of Arkansas, who is a constitutional lawyer, and whose mind is always clear on these matters. But I started out to say that it is amazing——

Mr. FOWLER. One further question. I will ask you if that law did not go further than to prohibit the transportation of lottery tickets through the mails and if it did not prohibit them from being sent either through the mails or in any other way from one State to another?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not now recall all the provisions of that act.

Mr. FOWLER. It did.

Mr. MONDELL. It did put an end to the lottery business, thank God. That was its intention, and it was direct legislation, but that has not anything to do with the present centralizing tendencies on the Democratic side, following some gentlemen who have constituted themselves the only and original guardians of the public weal. I would not want to say that these gentlemen are in any way connected with or interested in any great coal enterprise, because I do not know that to be true. I know, however, that every day that the construction of these dams is prevented is that much more water poured on the wheel of the coal companies. I know that the great Pocahontas Coal Co. and other concerns are selling more coal because these dams are not constructed. I know that the great railway companies of the country are hauling a great deal of coal that they would not haul if these dams were constructed. I am not putting the two things together, because I do not know, but I know that if I were a coal magnate, or if I were a railroad magnate, I should be likely to assume the same attitude in regard to these water-power bills that is assumed by a certain organization in the country, and following the views of which organization is assumed by certain gentlemen on the floor of the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Can the gentleman tell the House whether the Members who are bitterly fighting these bills represent coal districts or not?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know, and I would not make the suggestion if I did know, because I have never impugned any man's motives on this floor, directly or indirectly, and I never shall, because I have never found gentlemen on the floor of the House in whom I did not have confidence. I have seen a great many men here sadly misled, and they were often misled by the arguments of interested parties.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to.

Mr. FOWLER. I take it for granted that the gentleman does not contend that any man who wants to reserve a portion of the income from developed water power is connected with it in any way. I take it for granted that he does not make that imputation at all.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that I do not impute any improper motive to any gentleman on the floor of the House, never have, and never expect to, and certainly not to my friend from Illinois, for he is the most honestly mistaken man——

Mr. FOWLER. No; he is too poor.

Mr. MONDELL. He is the most frequently honestly mistaken man I have the pleasure of knowing.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask my friend further if he thinks it would be a mistake for the United States in granting these developments of water power to reserve to the United States Treasury or to the State treasury a certain percentage of the gross income?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is now getting down to brass tacks. He has finally gotten in the words "or to the State treasury," but the arguments that have been made here have been arguments made in favor of Federal control. The gentleman from Illinois made a suggestion awhile ago that reminds me of an occurrence when I was a boy. He is afraid, unless the Federal Government retains the power to regulate the charges and control these water-power developments, that the people are going to have to pay too much for the power. He proposes to help the people by bringing a large revenue into the Federal Treasury by taxing these water powers. That is his idea. He said that we could fix a charge which would bring much revenue into the Federal Treasury.

He reminds me of an occurrence when I was a boy. We had a little two-burr mill in the neighborhood in which I lived, and we boys used to carry a few sacks of wheat at a time to that old burr mill. The boys would go there of an afternoon and swim in the mill pond and catch sunfish while the old burr mill slowly ground out the grist. Finally a fellow came along from the city, with bear grease in his hair and wearing store clothes. He said to the old farmers that owned the mill, "I want to have the job of running your mill, and I will make a much better mill of it." "What will you do?" "I shall make the flour better." "The flour is good enough." "Well, I shall make more flour out of a bushel of wheat than you fellows are making." "But that is not very material, because what does not go into the flour goes into feed, and we feed it to our stock, and we need the flour and we need the feed for our stock, so it is not very material." "But"—and now he was getting to the point of the gentleman from Illinois—"But, gentlemen, let me run your mill, and I will make 10 pounds more flour out of every bushel of wheat, and I will leave the bran and the shorts richer." He would thus be saving at both ends. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] proposed to save to the people in charges upon these powers by turning a large revenue from the powers into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to say to the gentleman that the State of Illinois in 1854 reserved to the people of that State 7 per cent of the gross income of the Illinois Central Railroad, and to-day the Illinois Central Railroad competes with every other railroad in that State and pays 7 per cent of the gross income and is one of the best railroads not only in that State but in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have that splendid argument in favor of State's sovereignty in this discussion. The gentleman from Illinois is not now a member of the Illinois Legislature. He is a Member of Congress. If he were a member of the Legislature of the sovereign State of Illinois—sovereign in its control over these propositions within the State—it would be entirely proper for him to propose exactly what he is proposing with regard to these bills. But he is not. He is a Member of the American Congress, and what he is proposing to do is to shorten the sovereignty of the people who sent him here. There is nothing written in my commission from the people of Wyoming that gives me any authority to take from the sovereign power which they reserved unto themselves when they came into the Federal Union.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the National Government have control completely over the navigation of navigable rivers; and is it not a further fact that the State could not authorize the building of a dam across such a river without the consent of the National Congress?

Mr. MONDELL. We all know, as I have stated several times, that the Federal Government has control over navigable streams with regard to the matter of navigation, and in that respect alone. These bills contemplate that the State shall authorize its citizens to construct these dams, and all we can do—and all we ought to attempt to do—is to say that in the construction of those dams the navigability of the river shall not be interfered with.

On the Democratic side—and I find I have gotten over on that side of the aisle in my discussion of this question in order to point out to them how wrong some gentlemen are over here—what is proposed to do is to shorten and limit the sovereignty of the people with the States by placing or retaining or attempting to do, for I do not think it can be done constitutionally, in the hands of the Federal Government the right of control, which it does not and can not and ought not to have under the Constitution. If the Federal Government is to control in the matter of prices, in the matter of how these operations shall be carried on, as to what they shall do with the power, and how much shall be charged for it, then the towns and the cities, the municipalities, the counties, and the States using it are absolutely robbed of any of their power to control. The gentleman would take from the people of his city, from the communities of his State, that sovereign right which the Constitution gives them to control these organizations, and he would vest it with a Federal bureau. He would build up bureaucracy here, and he would take from the people he represents their right to control their affairs and protect themselves.

Mr. Speaker, it will be a sad day for the American Government, it will be a sad day for a self-governing people, when the sovereign States and the people within them must be saved from the extortions of local corporations by the strong arm of the Federal Government. When the time comes that the people within the States are so pusillanimous, are so careless of their rights, and are so derelict in exercising the authority which is theirs that we must be asked to protect them by the strong arm of the Federal Government, that day will mark the decline of the Republic.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman, I hope, does not include me when he speaks of the Democrats——

Mr. MONDELL. I never include the gentleman from Colorado, nor any man from any irrigation State, in matters of this sort because in that region these questions have been thrashed out and the people clearly understand their power and their authority and their jurisdiction.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say further that the gentleman is too sweeping in his charge against this side of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. I am excepting the gentleman from Colorado and his colleagues.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Would not he make some more exceptions, because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] this morning stated this proposition broader than I think it has been stated upon this side of the House, namely, that upon nonnavigable streams——

Mr. FOWLER. No, indeed; I desire to be quoted correctly—not on nonnavigable streams but on dams across navigable streams only.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois only proposes to protect the people partially, then.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to say to the gentleman from Wyoming I think his charge is too sweeping. I do not believe that the Democratic House is wedded to the proposition that there shall be levied a tax or a duty upon every locality of every natural resource as a Federal tax. I do not believe that that is the sentiment of the Democratic side of this House.

Mr. MONDELL. I should hope that the Democratic Party had not wandered so far from its ancient moorings, but I have been pained to see a number of gentlemen on the Democratic side who, following self-appointed and self-labeled champions of the people, are rising up and demanding that the authority and control of the Federal Government shall be so extended as to throttle the sovereign people and take from local communities rights which the Constitution guarantees them. Not only does the Constitution guarantee these rights but it is just and right and proper that it should, because the history of the world teaches us that any centralized Government eventually becomes a tyranny when power is taken from the people of the localities to control their own affairs.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to finish one sentence?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman never finishes a sentence.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). To take from the people the authority to control their own affairs. When you do that you are on the high road to centralized oligarchy.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Now will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not forget——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman must remember my time is limited.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. But the gentleman's memory is very good, but he does not forget that the policy that he is inveighing against originated in the Republican Party and originated through the ex-President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, wherever it originated, it is a dangerous doctrine, and would eventually take from the people the opportunity to protect themselves.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, I readily coincide with whatever he has said, and I have been pained to have people on this side of the House deny what we believe are rights to the western part of this country, but I am delighted to call the gentleman's attention to that plank of the Democratic platform at Baltimore, which is the most liberal plank toward the development of the western country that has ever been adopted by any political party, and I have the hope and belief that our standard bearer when he is elected, as I believe he will be, will carry out that plank.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a disappointment coming.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman, while he is calling attention to the Democratic platform, will call attention to the attitude of a considerable number of gentlemen on this side of the aisle in regard to the matter to which I am now referring, and that is a dreadful illustration of how soon a good many members of the party forget their platform.

Mr. MANN. I trust the gentleman will be a little careful in using the expression, "on this side of the aisle," because the gentleman is temporarily on the Democratic side of the aisle.

Mr. MONDELL. No one on either side of the aisle will ever charge me, whatever else I may be charged with, with belonging on this side of the aisle.

Mr. CANNON. On which side is the gentleman now standing?

Mr. MONDELL. On the Democratic side, with a view of calling the attention of gentlemen on the Democratic side to their shortcomings.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And talking Democratic doctrine.

Mr. MONDELL. Why, the good gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] wants Federal control on the plea he wants to protect the people of the local communities, and he proposes to do it by taking from them the authority they now have to protect themselves and lodging it in the hands of a Federal bureau at Washington.

If these limitations which he proposes have any force or effect at all, they will take from the communities and the municipalities and the people of the States the right to control their own affairs.

Mr. FOWLER. The same argument was urged against the passage——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CURLEY). The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has the floor unless he yields to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. MONDELL. I did not yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a moment ago, and I suppose as a matter of courtesy I ought to yield to him first.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has passed the place at which I wished to interrupt him, but I wish to call his attention to the fact that, in view of some of the remarks made on the other side of the aisle the other day, the gentleman from Wyoming did not feel quite at home now.

Mr. MONDELL. "The gentleman from Wyoming" never feels more at home than he does when he is defending a righteous cause.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the Federal Government has control over navigable streams in America?

Mr. MONDELL. I have answered that question, Mr. Speaker, several different and distinct times; and I say again, that for the purposes of navigation, and for those purposes alone, has the Federal Government control over navigable streams. Otherwise they are the property of the people of the sovereign States through which they flow. [Applause.] And all this argument alleged to be on behalf of the people is an argument such as the coal operators would make, or that the railroads would make, in regard to these same matters if they were trying to serve their interests. The effect of what is proposed is to take from the people the sovereignty they have retained unto themselves within themselves and attempt to place it in the hands of a Federal bureau. The world gives us numberless illustrations of the effect of that.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. Russia to-day is a fair illustration of what comes from placing in the hands of centralized Federal bureaus control over all the operations of localities and over the resources of the people in far distant provinces.

The gentlemen want to argue these power bills, and I hope the opportunity will be offered at some time in the future to argue them, because it will be very easy indeed to show that what the gentlemen propose who propose these limitations and these charges is not the protection of the people, but the taking from the people of their rights, their sovereignty, their jurisdiction, and lodging them in a Federal bureau. It will not relieve from the danger of monopoly. It is a plan of Federal controlled monopoly.

Mr. FOWLER. If you construct a dam across a river, navigable or nonnavigable, would you be in favor of securing then to the State a certain per cent of the gross income of that developed water power?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the State that I have the honor to represent has declared in its constitution that the people of the State are sovereign in their control over the waters of the State. This Congress is not called upon to reserve to citizens of sovereign States powers they have to make charges and assume control and regulation. If any gentleman out of excess of caution wants to write in the statute a provision that the people have a right to do that which they have the right to do, I do not know that anybody has any objection to that supererogation. It is absolutely unnecessary. There is not a State in the Union where these powers are established, where the State has not the right to control in any and all needful and necessary ways all of the operations which result from the building of these dams. And all we are called upon to do as representatives of the people of the States here in the Capitol of the Federal Government is to give the assent of the Federal Government to place a dam across navigable waters so as not to interfere with navigation. Why, the gentleman does not pretend that Congress has any power of control on nonnavigable streams, in which event we have this extraordinary condition of affairs, that the gentleman claiming to desire to protect the people of his State could not by the same measure give any protection to the people of my State. There is not a drop of water within the confines of the Commonwealth I represent that is navigable, even from the standpoint of the most fevered imagination seeking an appropriation on the river and harbor bill. Were our forefathers so shortsighted that they provided that the people might be protected by the Federal Government so far as navigable streams were concerned and, on the philosophy of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], left to the tender mercies of combinations of plutocrats, plundering them on the streams that are not navigable? The people have full power to protect themselves against extortion in either case, but they do not depend on the Federal Government for protection. In my opinion the whole affair of endeavoring to stampede Congress by the bugaboo of a power trust into the most extraordinary extension of Federal authority is the most extraordinary ghost dance ever started anywhere on earth. The arguments in favor of it on the floor of this House are, in my humble judgment, scarcely worthy of Representatives who ought to understand the Government under which they serve and the limitations of the great instrument which has made us the greatest self-governing people the sun ever shone upon. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wyoming has yielded the balance of his time to me, and I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] for the purpose of offering an amendment to the resolution. Then I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will move the previous question, so that we will not spend all day on this resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just about to make that motion myself.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say now that if that course is pursued, you will have to get a quorum, because the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] had an hour, and I desire to address the House. I have taken but little time of the House during this session.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me. This is unanimous-consent day. Of course anyone can prevent the consideration of these bills by unanimous consent, either by objecting or by taking time. It is absolutely immaterial to me. If the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] had not seen fit to close when he did, I should have made a point of order. His whole discussion was out of order. I do not think anyone desires to prevent these unanimous-consent bills being called up. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] can take his time in general debate at some other time.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to speak at this time on the question that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was discussing. I do not think it exactly fair for gentlemen to sit still and make no point of order when gentlemen may be consuming an hour, and then when somebody else asks the time of the House to interpose an objection.

I had intended to speak on this question, and it happens to be at a time when, under the unanimous-consent rule, these water-power bills are to be considered.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, this is not the consideration of a water-power bill, unless there is another water-power bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. SISSON. It happens to be on the calendar, where they propose, if possible, to pass these bills under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. COOPER. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is mistaken. There is another bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar providing for a dam.

Mr. MANN. There may be.

Mr. FOSTER. There are five or six of them.

Mr. MANN. They all went off the other day.

Mr. FOSTER. But they were all put back.

Mr. SISSON. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very important question in which the people of the country generally are very much interested, and I do not know of any question that would be of more general interest to every Member of Congress than the proper solution of this water-power problem.

Mr. MANN. I am quite willing, so far as I am concerned, to have it discussed at any time when we can vote on some proposition relating to it, or in general debate. If gentlemen desire to destroy unanimous-consent day, it can be done either by raising a point of no quorum or in another way by taking time.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] spoke for an hour without objection, and I would like to have the same treatment accorded to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I want to state to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], although I believe the suggestion has already been made, that the resolution under consideration has no relation to the discussion that has been proceeding here for some time.

Now, under the special order, bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar are in order to-day. Objection could have been made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] or by myself or by anyone else that the debate on the part of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was not germane, and we could have stopped thereby his discussion of the water-power question and in that way we could have resumed the discussion of the resolution pending. But I did not make that point of order for the same reason that I do not object to the request of my friend from Mississippi.

I make this suggestion now to the gentleman from Mississippi: I am always anxious and eager to hear him, but the further continuance of this discussion may consume the entire day and prevent the consideration of other bills that can not be reached except on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I shall be glad to have the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] reply to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. If he does not reply, I will do it myself, but if he does it, it will obviate the necessity of my assuming the discharge of that arduous task. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will not make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SISSON. You might sometimes cause the Unanimous Consent Calendar to be destroyed entirely by denying to one gentleman the treatment that he thinks he is entitled to. Now, I had no objection to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] discussing this important question. I did not object, and all the Members of the House permitted him to take the time of the House in the discussion of this question. Now, when other gentlemen want to have the same treatment accorded to them I find objection is made. I have no disposition to take any course except that which is a perfectly correct one.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was very glad that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in making his speech demonstrated one fact to the House. On the bill that was considered before this there was a reservation of the right to object. There was some discussion on it, and some of the gentlemen of the House became very impatient, they having bills on the calendar lower down, I presume, because there was some time taken on that under the reservation of the right to object, and they objected to that proceeding, and thereupon objected to the bill. I want to demonstrate to this House, so far as I can, that the proper way, on unanimous-consent day, when you want to have a bill discussed somewhat, is to reserve the right to object, so that it will not start a general debate that will take up the day, because then every Member knows that he can not have an opportunity, because he is speaking all the time subject to the reservation of the right of stopping at any moment.

Now, when this water-power matter comes up and the gentleman wants to make a speech he can do so. I disagree just as much with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] as does the gentleman from Mississippi. I want to talk about this subject of water power, and so do 40 other men in the House, but if we undertook to do so now and got through there would be nothing to vote for. So what is the use in doing it?

Mr. SISSON. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have no objection to the gentleman's demonstration. I myself want to make a demonstration, and that is of the fact that when you depart from these rules and do not follow them strictly, as judged by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and have the discussion on the reservation of the right to object, you open the door to the killing of unanimous-consent day. But I still insist that equal and exact justice should be done each and every Member of the House who desires the same right.

Mr. MANN. The only way to get equal justice is to let these gentlemen who have bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent have their bills reached if possible.

Mr. SISSON. That takes away from me the right that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] exercised.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Mississippi desires to take away a right that belongs to some other gentleman. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yields to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] to offer an amendment.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, I am very desirous, of course, to have this resolution passed, as it concerns many of my constituents, as well as many others.

I have had a conference with the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as with Dr. Neill, and also with the minority leader on the Republican side, and the suggestion has been made that in line 3, immediately after the word "representatives," the words "through the Bureau of Labor" be omitted. I offer that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 of the resolution, strike out the words "through the Bureau of Labor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] may proceed for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has the right to be recognized in his own time.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to my friend from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], but if I take the floor at all to-day I shall insist on taking it in my own right. Mr. Speaker, am I entitled to recognition at this time?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. There is no trouble about it. This bill is being considered in the House, and any gentleman who gets recognition has a right to speak in his own time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], however, did not exhaust his 10 minutes that was yielded to him.

Mr. MANN. I yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER], hoping that he will move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois lost the floor.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania he undoubtedly lost the floor.

Mr. FOWLER. He did not limit the time that he yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can yield it back to him if he wants to. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for one hour.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I listened with interest to the argument made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and in many things that the gentleman said I agree with him heartily. I agree with him fully about the right of the State to control her local affairs and concerns. We may differ as to a definition of the powers granted to the Federal Government under the Constitution and those powers to be reserved to the State.

All of these water-power projects may be divided into three classes.

First is the right of the Federal Government to build a dam with Federal money for the purpose of developing the navigability of a stream and, as an incident thereto, the development of water power.

Second, you may grant to a private individual or to a corporation——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman insists upon that point of order I shall have to state that I do not desire to discuss the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania at all.

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned, if the gentleman wants to make a speech for a short time, I shall not object, but I do not think the House ought to spend all the afternoon in discussing matters that can not be voted upon to-day.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not think I will consume more than 25 minutes.

Mr. MANN. There are a number of other gentlemen anxiously waiting for an opportunity to get the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON. I just want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois. I hope that he will not at this time press his point of order, for the reason that I do not want to see the consideration of bills on this calendar prevented, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has plainly——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I agree on that, but we disagree as to the method. I am satisfied that if we allow the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] to proceed out of order, nobody will then have the conscience to invoke the rule against the next gentleman, and I am satisfied that there will be a next gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. I appreciate very fully the situation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires a little time, I have no objection to that.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the anticipation of this situation prompted me to ask unanimous consent in behalf of the gentleman from Mississippi. I thought this point of order would come, and I am anxious that the gentleman from Mississippi be allowed to speak, and I renew my request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the request?

Mr. ADAMSON. That the gentleman from Mississippi be allowed to proceed for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. If anybody had raised the point of order against the gentleman from Wyoming, there would have been the same course that we are going through now and the same rule would have applied. In this kind of a situation, unless the House gives unanimous consent, anybody can compel a Member who has the floor to speak to the question before the House. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] have 30 minutes in which to address the House.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the request of the gentleman from Georgia and the purpose in asking unanimous consent that I may address the House for 30 minutes, but I ask to be permitted to address the House in my own right, as the gentleman from Wyoming did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Mississippi for one hour, and it was no business of the Chair what he was talking about; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raised the point of order, and then it became the duty of the Chair to rule on the point of order, which he did.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I simply state that I want to be permitted to speak as the gentleman from Wyoming did, and to discuss the water-power proposition. I have no desire to discuss the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. The request of the gentleman from Georgia was that the gentleman from Mississippi be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Under that request the gentleman would not have to confine himself to the resolution.

Mr. SISSON. "The gentleman from Mississippi" understands that perfectly, but he is endeavoring simply to get from the House exactly the same treatment that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] received. That is all I am asking for, and for that reason I am declining the courtesy of my friend from Georgia.

Mr. Speaker, unless I can get unanimous consent to proceed as did the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] I am ready to have the Chair rule upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the gentleman from Wyoming did not have unanimous consent.

Mr. SISSON. I understand. He talked, however, by unanimous consent, and without objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. But any gentleman could have objected.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wyoming was admonished privately before he closed that if he did not close soon he would be taken off the floor by a point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I will state that I was about to say the same thing.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman from Illinois had waited on me as long as he did on the gentleman from Wyoming before making the point of order that takes me from the floor, I should have been out of the way by now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is useless to waste so much time fooling around trying to determine whether the speeches are to be made. I ask the Speaker to submit the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield so much of the 30 minutes as he desires to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman can not do that.

Mr. SISSON. I do not desire to address the House under these conditions.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that under the consent granted the gentleman from Mississippi can not yield time.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amended resolution.

The question was taken, and the amended resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DIFENDERFER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

BEAM TRAWLING.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 173, providing for an examination by the Commissioner of Fisheries as to the destructiveness of the method of fishing known as beam trawling.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioner of Fisheries be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make an investigation into the method of fishing known as otter and beam trawling and to report to Congress whether or not this method of fishing is destructive to the fish species or is otherwise harmful or undesirable.

SEC. 2. That in the event that the Commissioner of Fisheries finds this method of fishing to be destructive, harmful, or undesirable he shall recommend to Congress such legislation as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 3. That an appropriation not exceeding $7,500 is hereby authorized for carrying into effect the provisions of this resolution.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to pass this resolution over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest this to the gentleman: I do not know whether there is any opposition to this resolution or not, but this item is included as a Senate amendment in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I so understand.

Mr. MANN. If there be no objection to the passage of the resolution—and I do not know whether there will be or not—that might be a warrant for the House conferees to agree to that amendment. Otherwise I doubt very much whether they would be warranted in agreeing to it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have no objection to considering it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this resolution be submitted to the House. I do not think there would be any objection to it. The Senate has added a provision to the sundry civil appropriation bill appropriating $5,000 to make this investigation. This proposition was pending before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and we had hearings upon it at two different dates. Many people from the New England coast who are interested in fisheries were here, and, after the hearings referred to, we concluded that we were not making any headway in the ascertainment of the real facts in the case. Hence it was agreed to by all parties in interest that this matter be referred to the Bureau of Fisheries for investigation and report to Congress, and this resolution authorizing the investigation and expenditure of $7,500 for that purpose was reported to the House by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The Senate amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill carries $5,000. I have had some conference with one of those who may be of the House conferees, and he understands the merits of the proposition. I do not think the conferees will object to the appropriation for this important purpose.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Very well, Mr. Speaker; I withdraw my request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if this carries an appropriation, I shall have to object. I do not know that the bureau has not money in some other fund from which to go on with this investigation. I do not know with whom the gentleman from Missouri conferred as one of the prospective conferees.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I conferred with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be. I would say that it is customary for the chairman of the committee to be one of the conferees.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I would have conferred with the gentleman, but his time is so much occupied that I did not have the opportunity.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, that is hardly justified.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we might pass the resolution and entirely strike out section 3, which is the one that carries the appropriation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not object to that, for if there be an appropriation for this purpose I think it ought to be provided in the manner in which we can keep track of it in the regular appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN. Can we not have an understanding that we pass the resolution and strike out section 3?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is agreeable.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects and the resolution will be stricken from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

COCONINO CATTLE CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6735) to authorize the exchange with the Coconino Cattle Co. of lands within the Coconino National Forest.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the Coconino Cattle Co. patent for the following-described 160 acres of land: The east half of the west half of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, west half of the east half of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, east half of the west half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, east half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, west half of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, west half of the east half of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 15; and the east half of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter, west half of the west half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, east half of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, west half of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and west half of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 22, all within township 17 north, range 4 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, in the Coconino National Forest: Provided, That before patent shall issue the said Coconino Cattle Co. shall convey to the United States by properly executed and duly recorded deeds, title in fee simple to the following-described land: The northwest quarter of section 3, township 20 north, range 6 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, in the Coconino National Forest: Provided further, That no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted by the United States until the Attorney General of the United States shall certify that a good and sufficient title to such lands is vested in the United States.

SEC. 2. That upon such acceptance by the Secretary of the Interior the lands so conveyed to the United States shall immediately and by force of this act alone be reserved and set apart as national forest land.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why should the General Government give to this cattle company this land that is particularly desired?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, it does not do that. The bill simply provides for an exchange within the national forest for lands which the Government desires.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the report makes the same statemnet, but the correspondence hardly justifies it. The report seems to imply that the Government is anxious to secure a certain tract of land and make this exchange in order to obtain it.

The truth is this cattle company has been occupying this tract of land under permit. The cattle company desires it, and the Department of Agriculture believes it would be a good place for a lookout station, if it took some other land not as valuable upon the report of the forester out there. Why could not the lookout station be erected on the land under the permit of the cattle company in the same manner that the cattle company now occupies this land?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will state to the gentleman it is not customary for the United States to build a lookout station or to make any other improvements except upon its own land. Lookout stations are located according to the altitude—that is, they are built on a high point of ground, so that the ranger can look out over the forest and locate forest fires. This land is chiefly valuable to the Government on that account.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a point covered with timber, and not valuable at all except for the timber, and the company has a very desirable location of agricultural land, which is proposed to be traded for this land.

Mr. HAYDEN. The amount of land involved is 160 acres in each case and in the same forest reserve.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the gentleman will permit me, the gentleman's conclusion in regard to the correspondence is wrong. I submit it is the reverse of the statement made by the gentleman from New York, and I will read part of it:

In view of the fact that the bill will authorize the exchange of the small described area wholly within a national forest for a like area also within the same forest; that the tract sought to be acquired is apparently desired for use by the Department of Agriculture as an administrative site and particularly as a lookout station for the protection of the national forest from fire, this department has no objection to its enactment.

The same statement is contained in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, so that it appears that the exchange is desired by the Department of Agriculture for the reason that has been stated so clearly by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I will read one sentence from another letter which the gentleman did not read:

The tract in the sections described in the bill to which the company desires to acquire has for some time been used by them as a stock ranch under permit from the Forest Service. The company has constructed improvements there which includes fences, cabins, a well, and a windmill. The land is agricultural in character and does not support any valuable timber.

Then, later on, he says:

I am informed by the district forester that the tracts are of equal area and approximately of equal value and that the proposed exchange will not prejudice national-forest interests. I therefore have no objection to the passage of the bill.

If the Department of Agriculture was seeking this legislation, the correspondence upon the bill would be very differently worded; whereas here it says that they would have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the form of the language, if the gentleman will permit, that is universally used by this department in reporting the bills referred to it by this committee, and the fact does appear from this statement and from the letter that the gentleman has read that the land is desired by the Agricultural Department for the purpose stated because of its usefulness for this purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They stated it would be a desirable place for a lookout station.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to suggest, further, to the gentleman from New York that the land being agricultural it can be entered by any homestead settler who obtains it from the Government without any charge whatever. The land which the Government trades has no timber and the Government gets the best of the trade, in my judgment, from the hearings had before the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 21, strike out the period and add the words "by said conveyance."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SEWER PIPE ACROSS FORT RODMAN MILITARY RESERVATION, NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15509) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a sewer pipe upon and across the Fort Rodman Military Reservation at New Bedford, Mass.

The Clerk read as follows

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the United States is hereby given to the city of New Bedford, a municipal corporation existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to locate, construct, and maintain a sewer pipe upon and across the military reservation of Fort Rodman in said Commonwealth, upon such location and in accordance with such designs and plans as the Secretary of War may approve and under such conditions and regulations as he may prescribe.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how far does this sewer go across the reservation?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I should think possibly 900 or 1,000 feet. The reservation is at the outlet of New Bedford Harbor, and it is impossible for the city to reach the harbor of the bay except through Fort Rodman Reservation.

Mr. SISSON. When you lay sewers across private property in Massachusetts do you pay any compensation for it?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I think not with public sewers. This is across a military reservation.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that; but in building sewers across private property in the State of Massachusetts do you have to pay anything for it?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It may be.

Mr. SISSON. Suppose a private individual should object to it, would you have to condemn it?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I suppose we would have to buy the right.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that this sewer is already built on an agreement that it may be used by the reservation for sewage purposes under a temporary permit subject to action by Congress.

Mr. SISSON. Does the Government get the free use?

Mr. MANN. It does.

Mr. SISSON. And without expense to the Government but maintained by the city of New Bedford?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Maintained by the city of New Bedford without expense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I object to that; I want the House to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15509.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15509, with Mr. SISSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15509, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15509) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a sewer pipe upon and across the Fort Rodman Military Reservation at New Bedford, Mass.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it has been read.

Mr. HAY. It has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that it be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SISSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15509, and authorized him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF UNUSED POST-OFFICE SITE AT PERTH AMBOY, N. J.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21888) providing for the sale of the United States unused post-office site at Perth Amboy, N. J.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to sell and convey the United States unused post-office site at Perth Amboy, N. J., at such time and on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interest of the United States, and to deposit the proceeds in the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21888.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 21888, with Mr. ROBINSON in the chair.

Mr. SISSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is recognized.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to state all of the divisions into which I would divide the water-power projects over which Congress would have control. The first class would be that class where the Government expends the entire amount of money necessary to construct the dam for the purposes of navigation, and as a result thereof water power is developed.

The other is where a private individual has permission from the Federal Government to build a water-power project across a navigable stream, at the expense of a private individual or a corporation. The other is the building or development of water power where the stream is not navigable, but where the water and the land belong to the Government, as, for example, in a military reservation.

In the discussion of this question, with reference to the rights of the State and the rights of the Federal Government, it is well to keep these three classes of cases in our mind. I maintain we do not entrench upon the powers of the State or the rights of the State when the Federal Government expends all of the money in building a dam necessary for the purpose of creating locks in order that navigation of the stream may be perfected; that it is any infringement on the right of the State for the Federal Government to dispose of that water power under such terms as Congress may see fit and proper; and that the proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Federal Treasury——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON (continuing). Because the people of the United States, as a whole, developed the water power and developed the value. I contend the Federal Government would have the right to give it to a company that would put in the turbine wheel or the necessary machinery, and determine the conditions upon which the private company might operate it.

Now I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman understand the proposition which he stated is not the proposition I was stating at all?

Mr. SISSON. I do not undertake to say that it is.

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment. The gentleman has stated the proposition of construction by the Federal Government at Federal expense and the sale of power thus developed. What I was discussing, as the gentleman well knows, was the authority of the Federal Government to place limitations on development of private parties.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman simply anticipates. If he will possess his soul in patience, I will reach the class of cases the gentleman was discussing. The gentleman from Wyoming, and I presume almost every man in this House, will agree that when the Federal Government spends the money out of the Public Treasury for the purpose of developing the water power the Federal Government would have the right to dispose of that water power as Congress might see fit.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi what authority the United States Government would have to develop water power in the States?

Mr. SISSON. I did not mean water power. It was a misuse of the term. I meant the development of a power for the purpose of protecting or advancing navigation on the streams, and the right to build the dam is the right that the Federal Government has over navigable rivers and over the harbors of the country.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Over the improvements of its easement.

Mr. SISSON. Now, as a matter of fact, if the Federal Government has the jurisdiction over the streams and spends its own money there, spends the money of all the people there, for the purpose of developing a navigable stream, which all the people of the country may use, as an incident thereto, it must necessarily and logically follow that the Federal Government ought to prescribe the law whereby people may use that power which has been developed by the expenditure of Federal money in a proper Federal function, because the Federal Government unquestionably has that right, and if, as an incident to building the dam for the purposes of navigation, benefit shall flow in the way of water power from it, it can be no infringement on the rights of the people in that locality to use that water under the rules and regulations laid down by Congress.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] if it is not one of the rights of a riparian owner to use the water that flows along the border of his land for the purpose of developing water power, subject to the easement of the Government to use the river as a highway?

Mr. SISSON. That is true; that if the Federal Government shall grant to a private individual, under terms, the right to build a dam across a stream, the riparian owner has the right to the reasonable use of it; the riparian owner in the State of a nonnavigable stream has also the right to use the stream, and the riparian owner below him on the stream has no right to complain, provided the use of the stream by the one above him is reasonable. He has absolutely the right to reasonably pollute the stream, but he has not the right to unreasonably pollute the stream. As to sawmills and dye factories and industrial plants and such institutions, the courts have held that where they pollute a stream to the extent that it is unsuitable for the use of man and beast that it is unsuitable for the use of the riparian owner below, and this rule applies in a State to a nonnavigable stream. The rule is the same on the navigable streams.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It being the duty of the riparian owner to make a reasonable use of his riparian rights, is it not also the duty of the Federal Government to make a reasonable use of the easement, so as not to obliterate the right of riparian owners and the rights of the State, to which those riparian owners are subject?

Mr. SISSON. I do not agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] that the only right the Federal Government has to a stream running between States or through States, if it is a navigable stream, is an easement. I believe that the Federal Government is absolute in the control of that river for purposes of navigation. I believe that the Federal Government's right is an absolute right. Now, if the Government shall do any damage to the riparian owner, the Federal Government has always, either by condemnation proceedings or by an agreement between itself and the riparian owners, to respond damages. But the right of the Federal Government is an absolute one. It exercises the right of sovereignty there, because it has the right to condemn private property along the banks for its use. Therefore the Federal Government's right to develop a navigable stream is an absolute right, and one that can not be denied by the State.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to trespass unduly on the gentleman's patience, but I want to ask him one more question. It is this: Would the erection of a dam and the creation of a large body of water above the dam by the Government warrant the Government in exacting payment for the taking of fish in that dam?

Mr. SISSON. No. I do not believe that the Federal Government should be prevented from charging a certain amount for fishing on its own property. If it is a trespass on the Government's property, the Government can regulate the use of the property without endangering the Government's rights to the use of the dam. The Government could not prevent a riparian owner fishing.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The right of the Federal Government is more than the possession of a mere easement. In the case suggested by my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], when the Government builds a lock and dam, the Government must become a proprietor and must itself be a riparian owner. It must itself own the land, and the Government can, on the land it owns, prevent anybody from fishing just as much as the riparian owner can.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is not my question at all.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that is the question. It was not the point I had in mind. There is no question but that a man can control water on his own property, but it is a different question as to whether the Government would have the right to control the fishing in a dam erected at the expense of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman's views and my own are alike in some things. I understand that the gentleman grants the right of the Government to charge for the privilege of use when the Government constructs a dam?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say that we have the right and ought to exercise the right when we grant a railroad authority to construct a bridge over a navigable stream?

Mr. SISSON. I see absolutely no reason why the Government should not, under the Constitution, exercise the right of control when it gives a license or privilege that is a valuable grant to a railroad. But I have not given any consideration to that question.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the contention that we have the right to do it, but the question with me is whether, at this time, we ought to exercise the right to charge in the construction of a dam or the right to charge in the construction of a bridge.

Mr. SISSON. I will take up that phase of the question in a moment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SISSON. I regret that I can not.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a question in connection with his remarks.

Mr. SISSON. I must decline, Mr. Chairman, because I want to proceed to the next point in my statement.

Mr. ADAMSON. Just a brief question.

Mr. SISSON. Well, I will yield, if the gentleman will make it very brief.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is this: Whether the gentleman does not think that under the general dam act the Secretary of War can exercise the power suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MANN. I think the Secretary of War has that power, but that gentleman preferred to talk about it rather than to act.

Mr. SISSON. I have that clause in the general dam act here, marked. It gives in express terms the right to regulate all tolls.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The provisions of the general dam act do not grant to the railroad an unconditional right to build a bridge across a navigable stream, but to-day the Government does grant the right and privilege to the railroads to build bridges across navigable streams on certain conditions, as set out there, one being that the Government may use the bridge itself, that it can use it as a post road, and carry troops across it; and then the Government imposes numerous conditions on the railroad company when it gives the company the privilege of building the bridge.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SISSON. I will ask the gentleman to be brief, as I want to get through.

Mr. CULLOP. If Congress has the right to authorize a dam to be constructed across a navigable stream, can it fix the terms on which it gives that right?

Mr. SISSON. I was endeavoring to discuss that when I started. That was the first proposition I laid down, that in cases where the Government expends its money in the construction of a dam and as an incident thereto develops water power, the Government has an unquestioned right to control that.

Now, the next clause that I would like to discuss is that where a private individual or corporation comes to the Government or gets permission of the Government under certain conditions to build a dam across a navigable stream. My position is that since the Federal Government has the jurisdiction of the navigable streams, and would have the right to control its own dams, if it built them itself, if it gives the right to another it has the same right to exercise the control not only over the dam, but the right to control, for the benefit of the people of the community and the protection of the public, the manner in which the corporation or individual uses that water.

If that were not true, you would have two separate jurisdictions in this matter. If you should go into the State court, or into the State legislature by a petition, and the legislature should endeavor to act, then the Federal court could intervene if the legislature in any way infringed upon any right or privilege which had been given to the individual or the corporation by the act of Congress. But if the United States should go into the Federal court, then the defendant company would contend that this was a matter over which Congress had taken no jurisdiction, over which it had not exercised its powers; and it being a legislative, governmental function and Congress having failed to act, the court could not.

I know there has been quite a discussion throughout this country about that twilight zone, where the State has a right to go up close to the Federal Government, and the Federal Government has the right to come down close to the State, but there remains a region, exactly how wide we are unable to determine, where the powers of the Federal Government cease and the powers of the State cease, and the lawyers talk about it as the twilight zone between the two jurisdictions.

My contention is that when the Federal Government builds dams of this second class, it ought by general law to prescribe, first the manner in which the dams shall be constructed, and second the maximum charges; because if you wait until all of these charters have been granted, it will be too late. Suppose, for instance, that the Federal Government should give a New Jersey corporation the right to build a dam across a navigable stream in the State of Arkansas or the State of North Carolina.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That can not be done without the consent of that State legislature.

Mr. SISSON. That is true. It can not be done without the consent of the State legislature; but whether the charter be originally a North Carolina one or a New Jersey one, it is absolutely necessary that the rights of the people should be conserved in the act of Congress that gives the right to construct the dam across the navigable stream; and I put no such narrow construction upon the jurisdiction of the United States as is placed there by many people. I do not believe that there is a double power there, or that the Federal Government exercises power over the stream for one purpose and the State for another. I believe the power is just as absolute when it gives the right to a private individual to build a dam as it is when the Government itself builds the dam. If that be true, it becomes the duty of the Federal Government to preserve and protect these valuable rights. I do not believe there is a mind that can now conceive of the enormous value that these water-power privileges will ultimately attain.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. SISSON. In one moment. Under improved processes of transmission it will be possible to carry across the country the power developed in the mountain fastnesses, and it may be sold to people in distant cities and in other States. Thus it will become subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, not only on account of the power being developed in a navigable stream but because the power so developed will be transmitted from one State to another, and in the sale of this power for the purposes of heat, light, and transportation the regulation of the Federal Government will be required. It may be possible that because of a charter granted on the upper part of a stream, close to a State boundary line, it may be impossible for a State below to exercise its rights, and thereby the people of that State be deprived of the water power, and if it is a navigable stream I say it becomes the duty of the Federal Government to prescribe the maximum charge that shall be made for power. [Applause.] Now I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has passed on from the place where I sought to interrupt him, but he has come back to a kindred subject. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in all the bills now pending which provide for a corporation chartered in one State securing the consent of Congress to construct a dam in another State they have been so safeguarded as to provide that it shall be done only when authorized by the State in which the dam is to be located. I desire, further, to suggest to my distinguished and eloquent and learned friend that whenever one of these dams is constructed and proceeds to extend its transmission line across a State boundary into another State, then the transmission from one State into another will give Congress jurisdiction over the charges and practices, regardless of what the States may have done.

Mr. SISSON. I think that is absolutely true, and for that reason it is important for us to consider this matter properly at this time. I do not understand how it is possible for the State government to put proper safeguards around the transmission and sale of power for the purposes of producing light, heat, and transportation in another State, and I do not believe it should be left to an individual State. I believe every individual or corporation that develops water power should be required to develop all the power of which any given stream is capable at that particular point, so that nobody may act as a dog in the manger. But when they have developed the last ounce of water power it is utterly inconceivable to me how it can succeed if one State can prevent another State from selling water power within that State. It seems to me that that is a subject which is essentially within the power of Congress to regulate. My reason for calling attention to these matters at this time is because modern water power is in its incipiency. The wildest imagination of the greatest engineer of the country can not tell what the development of water power may mean to our posterity.

Our Maker has lifted the waters up onto these great mountain heights, and they run down toward the sea. It has been possible for the imagination of man to conceive that every spindle, every drill, and all of the railroad and land transportation companies may be operated and run by virtue of this power; and since it is such a new field, I think Congress should make haste slowly in granting these charters in general terms unless they sufficiently safeguard the rights of the public.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. It is often a question as to what a navigable stream is and what it takes to constitute a navigable stream.

Mr. SISSON. I have no doubt the gentleman will ask me a very hard question if he asks me to define one.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose a company comes to Congress and asks permission to build a dam. It must be upon the theory that the stream is a navigable stream.

Mr. SISSON. Unquestionably.

Mr. SIMS. Can the parties which seek that permission of Congress and who get it be afterwards heard to dispute the power of Congress as to this particular stream? In other words, are they not estopped from raising that question?

Mr. SISSON. I think they would be estopped, and I think the courts would estop them; or if a Representative in the House or in the Senate should introduce a bill at the request of these parties and these parties then take advantage of their rights under that bill and expend money in accordance with the terms of the bill, they would be estopped to deny the jurisdiction thereafter of the United States Government in the premises.

Mr. SIMS. Then, if a dam were built on a navigable stream, as they usually are, with the right reserved to alter, amend, or repeal, could not the Secretary of War, under the power given him by the Constitution, have the dam removed as an obstruction to navigation?

Mr. SISSON. He could not, if there was an injunction against him, until it had been determined whether the party had violated the terms of the contract or agreement with the Federal Government.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not practicable and possible by spending money enough for the Government, by canalizing streams, to make almost any of them navigable?

Mr. SISSON. I think that may be true, but we must deal with the question as it now is, and just exactly how small a boat must be to be called a boat engaged in interstate commerce, and how often it must go up or down the stream to make it navigable, is a very, very difficult question to answer.

Mr. SIMS. It might be rafts or flatboats or anything of that kind, logs. It is all owing to what is meant by navigation.

Mr. SISSON. I think, however, a reasonable definition is about this: That it is such a stream as can be reasonably used during the greater portion of the year for boats sufficiently large to engage in interstate or intrastate commerce, and if it happens to be too small I do not suppose any court would ever declare it to be a navigable stream. There are, however, some who contend now that the Federal Government's right extends to the spring on the hillside, upon the theory that if you are permitted to divert the water from the small stream you thereby injure navigaion in the large stream, and there you find a conflict of jurisdiction again. But I take no such stock in that contention as that I would even give serious consideration to it. because I believe a stream must have a sufficient quantity of water by natural causes to make the stream navigable.

I had not intended to discuss the navigability of streams, I will say to the gentleman, although I had given the subject some thought.

Mr. SIMS. Congress has already passed a bill to buy up the mountain tops in New England and the South in order that they may gather in the clouds, with the hope that they may be condensed and that rain may ensue.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that I opposed that bill, and I do not believe that the Government should have gone into the purchase of the mountain ranges, but that has been done and is now behind us.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Is the gentleman familiar with the doctrine laid down by the Supreme Court in what is known as the Rio Grande Navigation case, in which the Supreme Court held that the upper portion of the Rio Grande River in New Mexico, away up in the mountains, was a navigable stream and under the jurisdiction of Congress, under the very doctrine that the gentleman stated.

Mr. SISSON. My own opinion, and my own views, of a great many questions are so far removed sometimes from the decision of the Supreme Court that in the discussion of a question here I am compelled to admit that is the law now, but I am not willing to admit that they have correctly announced the law, because I do not agree to that doctrine at all.

The other class of cases to which I would call attention would be very small, but we do have them here, and we have legislation which affects them. It is where the Federal Government owns the land around the stream, as, for instance, at an Army reservation. If the Federal Government owns the stream and owns the bank on either side and the water-power sites, and owns all the watershed on which the water falls, it has, of course, all of the rights that any riparian owner could have, and if it is a navigable stream they could have that additional control of the stream.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. That is a very interesting question which the gentleman is discussing about the navigability of streams. I want to ask just one question. Suppose that there were four nonnavigable streams, tributaries, that ran together and made a navigable stream. Does not the gentleman believe that Congress, having full power to protect navigable streams, can go to the fountainheads of those tributaries which make it navigable? In other words, must Congress sit by and permit a navigable stream to be destroyed?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is asking the very question which I stated would be a difficult thing to answer when the gentleman from Tennessee interrupted. I anticipated the gentleman from Tennessee injecting it into this discussion, but if the Federal Government has any power at all it has simply the right that all riparian owners would have, that those people living on either of those four streams would have, namely, the right to a reasonable diversion, the right to a reasonable use and to a reasonable polluting of that stream. I do not believe that the rights of the Federal Government over the streams can rise superior to the rights of the individual. Therefore, if the people of a State are reasonably using that stream, I do not believe the courts would ever hold that the people of the State or the riparian owners were violating any of the rights the Government would have.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an answer to that in the form of a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Mississippi remembers that the Constitution itself declares that the Constitution and all the laws made in pursuance thereof and the treaties shall be the supreme law of the land. Now, then, the Constitution gives the Congress the exclusive jurisdiction over navigable streams.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Then the interest of the general public in the navigability of the stream is paramount over the riparian rights.

Mr. SISSON. I do not understand that at all.

Mr. COOPER. The Constitution is the paramount law, and it declares it is.

Mr. SISSON. I deny the proposition absolutely. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Constitution specifically says the right of the Federal Government over streams shall be an absolute right—that is, over navigable streams. Now, since a navigable stream is made up of many other streams, the Federal Government having the same absolute right to exercise its authority that an individual would to exercise powers over his own land to preserve the navigability of the stream, would have the right to demand—I understand that is all the court held in the case in reference to the headwaters of the Rio Grande, although the people of the country were considerably startled at the extent of that opinion—but I think the only thing the court held in that case was that a reasonable use of the stream was always within the right of the riparian owners of a nonnavigable stream, and if they unreasonably polluted the stream, if they unreasonably diverted, if they took so much water out of it as to interfere with the rights, the sovereign rights, if you please, of the Government, as to affect navigation the Federal Government would have the right to go into court for the purpose of preventing such use of it. That is my construction and my contention of the right that the Federal Government has over the feeders of a navigable stream, and the Federal Government has only the same right that the other individuals have.

To illustrate, if A lives above B, he would have the right to a reasonable use of the water as it passes by his land and by his property, but if he puts it to an unreasonable use, if he unreasonably pollutes it, if he so diverts it that he injures B below, then B would have the right to go into court and stop A from the unreasonable use of the water. And I believe that is all the court intends in the case that has been just cited from the Rio Grande River. The Federal Government has no other right.

Now, as to what may possibly come out of all of this, none but the most poetic imagination can conceive. It is possible that every home may be heated, that our food may be cooked, that our goods may be transported, that our fields may be cultivated, that all of our factories may be run and our industries developed by this water power of the country and coal and other kinds of fuel may finally be superseded except where it is impossible to have the water power generated and be transmitted over the wires. Now, since this is such a very great question, I am unwilling as a Representative of the American people, I am unwilling as a Representative sent here by a constituency, not to legislate alone for that constituency, the fourth congressional district of Mississippi. Thank God, my views are not bounded by my district. I see the gentleman who represents the district in which Niagara Falls is situated—it is just as much my duty to represent his constituents as it is my own. It is just as much my duty to exercise my best judgment in every vote I cast in reference to a matter which affects the people of the Pacific and the Atlantic coasts as it is upon the Gulf coast, where I live, and no man should hold his representation here so narrow that he does not look beyond the boundaries of his own district. A gentleman spoke of these people who were unwilling to let all of this wonderful power pass into the hands of a few people and want it properly safeguarded, and said that it might be well to look into the congressional districts and ascertain how much coal these people had.

Not an ounce of coal is mined in my district. I do not believe there is an ounce of coal in my district. I do not believe there is an ounce of coal, certainly not an ounce that is minable, in the State which I represent in part. I believe my State has as little water power to be developed as any State in the Union. There are very few streams there upon which water power can be developed, but I take no such narrow view of this question that I would be willing for the Federal Government to surrender its rights to corporations in the State of Colorado, in the State of Montana, in the State of Arkansas, or the great Carolinas or Virginia or Tennessee, where they have great water power. I am unwilling that the State should give a charter to an individual or to a corporation, and after the rights of that corporation shall have been established or the rights of the individual shall have been established that that right should be one which could be sold to another corporation engaged in the same line of industry. I am unwilling that this power should be granted so that A owning water power in one State and B in another and C in another that A, B, and C might sell their rights to D. I am unwilling that these rights given to men shall be transferred unless there is a sufficient safeguard to prevent the complete monopolization of all of this power. Why, in some instances in some sections of the country 1 horsepower is worth $40. In another section it is worth $24, and I do not believe I found upon my investigations that a horsepower is worth less than $24 in any section of the country when produced by the cheapest kind of fuel, and yet it is possible to build a dam where the overhead charges per horsepower will be less than a dollar a year and where the labor in order to generate it will not be more than a dollar a year to keep this horsepower in operation for 12 months, and, as the Indians would say, as long as grass grows and water runs, with the most infinitesimal amount of maintenance the mighty resources which belong to all the people will be controlled in the hands of a few stockholders and one of the mightiest power trusts in the world will be created, and, my friends, I am unwilling as an American citizen to see all of these resources squandered. I want them safeguarded with the greatest care. My friend from Wyoming said he would like to see whether or not some gentlemen were not influenced by some overweening power or influence outside of Congress which blinded their judgment.

I want to say to my friend that there is just as much reason to say that the minds and the hearts of people will be influenced by these men who hang around the lobbies of this Capitol and up in the galleries [applause], asking men to vote for these innocent water-power propositions when Congress shall not have had an opportunity to know how much of value they are granting. Why are they so anxious about it? I find here now numbers of gentlemen who are interested in asking me to vote for water-power sites, but, God bless you, I have not found anybody that ever approached me asking me to vote against the bill. [Applause.] If there be influence around this Capitol for the purpose of securing legislation, it is on the part of people who are anxious to get these mighty values. If it was not so valuable, if there was not so much of power in the future—and, by the way, I do not mean water power there, but I mean power that enables them to become financial powers in this country—if it was not so valuable, do you believe that these men would come from their homes, do you believe that they would stay here for weeks and for months endeavoring to get these matters through Congress?

Now, I have no criticism to make of these gentlemen. I think they have the right, so long as they do nothing but argue the proposition, so long as they do nothing but discuss the proposition, to come in the interest of that legislation that they may desire, and appeal to the good judgment of Congress to pass it. I would not criticize them nor the men who vote in favor of these water-power projects, nor would I criticize the man who conscientiously endeavors to do his duty against the proposition. I do not believe my good friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] really meant that there was any railroad influence or any coal-mining influence behind these men who are making the fight to conserve the water power of the country.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows that the present Secretary of War has advised concerning a similar bill against its passage because it did not include in it a provision making a charge for compensation to the Government for the granting of the privilege, and also because it did not have a provision in it authorizing the General Government to control the sale of the product or limiting the price after it had been established?

Mr. SISSON. That is my information, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to read to the gentleman, if he will permit, what the Secretary of War said on that subject, and it will only take a moment:

> There is no provision in the inclosed bill providing for any compensation to the Federal Government in return for the grant of the privilege, nor is there any provision made to reserve to the Federal Government the right to control the charges for the water-power service to the consumers in default of adequate regulation on the part of local authorities to protect the public interest. I believe that these are important defects in the bill, and without their correction do not recommend its passage.
> It is improvident, in my opinion, to allow the entire cost of the future improvement of this river, if made, to fall upon the general taxpayers of the country, when that burden could so easily be reduced by exacting proper compensation for the water-power privileges granted on the river by the Federal Government.

This was a Tennessee dam. Now, I want to say this——

Mr. SISSON. My time is coming rapidly to a close. Make the question short.

Mr. CULLOP. It is stated that the War Department now is invested with this power, and yet here is the Secretary of War disclaiming that it has that power, and asking that it be incorporated in a bill which was up for consideration here some time ago.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; one question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Secretary of War in that letter did not mention the general dam act, and every report of this committee has been that if he would take the general dam act he would find authority for him to do everything he insisted on, and all he had to do was to do it.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, I am not going to settle the controversy between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that each generation that will come after this will be infinitely more interested in this question than the present one. As the coal and the timber become scarce this water power is going to become necessary, and as it gets more necessary it shall become more valuable. When Congress thought that land in this country was so plentiful there would be too many homes for the people, they were then clamoring to get people to take up homes and live on the land, and now we awake to the fact that all the best lands in the country have gone into the hands of private individuals. Millions of acres belong to men who were building railroads in the West. Millions of acres belong to men who have organized lumber companies, and people are clamoring for lumber out of which to build homes. And the American people find that a few men own the mighty redwood forests of the West.

We find down in my own State that a few men and a few organizations control, from Georgia to Texas, the finest belt of timbered land on this globe. It is in the hands of a few people, and they are dictating the enormous price to the home builders in this country. That land has been squandered because Congress was too anxious, because these galleries have in them men who wanted to develop the mighty West, who wanted to make it great, and now we find the vast domain, over 600,000,000 acres, has been given away to railroad companies. And the result is that the American people now are paying vast sums for these homes. Will Congress take warning? Do not act too hastily.

Let this particular water-power project and all projects of water power be developed slowly. Have a law passed, a general law, providing that every man in the world who wants to bid on this water power can go on the open market and know what he is doing, know what is required of him, and providing that every man may know the maximum price that he may charge to the public for this water. Give every man an opportunity, but in God's name, give your own posterity in this free Republic, give them all an equal chance and an equal opportunity. That is the highest duty that devolves upon a Congressman here, and let us put our hands to the work. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question of the gentleman before he sits down.

Mr. SISSON. I promised to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER], and I shall do that now, and suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he can have some time later.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, the granting of water-power privileges to private corporations is evidently becoming a very live question. I am considerably interested in and have given some thought to this question; and it is quite apparent, from the interest that is manifested here in the debate and the general difference of opinion as to how these grants should be made, that we ought to go, as I believe, a little slow in granting any of these privileges to private parties.

I do not believe, from the difference of opinion that is apparent, that we are at present ready to grant these immense and valuable franchises to private corporations—corporations that we know little about. We do not know whether they are capable of constructing these great works or not. Some people go so far as to say that in most of the instances the influences that are creating these water powers are the same as those known as the Water Power Trust.

I refrained from taking part in the discussion on House bill 25069 on Thursday last, for the reason that I desired to obtain all the information possible in the matter of that bill, as well as the omnibus bill now before the House and the other bills which have been recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The seriousness of the conditions that confront us to-day is pointed out in the report of the committee on one of the present bills. On page 8 of the report is the following:

> The Corps of Engineers and the President are not in accord with the Secretary of War in his demands, and the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers is favorable to those eight bills; therefore, we have not seen proper to adopt the recommendation of the Secretary of War, but reported the bills permitting the construction, maintenance, and operation in accordance with the general dam act, as amended in 1910.

It is clear from the reading of this statement that we have here the President of the United States and the Engineering Department differing with the Secretary of War. We have more; we have the uncertainty which is stated by the committee itself, in which they use the following language on the same page:

> While we wish to give effect to the all-powerful arm of the Government in the exercise of its legitimate functions, we wish carefully to guard the exercise of those functions so as to prevent the infliction by such exercise and incident thereto of harm and injury to property rights and the personal rights of the citizens of the country, being careful not to impair activities of the General Government, local responsibility, or local authority.

Here, then, we have in a nutshell a great difference of opinion, as stated by this committee, and the necessity for urgent action here is simply an excuse, as they state there—

> That these matters should not be delayed on account of notions of particular individuals, who have, perhaps, never given the subject that consideration which might lead them to a different conclusion. It is believed that none of them is obnoxious to any of the objections raised; that no alarm need be felt as to granting the consent of Congress pending the consideration of amendments to the general dam act.

Clearly, then, the consideration of these matters is quite germane at this time, and no speedy action should be taken here without a thorough understanding of the conditions that confront us, notwithstanding the suggestions of this committee.

The other day, when we were considering the general maritime law protecting the rights of our mariners, an amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], which exempted the Great Lakes from the application of the law. In that discussion it was brought out that the great interests making this suggestion of exempting the Great Lakes and our inland streams was none other than the powerful influences of the railroads, who owned and controlled, together with the steel company, the larger number of boats operating on the Great Lakes.

Here, if we analyze the people back of these bills and calmly ask ourselves the question, "Why the necessity of speedy action?" the conclusion is irresistible. The same forces that sought to exempt lake navigation from the perilous hazards sought to be remedied are to-day seeking to give away these rights belonging to the public for their corporate gain, and the argument is used that men are not informed, owing to the arguments and disputes that now exist, concerning where this authority shall be placed, in the State or in the Nation.

All concede the desirability of protecting the public; even the chairman of this committee, Mr. ADAMSON himself, says that there may be a question, but he sees no necessity for embodying certain suggestions made by the Secretary of War.

I am not a lawyer, nor am I versed in the law, but from my experience as a member of the city council in the city of Chicago for a number of years; a member of the school board, and now a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of this House, I am frank to say that these bills are not right; they look suspicious to me, and in view of the grave doubts that exist I can see no reason for pushing them at the closing hours of this session of Congress. I believe that a committee should be appointed, not only Members of this House, but also outside authorities, who have studied these problems and are conversant with the present efforts made by certain combinations to take possesion of all the water rights in the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no desire here to question the motives of any man who is a Member of this House, and I am satisfied that he is acting in good faith, yet when I tell the story of conditions in my State and the awful consequences that have followed from it, I am inclined to think that he should be as anxious for delay as I am in this matter. The argument is used in support of this contention, and I call attention to it from the language of this report on page 9, that if the provisos recommended by the Secretary of War were embodied in this bill, "that such provision would produce such uncertainty as to render it impossible to finance an enterprise." This language is sufficient, in my judgment, to say that the parties back of this bill are either fictitious, who desire to get a corporation on paper, or to have this paper corporation backed by the gigantic corporations representing here not less than $40,000,000.

Why the necessity for affording an opportunity to these corporations on paper at the closing hours of this session of Congress to speculate with public properties and domains? I say and repeat there is no occasion for this speed, for this matter must be tied and nothing should be done now.

The matter of the application of the great power companies at Niagara Falls in seeking to obtain an additional flow of water of 4,400 cubic feet per second over the amount now taken by them under our treaty with Great Britain has not been disposed of. This matter is now pending before the Committee on Foreign Affairs; nay more, it was attempted before this same committee to extend the Burton Act to only last May, but upon a full hearing of the matter before this committee, as well also before the committee of the Senate, the Burton Act was extended by the act of both this House and the Senate until May 1 of next year. This was done, as was stated on this floor, in the interests of the United States and its inhabitants, because this body was not sufficiently informed as to wisely pass upon these questions until further information and data could be obtained.

So here a like condition exists, and, it seems to me, with the information before us, and with the matters in dispute as they are, nothing should be done here save alone the appointment of a committee composed not only of Members of Congress, as I have stated, but others qualified to give the information requested, not only from a legal but also from a practical standpoint, and thereby conserve the interests of the inhabitants of the United States irrespective of locality.

CONDITIONS IN ILLINOIS.

In stating conditions in my State, and in submitting the detail as to these conditions, I desire to acknowledge my indebtedness therefor to the Hon. Edward T. Cahill, of the city of Chicago, whose personal efforts to preserve the rights of the inhabitants of the United States have been commended by the Legislature of the State of Illinois, and who, of his own volition, brought the State of Wisconsin into the suit of the State of Illinois to protect for the inhabitants of the United States and their rights in the Illinois Valley. And from this data, so collected by him, I wish to state that the taxpayers of the city of Chicago, through the sanitary district pursuant to acts of the State legislature in 1888 and 1889, have burdened themselves with the expenditure of not less than $65,000,000 to solve the sewage problem in Chicago as well as aid and assist in building a waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. Upon the completion of this canal and the flow of water therein it was found that a large flow, increased by the diversion of the waters from Lake Michigan, made it possible to use not only this extra flow but the natural flow of the waters that made the Illinois River and its branches, the Des Plaines and Chicago Rivers, one of the most attractive water sites in the world. Chicago, having dug this vast channel at the enormous expenditure mentioned, petitioned the State legislature in 1903 for permission to erect a water plant at the southern extremity of the canal. This permission was granted, and the right to dam the same was given the sanitary district. Following this, the sanitary district at an expense of over $1,000,000 erected a plant, and this plant to-day furnishes illumination not only along the lines of its canal from Chicago to Joliet but also furnishes to the city of Chicago a large portion of light for its arc-light system, as well as to private owners, electric power at greatly reduced rates, and it is the intention of the city of Chicago to utilize this water power in public interests, and to furnish sufficient light and illumination for the Chicago River, its branches, and outer harbor.

Following this application, and the success of this movement being assured, it was further found that between the points of Lockport and Utica, a distance of 61½ miles, there was another fall of water of about 150 feet, making it possible to develop within this stretch a water power aggregating 100,000 electric horsepower, worth approximately $25 per net horsepower, or $2,500,000 per annum. This would constitute an enormous increase in the revenues of our State. This matter was sifted and discussed pro and con. An additional act of the legislature was passed, authorizing the expenditure of $20,000,000 for the extension of the deep waterway for this distance, and also including here the development and the use of this power so to be created.

Our State had then realized, as Congress should now realize, the great opportunity at its own door. Now, what happened?

Precisely the same as here, a corporation sought to grasp the most valuable site within this stretch. It made application through the War Department, and a hearing was granted, and I regret to say that the President of the United States, William H. Taft, then gave expression to a sentiment which is consistent with his present attitude of approval of these bills in that he, as Secretary of War, said he saw no objections to allowing the representatives of the powerful power companies to proceed with the work. How farsighted and farseeing was this act of Secretary Taft is apparent when we come to examine the brief of one Rome G. Brown, Esq., attorney for the Niagara water-power companies, now made a public document, by direction of the Senate, on page 70 and 71 thereof, wherein he argues that the Federal power can have no application here, quoting the language of Secretary Taft, as used by him when he granted permission to carry on the work in the Des Plaines River without Federal restrictions, as a basis for his—Brown's—argument.

What has followed?

By this act of Secretary Taft and the action of the Engineering Corps of the United States, the State of Illinois has been obliged to expend nearly $500,000, and will be obliged to expend much more in the protection of the public interest here, through the carelessness and want of proper knowledge on the part of the then Secretary of War.

In the State of Illinois these gentlemen, claiming to be prompted by public interests, and with a desire to harness these vast forces of nature so created artificially by the diversion of the waters of the lake and in the manner mentioned, proceeded forthwith to procure the boundary line of every portion of this stream, embracing two full counties, and started to erect their plant at Dresden Heights, when the State of Illinois was obliged to stop the erection of this dam and save the waters for the public use.

Following this a kind and obedient public body, known as the Illinois and Michigan Canal commissioners, gave away these valuable vested rights of the public for a period of 20 years, with the right of an option for 20 years more, for a nominal consideration. It was not discovered for some time who was back of this plan, until the deeds had been signed and the rights of the people given away. Then it was found that the parties back of this were the combinations of capital who undoubtedly are now back of the present bills, and this nominal consideration was insignificant for the grant by the State of Illinois as it was found to be a valuable right, extending into vast millions of dollars.

I now call your attention to statements which are incontrovertible, showing how this power company in Illinois was incorporated for $1,000 April 29, 1910. When these rights, presumably granted for public interests, were in their control these same people increased their stock from $1,000 to $6,250,000, and on June 18, 1910, filed in the recorder's office of Lasalle and other counties, including Grundy County, where this proposed power plant was to be erected, a bond of issue of $10,000,000. Can there be any question who is back of this? Can there be any question, in view of this, who is back of the measures now being pressed before Congress?

Can you conceive of a greater and more outrageous act against public interests than these acts, heralded as for the public good? Yet the moment these franchises are obtained they are worth millions upon millions of dollars, and the people are powerless to find relief from these grasping combinations.

Had Secretary of War Taft taken the precautions when he was Secretary of War as is now being taken by Secretary Stimson the present and future would have been provided for and the interests of the public, and not those of private persons and corporations, conserved.

The matter of the Economy Light & Power Co. litigation is now before the Supreme Court of the United States upon an appeal from the State Supreme Court of Illinois, and the same questions are raised there—as to whether or not these matters in dispute are for the State or Nation to determine. The matters now being discussed by us are discussed there, and the real issue will soon be determined and the responsibility will be assumed by the Supreme Court of the United States, who alone can determine these issues. Had we not better await the decision of the Supreme Court, when this case is on its docket, than to hurry and do another wrong to public interest?

The enormity of the act involved in the passage of these bills can only be realized when we stop to consider what I have related transpired in my State and how far-reaching they are and were.

The public press justly raises its voice against the passage of these bills, and I desire to make a part of the RECORD editorials which I shall read, taken from the great Chicago dailies—the Chicago Tribune and the Daily News. They plead for the public. They point out the evil effects of the proposed grants that you are about to pass, giving these private corporations unheard-of powers and the right to accumulate for years to come the future bounty of the inhabitants of the United States.

[From the Chicago Tribune, July 27, 1912.]

Capitalists desiring a power site induce a local community to believe that they must be encouraged to invest and that thereby the community will prosper. Citizens, naturally eager for prompt development of their property and of local resources, do not try to get the best terms, do not look into their own future to see if they may not regret their liberality, as thousands of other communities have, do not consider the rights of later generations. So they are cajoled and bluffed. They urge their Congressman to get the grant, and unless he is exceptionally courageous, disinterested, and farseeing, he obeys them without protest.

That our resources should be developed promptly every conservationist will concede—developed promptly, not recklessly. There is no power company that can not afford to submit to fair regulation of its monopoly. There is no community that has a moral right to waste its present resources for its own benefit, at the cost of the generations to come. We are trustees for them and are bound to use and not to abuse our possessions which are also to be theirs.

But this is a doctrine of the general good and it stands little chance of recognition in that game of congressional politics in which broader considerations of national welfare go down before the profitable alliances of personal interest. Only the strongest leadership, which has aroused public opinion to the greater issues, can check this process.

[From the Chicago Daily News, July 27, 1912.]

GIVING AWAY WATER-POWER SITES.

Reports from Washington indicate that the House of Representatives has taken a step which may seriously embarrass Congress in its future regulation of water-power development on navigable streams and on nonnavigable streams in the public domain. The House, it appears, has approved a grant on too liberal terms to a power company which plans to build a dam across the White River in Arkansas. This grant threatens to open the way to many similar ones, the grantees not having to pay compensation for the benefits obtained nor to submit to adequate regulation.

It is reported that an omnibus bill has been prepared making 16 more grants to various persons or corporations in different parts of the country.

Liberality in fixing terms for the development of hydroelectric power on waters under Government jurisdiction is desirable in order that capital may be thus invested, creating valuable property of lasting benefit to the public. Still Federal officials are agreed that these resources should not be given away, but that if Government supervision and regulation are not maintained control should be delegated to States or local governments.

In his message to Congress, December 6, 1910, President Taft recommended either direct leasing of Government water-power sites for a period not to exceed 50 years upon a proper rental and with a condition fixing rates to be charged, both rental and rates to be subject to revision every 10 years, or grants to the States of the privilege of leasing water powers on similar terms. Kindred recommendations to "protect the interests of the investor and of the public" were made by Secretary Fisher, of the Department of the Interior, in his annual report last year. The former Commissioner of Corporations, Herbert Knox Smith, in a report issued last March, advocated the rental system. This recommendation was strengthened by facts and figures which he gave to show a tendency toward a great monopoly in the hydroelectric field.

That this field should be developed without undue delay will be generally conceded. That the Government should encourage the development is equally plain. But reasonable and fair encouragement hinges upon the adoption by Congress of a fixed policy similar to that outlined by the national administration. Lacking such legislation, Congress would err in making promiscuous and unrestricted grants of water-power sites.

It is apparent from these editorials, the statements made by me showing the conditions in my State, and other conditions pointed out by Members on this floor that we should move with caution here, for the most serious questions are at issue—questions awaiting the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, questions that no man or set of men can with intelligence determine at this hour—affecting the rights of the people, for which it is conceded on the floor of this House by every Member that his object is the conservation of public interests.

As I said in my opening, we should do nothing at present but seriously consider the appointment of the proper committee or commission to collect the proper information required to make an intelligent disposal of these great and valuable rights and to determine the agency which shall protect the public interest. The question of a reasonable rental or charge for the privileges granted should be considered, and the Government should reserve the right to control the charge for services to the consumer, and should afford to the State and her municipalities the right to use, free of charge, for her public bodies these water powers as it shall elect; but any revenue derived from private use, either through State authorities or Federal control, shall be used solely for the improvement of the stream upon which the dam is situated or its tributaries.

My object and intention is not to restrict but to develop the great possibility of water-power resources, for its usefulness is yet unknown and its possibilities beyond comprehension.

Everyone who has had experience in the councils of our great cities knows what an injustice it is to grant privileges to private corporations without proper compensation and control by the granting parties.

These great power rights are of immense value to the people, and we should consider well this question before giving away to private companies and thus preventing all the people from sharing in this great future possibility.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to talk an hour simply because I have got the right to do so, but I want to refer to a matter that I wish Members would think about. We are having bills coming before the committee of which I have the honor to be a member with this kind of a representation: "Here is a navigable stream on which there should be an improvement for purposes of navigation." In other words, there is a proper demand for the expenditure of public money to improve a real navigable stream, as in the case of the Keokuk Dam, to which attention was called the other day. Now, the private company or private corporation says, "We will build the improvement that the Government would have to build in aid of navigation. You have to build dams in order to make slack water in aid of navigation on a real navigable stream. But if you will give us the right to improve this river for purposes of navigation, there will incidentally be created a water power, and if you will give us the benefit that will grow out of the water power we will make the improvement of this navigable river under the supervision of the Government through the engineers of the United States Army and will do just what the Government requires us to do."

Now, on the face of it, that looks like a very desirable thing. It looks like something that is in the public interest—to let somebody take their money and improve our rivers for us and not charge us a cent and do it exactly as we authorize and direct it shall be done.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague will permit, I will say to him that one of my bills now, which is included in the omnibus dam bill, makes a case similar to the one the gentleman is discussing.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman's bill proposes to improve a navigable stream at the expense of a company and save the Government from the expense of improving it and maintaining it——

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; for all time; expending $3,000,000 for the construction of the locks and pledging itself to the perpetual maintenance thereof at its own expense.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and giving the company the profit to be derived from all the power developed.

Now, take the case mentioned by my colleague—a case about which I do not know anything personally—where the Government of the United States would be saved the expenditure of $3,000,000 which it otherwise would have to make for the improvement of the navigable stream. But the water-power value, when created there, will be worth $6,000,000. I do not know that that is the case in the instance cited by my colleague, Mr. AUSTIN, but suppose a private corporation or a private party makes an investment of $3,000,000 and thereby saves the Government an expenditure of $3,000,000, or an investment of that amount, and secures to the private party this $6,000,000 benefit?

Now, according to what Congress has done heretofore we have held that wherever the Government improves a navigable stream for the purpose of navigation, and water power results therefrom, the Government is entitled to dispose of that water power for the benefit of the public. The question comes up right there, as stated by my colleague. It is an interesting matter to me, I being on the committee having charge of these matters. Should the committee create by Government authority an enterprise worth $6,000,000 by relieving the Government from the expenditure of $3,000,000?

The theory used to be—at least I have heard it claimed—that the Government has no interest at all in anything connected with rivers except navigation, and that whatever it does it must do in the interest of navigation, and whatever results from it by way of water power does not go to the Government under any circumstances. But we have got away from that so far as Congress is concerned. We are now selling what the Government has created by an expenditure of money, not made for that purpose, but incidentally growing out of it.

Now, does not that question arise when the gentleman's company comes before our committee and asks to be allowed to improve a real navigable stream for purposes of navigation, and proposing to maintain it for all time to come by giving it the financial benefits growing out of the water-power rights thus created for all time to come? When it appears to us that the water power is worth twice as much as the cost of the improvements, is it or not our duty to make the improvement directly by the Government and thus secure the resulting financial benefits to the Government? That is the question that arises with me often, as a member of the committee, as to what we ought to do.

Is it not wise in such a case to make the improvement by the Government and retain the water-power benefits to the Government rather than exchange the water-power values for the cost of the improvement? It is hardly conceivable that private capital will offer to relieve the Government of the expense of improving the navigable stream in exchange for the water-power benefits unless the water-power benefits exceed in value the cost of improvement.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. I would rather the gentleman would answer one than ask it. I would be glad if he would answer the one I asked.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is indirectly relevant to the gentleman's statement. Does the gentleman think that under the procedure of this House we are apt to arrive at any intelligent and definite policy when we have two committees of the House with jurisdiction of the same subject matter?

Now, the gentleman tells of these bills that are referred to his committee, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], his colleague, wants to improve a river down in Tennessee, and introduces that bill which ought, it seems to me, to go to the one committee in this House that has jurisdiction of the improvement of the navigable streams of the country.

But it depends entirely on just how the bills are worded whether they will go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors takes up the whole subject of the improvement of the rivers in the country by locks and dams, and so forth, and thrashes out that whole matter, and the first thing they know they wake up some bright morning and find that a bill has been reported to the House by another committee of the House proposing to build locks and dams in that river upon perhaps an entirely different scheme of improvement. I do not know that it is entirely pertinent to this discussion, but it occurs to me that if we want ever to have a definite policy in reference to these matters we ought either to abolish the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and let the jurisdiction that they now have go back to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, where it originally was, or we ought to take away from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the jurisdiction that they now have over navigable streams. I ask the gentleman if he does not think that would make for harmonious and intelligent legislation?

Mr. SIMS. It might result, of course, in bringing the two questions together, as to the improvement of the rivers and the disposition of the financial benefits that might flow therefrom to the Government; but from what I have seen in some instances before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I have the fear that persons who want to create water power rather than to improve a navigable stream will come and assail the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and advance as an argument the great benefit that it will be to improve the river for the purposes of navigation, while all the time they will hold back the idea which really moves them, namely, to create water power; and after they get the Committee on Rivers and Harbors thoroughly committed to the improvement for purposes of navigation and everything necessary for navigation purposes has been done, then the gentlemen who have been agitating the thing will come in and say, "Here, you are going to create a water power that will be of vast benefit, and we will make this improvement which you have authorized if you will only agree that we may have the resultant water power." I do not know but that the question of the disposition of the water-power benefit might well go to another committee.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It occurs to me that if there is danger of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors being bunkoed into doing these things, then the wise thing for Congress to do is to take away from that committee the jurisdiction which it has and send it back to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and let that committee have it all, but not have two separate committees working.

Mr. SIMS. I do not want the gentleman to think for a moment that I said they were bunkoed. They did exactly what they were asked to do in the interest of navigation, but the parties who asked it had something in their minds beyond navigation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then we will not call it "bunkoed."

Mr. SIMS. Your committee are looking only to navigation and are taking the proper view of it from that standpoint.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. For instance, take the water-power proposition, which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have given a great deal of thought and discussion to, and on which they have had a great many hearings. A bill on that subject is now pending, which, from my point of view, being the author of it, is a very excellent bill. It covers this whole proposition. Now, while we are considering that, here comes in another committee in the House with a lot of private bills and bunches them all in one omnibus bill for reasons that are entirely satisfactory to the committee that did it.

Mr. SIMS. I suppose they are more certain to have them defeated by having the opposition to all the bills concentrated against the one bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not know that the defeat of the bill could be any more certain than it is. I think it is absolutely certain to be defeated.

Mr. SIMS. Either all together or one at a time; it looks that way to me now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think that is true. Now, it does occur to me that in the interest of accurate and harmonious and proper legislation this subject ought to go to some one committee of the House. The chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce stated here on the floor of the House recently that that committee are now having hearings, and that it is their intention——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the discussion is not pertinent to the bill which is under consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. We are under general debate, and everything in the world is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. SIMS. I only expected to say a few words. I am waiting for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] to ask me a question in reference to the consolidating of the two committees.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It was not entirely a question. I thought the gentleman had an hour, and that he did not intend to use it all.

Mr. SIMS. I only want to call attention to the fact that these difficulties arise, and there are a great many of them, and we are all trying to act in good faith and have no other motive in view.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the gentleman's very lucid statement of this matter, and his illustration of the $3,000,000 improvement to navigation, which is afterwards taken up by those who get a $6,000,000 power franchise which results from it. Is that a supposititious case, or are there any actual cases in point where that has occurred?

Mr. SIMS. The $3,000,000 cost was stated by my colleague, and I only used the other as a supposititious case. I do not know that there would be any resulting benefit. They might lose money from it.

Mr. CONNELL. Has such a thing really occurred?

Mr. SIMS. It was charged the other day that in the Keokuk matter, where the Government charged nothing for the water-power privilege, the resulting water power is worth many times the entire cost of the improvement. Personally, I do not know how that is. It was charged in debate. In other words, it was stated that the income from the water power would very greatly exceed the interest on the investment.

Mr. CONNELL. The point is this, that after Congress has voted the money to build this dam, has it ever occurred to those finding out this power would result from it to go to the Government and say that they would stand the $3,000,000 expense and do it and then get the $6,000,000 result?

Mr. SIMS. We have authorized a number of improvements by private persons or corporations where the Government would have to make some improvement in the interest of navigation, and the thought of the committee in doing so was good—that is, to save the Government paying out anything, because the Government did not know, and could not know, that there would result any financial benefit in the way I mentioned.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to ask the gentleman how you can develop a stream for navigation by building a dam without developing water power, and how you can develop water power by building a dam without affecting naviagtion?

Mr. SIMS. I think the question answers itself.

Mr. AUSTIN. You can build a dam without building a lock.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, yes; of course.

Mr. HOWARD. I mean in conformity with the rules and regulations laid down by the War Department. How can you build a dam for the improvement of navigation without developing water power?

Mr. SIMS. You can not do it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think I can answer that question.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say this, that I do think that often gentlemen come and ask Congress to grant permission to make an improvement on a so-called navigable stream which really is not a navigable stream in any beneficial sense, and I would like to see some one of them go along and build the water powers and let the matter go to the courts and have it decided, but it seems to me when they do come to Congress on the theory that it is a navigable stream and get congressional authority to build a dam on an alleged navigable stream, they are at least estopped from denying the authority of Congress to couple conditions with the grant of such power.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to use all the time that I had. I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, when this discussion was precipitated this morning I did not know it would reach the extraordinary limits that it has. I was amazed at the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that to fix a charge for granting a privilege already authorized by the Constitution was invading the sovereignty of the States. Upon what theory he bases his statement I am unable to understand. If Congress has the power to grant the right to build a dam or bridge across a navigable stream, as a natural consequence of that grant, following as a legal proposition, it has the right to fix the terms upon which it shall be granted, and there is no lawyer, I take it, who will deny this proposition. It is very easy for men to rise in their places and say that this or that is unconstitutional, but they ought to furnish the proof in support of their assertion. Nobody to-day denies that authority exists in Congress to regulate the building of these dams and bridges across navigable streams; and if it has that power, then it has the same power under the same authority to fix the terms upon which that right shall be exercised. But the gentleman from Wyoming said that it was the great coal companies that were here insisting on this kind of provision going into these bills. I deny the proposition. But if the coal companies are here fighting to-day, and if the railroad companies are here fighting to-day, they are fighting against the proposition we contend for, because it is money in their pockets to prevent the exercise of the power that we insist upon. Both of these are gigantic combinations, stifling development and absorbing the frugality of the people all over the country, who are compelled to submit to their arbitrary conduct and pay their unreasonable charges for service. Now, if these two allied combinations can secure the water powers of the country their combination will be complete and their opportunity to plunder the people enlarged. Oh, no; the transportation companies and the big coal combines are not in favor of our position, but they heartily indorse the position of the gentleman from Wyoming on this question. There is every reason why they should support his position and oppose the one we take on this matter. Monopolies are always in sympathy with each other.

The gentleman says that the States ought to exercise this right. Applying the doctrine for which we insist does not take away a single right now belonging to any State in this Union. The right to exercise all the power which exists in the State still remains. If anyone is afraid—so much alarmed—about this proposition invading State sovereignty, then it is the great coal and railroad combines of the country and not the individuals who are to be benefited thereby. Why? Do not forget one thing, namely, that every great commercial and industrial institution in this country is controlled by a few men, and before you can develop any large commercial enterprise, whether it is water power, coal properties, or lumber properties, or railroads, you are compelled to get the money from the same individuals to develop one that you would to develop the other. There is a community of interest under the control of the few who manipulate the financing of almost every proposition. The Money Trust controls every large investment made in this country to-day, and, as far as these water powers are developed, they will control them, as they do all of these other propositions, without the Government deriving any revenue therefrom. They will be in the hands of a few financial magnates of this country, who will hold up the people for extortionate charges for any part of the service used. Monopoly looks upon them avariciously as a most favored field for exploitation.

Let me call attention to another fallacious proposition of the gentleman from Wyoming, and that was this: That these streams out in the States ought to be the property of the States. True; they ought to be, but he overlooked the important proposition that Congress is appropriating millions upon millions of the people's money to improve the navigable streams of the country, and every dam built on every stream in any portion of the United States is deflecting a certain amount of water from some navigable stream and requiring the greater outlay of money to make up for the loss to such navigable streams. Whenever, out in any State on a nonnavigable stream, you build a dam you stop the flow of a certain amount of water that would be turned into some great navigable stream. It is prevented from flowing to swell the volume. You are then requiring by that act that much more improvement of that river, and if the Government—the taxpayers of the country—are to be taxed to improve the navigable streams, it is the duty of Congress to prevent the destruction, as much as possible, of the navigability of those streams or have adequate compensation in return therefor. Failure to do so is unfair to the people.

It has been said for the purpose of preventing this proposition from being legislated into any of these bills that already the power belongs to the Government; that it has been conferred on the War Department by the general dam act. I deny it. I deny that to-day there is a single provision of law authorizing the War Department to exact charges for the exercise of this license or privilege, and I will call the attention of the House, as one of the strongest arguments that can be made against that proposition, to the fact that the present Secretary of War, an eminent lawyer, criticizing one of these bills on the 21st day of May of this year, said that the objection to the measure was because it did not have any provision in it by which compensation could be enforced to the Government for the use of the power. It provided for none; and, furthermore, he stated that there ought to be a provision in these bills which would give power to the Federal Government to regulate the charges when the municipal corporations failed to do so, and when they were imposing upon the public, and every reasonable man knows that when they once get control of these great valuable powers they will impose upon the public. The language of the Secretary, to which I refer, is as follows:

> There is no provision made in the inclosed bill providing for any compensation to the Federal Government in return for the grant of the privilege, nor is there any provision made to reserve to the Federal Government the right to control the charges for the water-power service to the consumers in default of adequate regulation on the part of local authorities to protect the public interest. I believe that these are important defects in the bill, and without their correction do not recommend its passage.
> It is improvident, in my opinion, to allow the entire cost of the future improvement of this river, if made, to fall upon the general taxpayers of the country, when that burden could so easily be reduced by exacting proper compensation for the water-power privileges granted on the river by the Federal Government.

The principles which should guide the granting of water-power privileges have now been comprehensively laid down in the final report just rendered of the National Waterways Commission. After long hearings and exhaustive study, that commission, composed of Members of both parties in both Houses, has unanimously reported that a grant for water-power development constitutes a special privilege for which the Government is entitled to proper compensation; that the water power developed on waters subject to Federal jurisdiction should be correlated to the development of navigation; and that in view of the growing intimate relations between the hydroelectric business and the interests of navigation, the Federal Government should reserve the right to control, in the public interests, the relation between the operating company and the consumer.

Now Congress has started in this matter upon the same policy with this great valuable property that 50 years ago it adopted in regard to the public domain, when millions upon millions of acres of the best land that ever was found on earth was granted to railroads to extend their lines or build new ones throughout the country. It became so burdensome to the public, so odious, that Congress had to revoke the policy and forfeited the grants, amounting in round numbers to about 200,000,000 acres, which were restored to the people's heritage, the public domain, so that it could be turned over to the settlers of this country. To-day, if you follow this policy at the behest of the great interests of the country, the special interests, you are giving away a more valuable property than was given away when the public domain was squandered upon the railroad magnates of the country. We ought to take steps now to protect the people's interest, steps that will render revenue for the Public Treasury in payment of valuable franchises, valuable rights which are now being given to these people; and I hope that no bill will be passed upon this subject unless it provides for an adequate remuneration to the people of this country for these valuable properties. It is right and it is proper, and if we are the custodians and are to take care of the rights of the people of this country we ought to exercise the advice that the Secretary of War gives in that letter and protect the people of the country and the interests of this great Republic; and any failure on the part of Congress to properly do that will be a dereliction of duty which we owe to the people of this country. No man, however wise he may be, can figure out approximately the great value of these rights, yet all over the country a very industrious activity seems to have been exercised lately for the purpose of getting these grants from Congress before the people are sufficiently aroused to the importance of the matter and the real value of the grant.

It is not enough to say that they are building up a section of the country, making a needed improvement, and supplying the people with additional facilities. The charge that the Government will require for the use of such property will never stop the investment of a single dollar, not one, for when you consider the profits, the value of these properties, a charge—small, doubtless, it will be in comparison with the value of the property granted—there will be no reason why any of them will cease to make their investments where there is inducement for capital to float the project. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is contended Congress has not declared a policy. The Secretary of War has indicated that a policy ought to be declared. The people want Congress to declare a policy. It ought not to stand idly by and wait, wait until the most valuable of these properties are gone and then declare a policy. It ought to declare it now and it ought to declare it in such terms that it will produce to the Government a revenue, a fair remuneration commensurate with the value of the great property granted. I hope before this session of Congress adjourns that such legislation will be enacted upon this important subject as will enable the Government to derive a revenue from this source and protect the rights not only of the people now but of posterity as it should be in order that monopoly may not get control of these great natural resources of our country without paying for them an adequate compensation, which will contribute in some measure to the relief of an oppressed people, who are now the real owners and who should be the beneficiaries in their disposal. Monopoly looks upon these properties with avaricious eyes, and, with its numerous tentacles reaching out in every direction to gather the dormant resources from an unsuspecting public, it covets none more than these and estimates none of greater value. With these once safely acquired it will have under complete control our transportation, our fuel, and our power facilities, and will be able to dominate upon its own terms our production, our comfort, and our development—a condition every citizen of the Republic would deplore. It is time now to declare a sound policy on this subject and it should be done before any grants are made, a policy which will redound to the welfare of the people of this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FOSTER. I think we had better read the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. I understand this provides for sale under such terms as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem best; that he can sell it by bid or private sale?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; does the gentleman ask a question about it?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. I will state to the gentleman this is an old site which was acquired in 1857 for a customhouse and post office. In 1867 there was another site acquired and the customhouse and post-office building constructed and this was abandoned during all of that time. On March 2, 1867, Congress passed an act authorizing the sale and an effort was made to sell it, but there was no authority given to the Secretary of the Treasury at that time to sell otherwise than by public sale, as I recall. The property is worth about $4,500, and the Secretary of the Treasury recommends if these limitations are withdrawn they will be able to sell the property. It is the bill in which Mr. SCULLY, of New Jersey, is interested, and I have no other interest in it——

Mr. FOSTER. It is the opinion of the gentleman from Alabama that this is the best way to dispose of the property?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. The Treasury had an upset price and we made inquiry into that and found that proposition would defeat the sale entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ROBINSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 21888) providing for the sale of United States unused post-office site at Perth Amboy, N. J., and had directed him to report the same back without amendment with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. Mr. SHERLEY, of Kentucky, desired the Chair to ask leave of absence for him for 10 days, on account of death in his family. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, for two days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. RICHARDSON, indefinitely, on account of serious illness.

LOTS FOR FIRE DEPARTMENT, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5145) authorizing the city of Hot Springs, Ark., to occupy and construct buildings for the use of the fire department of said city on lot No. 3, block No. 115, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the exclusive right to use, occupy, and enjoy the possession of lot No. 3, in block No. 115, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark., is by this act granted to the city of Hot Springs, Ark., for the purpose of erecting and maintaining thereon a suitable and sightly building or buildings for the use of the fire department of said city. The rights and privileges granted under this act shall continue as long as the property is used and occupied for the purposes mentioned in this act, subject, however, to the following conditions and limitations, namely, that unless said city of Hot Springs, Ark., shall within five years after the passage of this act erect and equip on said lot a suitable and sightly building or buildings for the purposes above mentioned, or if said city shall at any time hereafter use or permit the premises to be used for any other purpose than that herein granted, then and in either event all the rights, privileges, and powers by this act granted and conferred upon said city shall be forfeited to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF LOTS, HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7251) to confer title in fee and to authorize the disposition of certain lots now situate on Hot Springs Reservation in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the estate, right, title, and interest, and all right of reversion of the United States in and to lots Nos. 4 and 5, in block No. 94, situate on Hot Springs Reservation, in the school district of Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, be, and is, granted to and vested in said school district of Hot Springs, with full power and authority of the officers of said school district to manage, control, sell, or dispose of the same, or any part thereof, at their discretion, for the use of said school district and the public schools thereof.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be and the same are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if my information is correct, if these lots were at one time included in a bunch of lots that were intended to be sold at public auction, and that, at the request of the school authorities or other authorities of Hot Springs, they were reserved from sale for the purpose of having a schoolhouse built upon them?

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman's statement is in part correct.

Mr. MANN. Which part is not correct?

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just going to state. The lots were reserved from sale, and at that time there was a bill pending before the Congress granting many other lots, in conjunction with these and in close proximity to them, for a building site. Those lots have since been disposed of. The Department of the Interior agreed with the representatives of the school board that these lots should be granted as in the nature of a bonus, another site having been secured by the city to be built upon. These two lots alone are hardly large enough to provide an adequate building site, and for that reason the lots are granted in fee with power in the school board to dispose of them. The city of Hot Springs, as the report shows—and I am sure the gentleman is familiar with it——

Mr. MANN. I never have had the need of going there.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman would doubtless find it very profitable and pleasant to visit that city at any time his arduous public duties would permit him to do so.

These schools are used by children of persons temporarily residing there, and under that practice almost half, if not quite, that number of pupils who attend the public schools are children of nonresident parents; that is, they are only temporarily residing in the city of Hot Springs. For the reason I have stated the city will not use it as a building site, but if the grant is made it will be in the nature of a bonus to the public schools of Hot Springs. At the time the sale was made it was contemplated that lots on the reservation should be sold, but the representatives of the Interior Department, upon arriving at Hot Springs, found there were a number of lots that were desired and required for local use, some for one purpose and some for another, and they entered into a kind of agreement with the representatives of the city, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, that these lots, or certain other lots, nearly all of which have been disposed of, should be reserved from the sale in order that the Congress might have an opportunity to make special disposition of them if it so desired. I hope the gentleman will not press any objection to the bill.

Mr. MANN. I would like to get a little further information from the gentleman. I am right in my statement, as I understand, that at a public sale where these lots were originally contemplated to be offered they were to be withheld from sale upon the request of the board of directors of the school district?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Am I right in further assuming that the school board, in making the request, made this statement?

In view of these and of the representations which the board in formal session made to Mr. Ucker, chief clerk of the Interior Department, he, acting under his official authority, withdrew and withheld from the sale of Government lots, lots Nos. 4 and 5, in block 94—

Which are the lots referred to in this bill, and the school board in referring to these lots and asking for a transfer of the title, said that these lots were—to be devoted to and used forever as a site for a public school building.

Mr. ROBINSON. That statement is correct. It was true at the time the application was made, but, as I have stated, if you will examine further the report it discloses the fact that the superintendent of the reservation and the department took that view of it, and in view of the events which have since transpired, decided it would not be desirable to put limitations in the act. Other buildings will have to be erected to meet the growing demands of the city.

Mr. MANN. Am I right in the understanding that the school board asked to have these particular lots set apart for the site for a schoolhouse, and that now the superintendent says that that is not a suitable site for a schoolhouse?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; you are partly right. Buildings have been constructed on other lots near by, which make it desirable to locate the school building somewhere else.

Mr. MANN. I did not see anything about other lots in this request.

Mr. ROBINSON. The request, so far as that statement is concerned, was for a large number of other lots.

Mr. MANN. I saw there were several requests for different lots. We just passed a bill to release a certain lot for fire-house purposes. The school board asks for certain lots, with the statement that they want them to put a schoolhouse on them. The school board ought to be able to tell when a place for a schoolhouse is suitable. Now the gentleman wants us to sell the lots, the proceeds to be used as a part of the current expenses of the school board.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is in the nature of a bonus to the school board at Hot Springs.

Mr. MANN. If we undertake to provide for the bonus, is there any logical reason why next year we should not provide an additional bonus?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think there could be any logical reason, but at the same time I do not think there will be any request made for any additional lots. Nearly all of them have already been disposed of.

Mr. MANN. I think if we start in to pay a part of the school expenses of Hot Springs on the ground that they educate children who come there with their parents, we will never stop. Of course they are spending money there, and that is what the town lives on.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. It is this: Why should not this money go into the Federal Treasury, the same as the proceeds from the sale of lands at Perth Amboy, N. J.?

Mr. ROBINSON. This bill does not provide for the sale of lots by the Government. It provides for a grant of the lots to the city of Hot Springs. It permits the city to sell the lots and apply the proceeds for school purposes.

Mr. PAYNE. What difference does it make whether you give it away to the city of Hot Springs or for other purposes? We have been doing that at Hot Springs for the past 30 years. We have given away a great deal of land down there, and we have built sewers for the people there, and roads.

Mr. MANN. We are just appropriating money now, large sums, to make a sewer plan—a plan for a sewer that we will have to build for Hot Springs.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman is mistaken when he says that the Government has built a sewerage system at Hot Springs. On the contrary, the city of Hot Springs has maintained a sewerage system, from which not only the citizens there but the Government reservation have had the benefit, without a cent's cost, either for construction or maintenance, since the system was established.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the city of Hot Springs could well do all that and a lot of other things for the Government, and still have a large balance charged against it. In my opinion, if we had sold that reservation down there 30 years ago and got the money for it, we could have let those good people down there take care of themselves, and then they would not be always calling on the Government for help.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1309) to establish a council of national defense.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] reserves the right to object.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], who is in charge of this bill, is not in the Chamber, and he left the bill in charge of Gen. ESTOPINAL, the gentleman from Louisiana, who has asked me to have it passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] asks that the consideration of the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will report the next one.

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE STATE OF ARIZONA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 7163) authorizing the State of Arizona to select lands within the former Fort Grant Military Reservation and outside of the Crook National Forest in partial satisfaction of its grant for State charitable, penal, and reformatory institutions.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands, together with the improvements thereon, within that part of the former Fort Grant Military Reservation, in the State of Arizona, situate and being outside the boundaries of the Crook National Forest, be, and the same hereby are, made subject to selection by the State of Arizona in partial satisfaction of the grant of 100,000 acres made to it for State charitable, penal, and reformatory institutions by section 25 of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 557): Provided, That such selection shall be made within three years from the date of approval of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] if, under the enabling act, the State of Arizona has not the entire State from which to select its 100,000 acres of land, where the land has not been already taken or reserved?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will state to the gentleman that the enabling act, admitting Arizona to statehood, granted to the new State over a million acres of land. From such a statement you might be led to believe that the Congress had been very liberal in its donations of land to Arizona, but, as a matter of fact, the State will not receive much that is of value. We are not permitted to make selection from the forest reserves, and these reserves contain the principal areas of unappropriated public lands that are worth having. The lands from which the State can make its selections are mostly of a desert character and are of but little value because of the lack of water. This bill will permit the State to locate its reform school on the outskirts of a national forest.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to a million acres of land. That is one proposition. The 100,000 acres is not in the same reservation?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is an error, a typographical error.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how it can be a typographical error. This is a Senate bill, which passed the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol. The 100,000 acres is in addition to the million acres, if I am correct.

Mr. HAYDEN. Section 25 of the enabling act grants to the State of Arizona "for State charitable, penal, and reformatory institutions, 100,000 acres."

Mr. MANN. How much land is there in Arizona from which this area could be selected? How many million acres are there in Arizona from which this selection might be made under existing law?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is plenty of land, but there is no water on it. The State desires to locate this school at a place where an irrigated farm can be established.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman tell how much unoccupied public domain there is in the gentleman's State?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am sorry to say I can not. I do not happen to have the figures at hand.

Mr. MANN. Can not the gentleman approximate that?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not see the necessity of approximating it.

Mr. MANN. There may be a necessity if the gentleman wants to pass this bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, there is plenty of land, but there is no other place where this school can be more properly located.

Mr. MANN. I have heard such rosy statements about Arizona that the gentleman can not make me believe now, so soon after those rosy statements have been made, that there is no place in the Territory with the exception of this one suitable for a reformatory institution.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am referring to the unoccupied public land.

Mr. MANN. We were told by the day and the week and the year about the enormous quantity of land suitable for occupation and how, if we would make it a State, it would soon fill up with people cultivating the soil and carrying on business in all parts of the State.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman does not say, does he, that they need a reformatory there?

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman says there is no place in the State where they have public domain—Government land thrown open to the public—that is suitable to live on.

Mr. HAYDEN. I said that there was no place in Arizona more suitable for an industrial school than this particular place.

Mr. MANN. This happens to be a military reservation, and I presume that it is good land, and therefore they want it.

Mr. HAYDEN. The State would not want it for this purpose if it was poor, worthless land.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. If there is anything out there that belongs to the Government that is good, they come and ask us for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why are the improvements included in the selection?

Mr. ROBINSON. They have little or no value. They consist of adobe buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No improvements are ever said to have any value when we are asked to give them away.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Fort Grant Military Reservation was established in the time of the Apache wars, but has been abandoned for the past 10 or 12 years. The buildings were constructed of adobe, and have no particular value.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not the gentleman mistaken in the statement that Fort Grant has been abandoned for 10 or 12 years? It seems to me that I distinctly remember that it was occupied by an old, experienced veteran officer of the United States Army, on the orders of a Commander in Chief, who exiled him to that place.

Mr. HAYDEN. There have been no troops stationed there for a number of years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman refer to the case of an officer named Stewart?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He was sent to the most desolate place on the face of the earth.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; and I suppose that is why they want it now for a penal institution.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] a question. The gentleman from Texas referred to an officer who was exiled to Fort Grant. I should like to ask him which President exiled that officer to Fort Grant?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not use the word "President." I said it was done by a Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States, whose authority to send him there was not questioned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was an erstwhile friend of the gentleman from California.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The ex-Commander in Chief.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman now if this bill should pass, would not the Government be required to survey this land and pay for it out of the Federal Treasury before the State could make its selection?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Secretary of the Interior recommended a special appropriation of $800 for that purpose in his report on this bill, but I do not think it is necessary, because the land from which the State will make its selection is already surveyed. According to the Secretary's letter about 1,900 acres of the reservation has been surveyed. The State does not need the whole 12,000 acres.

Mr. MANN. How much does the State want?

Mr. HAYDEN. Enough land upon which to locate the school properly and to provide a farm where the inmates of the institution may be taught agriculture.

Mr. MANN. How much will that be?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not know exactly. I understand that the State proposes to again cultivate the old farm land that was used when there was a garrison at the post.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would it not be well for the gentleman from Arizona to ascertain about that before we pass this bill which permits the State of Arizona to take the entire reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. The United States has granted to Arizona 100,000 acres of similar land. I do not see that it makes any difference to the United States whether the State of Arizona selects its lands in one place or in another.

Mr. MANN. If the United States have granted to the State of Arizona similar land, why does not the State go and take the similar land. Why do you want to get this land?

Mr. HAYDEN. In the event that this land is not now granted to the State it will be thrown open for settlement, and it can be then selected by the State out of its grant of land under the enabling act.

Mr. MANN. That is a question. There is a law under which it will not be thrown open to settlement without being paid for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are in the State of Arizona 12,040,428 acres of surveyed public land which are unappropriated.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Arizona says none of it is fit to live on.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there are 28,982,455 acres unappropriated and unsurveyed.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that Fort Grant Military Reservation is not a great way from the railroad station called Wilcox, on the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Many years ago, in 1885, in connection with a congressional committee of investigation, of which Judge Holman was chairman, I visited Arizona. We got off at Wilcox. Fort Grant was then occupied, and Gen. Shafter was in command. We rode up to the barracks and remained there all night. The next day we started for the Gila River, going up to the Indian reservation of that name. We found another post on the Gila River.

Mr. HAYDEN. Fort Thomas?

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that that reservation—and it struck me at the time and was a matter of comment—was worth all of the territory so far as we could see, at least for agricultural purposes, from Fort Grant to the Gila River.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain the reason why this land was selected by the State of Arizona. The State legislature appointed a commission to relocate the reform school. That commission visited various sections of the State and among others the Fort Grant Military Reservation. The commission decided that this was the best place to locate the school. The matter was taken up with the Department of the Interior by the governor of Arizona and the bill as it passed the Senate was drawn in the department.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the department makes a report upon it and recommends something else. We passed recently, I believe—or if not, it is in conference—a proposition to permit the State of Texas to have certain portions of an abandoned military reservation for a tuberculosis sanitarium.

Mr. HAY. This is no longer in a military reservation. It has been turned over to the Interior Department and is a part of the public domain.

Mr. MANN. In the case to which I refer it is proposed that the State of Texas shall pay for the land. Certainly, if anything ought to appeal to Congress on its charity side it would be the establishment of a tuberculosis sanitarium, and if we require Texas to pay for that I can see no reason why we should start in to give the land to Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. But the Federal Government did not donate any land to the State of Texas when that State came into the Union.

Mr. MANN. Then Texas has that much more claim on us to have land given to it. I think the gentleman would better ask that this go over and ascertain just what is wanted. This will permit them to take the entire reservation without any cost or paying anything at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 127. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to supply tents and rations to American citizens compelled to leave Mexico.

AMERICAN REFUGEES FROM MEXICO.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 127, authorizing the Secretary of War to supply tents and rations to American citizens compelled to leave Mexico, and for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House Senate joint resolution 127, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be supplied, through the proper military officers at El Paso, Tex., all necessary tents, together with temporary rations, for the care and relief of American citizens who have been compelled to remove and are yet removing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico and who are seeking refuge in El Paso, Tex., and adjacent portions of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask what the reason is for this?

Mr. MANN. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The request is for unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HAY. And I desire to reserve the right to object.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that in explanation of the matter that the following telegram be read from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

EL PASO, TEX., July 29, 1912.

Hon. W. R. SMITH,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Twenty-five hundred Mormon women and children driven from Mexico to be here within 24 hours; 700 here now; too many for local authorities to care. Col. Steever says resolution of Congress necessary before he can furnish tents and temporary rations. Please have resolution passed at once. Have wired this to Senator FALL.

C. E. KELLY, Mayor.
ALBERT S. J. EYLAR, County Judge.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether he has consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, or the minority leader in reference to this matter?

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but I have not had an opportunity to speak to the others.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to consider a matter of this nature by unanimous consent, without consulting somebody on this side of the House in advance, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE BEEF TRUST.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on the 16th day of the present month I addressed the House on the subject of the Beef Trust, and on Wednesday, July 24, the following editorial appeared in what is known as the Butchers' Advocate——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey will first have to get consent to make an address.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, we have already lost most of unanimous-consent day, and I hope the gentleman will come in with his request to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from New Jersey insists upon making his request and thus interrupting unanimous-consent day, which I hope he will not do, I fear I shall have to object.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I do not want a great deal of time and I hope my friend will not object.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that he will be taking the time that should be devoted to some gentleman getting a bill passed which may be of great interest to his constituents.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in deference to the explanation and the desires of the gentleman from Illinois, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I be permitted to address the House for one hour.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, to that I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is already one special order to be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] calls up the tariff bills to-morrow the gentleman can easily get time in which to discuss any proposition that he may desire, and also on Wednesday he can get time.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Then I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Wednesday I may be permitted to address the House for one hour on the subject of the Beef Trust.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I believe that is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that on Calendar Wednesday the House will still be in Committee of the Whole, and if he gets the floor he will be entitled to one hour. I suppose that nobody would object to his address at that time.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, in view of the conditions that have been outlined by the gentleman from Illinois, I hope he will not press his objection at this time. I will endeavor to conclude in a very short time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious to hear what the gentleman has to say, and I know that he can not say in 15 minutes what he ought to say in an hour. I shall therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

PATENT TO ENTRYMEN FOR HOMESTEADS UPON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask unanimous consent to correct a word in the bill which we passed a little while ago—Senate bill 5545, page 5, line 18.

Mr. ROBINSON. That can be done in conference. The bill has been amended anyhow.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the Senate will probably concur in the House bill, and I want to ask unanimous consent to correct the word "mortgage" so it will read "mortgagee."

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall make no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to make a certain amendment——

Mr. MANN. By adding the letter "e" to the word "mortgage."

The SPEAKER. By changing the word "mortgage" to the word "mortgagee."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have to ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, so as to bring it back to the point where it can be amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings in relation to Senate bill 5545 by which it was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, read the sentence to which it applies.

Mr. FRENCH (reading)—

Upon default of payment of any amount so due title to the land shall pass to the United States free of all encumbrance, subject to the right of the defaulting debtor or any mortgage, lien holder, judgment debtor, or subsequent purchaser to redeem the land within one year after the notice of such default shall have been given by payment of all moneys due, with eight per centum interest and cost.

Mr. MANN. It should be mortgagee.

Mr. RAKER. There is no doubt of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to vacating the proceedings on this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 18, change the word "mortgage" to the word "mortgagee."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRENCH. The title probably should be corrected to conform to what was done before.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman know whether there is anything that requires the title to be changed?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not know, but I simply want to follow the formula adopted before.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the text.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF BURNT TIMBER ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24266) to authorize the sale of burnt timber on the public domain.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules as he may prescribe, to sell and dispose of to the highest bidder at public auction, or through sealed bids, the timber on any lands of the United States, including those embraced in unperfected claims under any of the public-land laws, also upon the ceded Indian lands, that may have been killed or seriously and permanently damaged by forest fires prior to the passage of this act, the proceeds of all such sales to be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the damaged timber upon any lands embraced in an existing claim shall be disposed of only upon the application or with the written consent of such claimant, and the money received from the sale of damaged timber on any such lands shall be kept in a special fund to await the final determination of such claim.

SEC. 2. That upon the certification of the Secretary of the Interior that any such claim has been finally approved and patented the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to such claimant, his heirs or legal representatives, the money received from the sale of the damaged timber upon his land, after deducting therefrom the expenses of the sale; and upon the certification of the Secretary of the Interior that any such claim has been finally rejected and canceled the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to transfer the money derived from the sale of the damaged timber upon the lands embraced in such claim to the general fund in the Treasury derived from the sale of public or ceded Indian lands, as the case may be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask a question in regard to this bill. I would like for the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands to state if we did not pass a bill early in the present session of this Congress providing for this very purpose?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, a bill was passed early in the present session, which bill was prepared by representatives of the Department of the Interior and of the Department of Agriculture. That bill was vetoed by the President on the ground that it contained features which would make difficult, if not impracticable, the administration, so far as the proceeds from burnt timber on lands belonging to claimants were concerned. This bill was drawn to meet that objection and relieve it from inconvenience in administration. The present bill provides, where sales are made of burnt or destroyed timber on lands under existing claims, the proceeds shall be held in a special fund until the claim has been determined. If it is determined in favor of the claimant, the proceeds of the sale shall be paid to him, and if it is against him it shall be covered into the Treasury. Now, there is a provision in the bill that no sale shall be made of burnt timber on lands upon which there are existing claims, except upon application of the claimants or after they have consented, which, I think, will meet an objection that has been suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER]. This bill was drafted in the Interior Department to meet the objections which were asserted in the veto message to the other form of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The objection that existed against the other bill would exist against this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I think not.

Mr. MANN. It is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The bill, as I understand, reported by the committee with amendment has the approval of the department.

Mr. ROBINSON. It has the approval of the department and was drafted there. And if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, it not only has the approval of the department, but it was drafted by the department to meet the objection which the department suggested to the President and which caused him to veto the bill. The veto was unquestionably made upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. And without sufficient information.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think so. I will say frankly I think the veto was unfounded, and I do not think there will be any grave objection made to this bill. I was addressing my remarks to the fact that this bill would relieve from the difficulty that it was claimed would arise under the former bill. Now, under the former bill it was provided after much consideration that such portion of the proceeds of burnt timber from lands upon which there existed claims should be paid over to the claimant as he had earned by residence, and the Interior Department took the view that that was impracticable of operation for this reason, that sometimes a claimant might never perfect his claim by residence, and therefore never become entitled to the proceeds, and in that way he might receive the proceeds of the timber when he should not do so.

Mr. MANN. That was sufficiently guarded in the other bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thought so, to be frank with the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As a matter of fact, unless you have this legislation the timber that will be sold under the terms of the bill, if it becomes a law, will be lost and——

Mr. ROBINSON. Entirely, and it amounts to a considerable sum.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman what is covered by the term "ceded Indian lands"?

Mr. ROBINSON. That consists of lands which the Indians have ceded to the United States and which the United States holds in trust for the Indians. The amendment was adopted at my suggestion.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking about the amendment. I am speaking about the sale of timber upon the ceded Indian lands. What does that cover?

Mr. ROBINSON. There are a number of tracts of land in various Western States which are called "ceded Indian lands." They are now held by the Government in trust for the Indians, and the committee took the view of it that the proceeds of those lands should not be covered into the General Treasury but should be held and disposed of as the act under which the cession was made should require.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In other words, they were authorized to be disposed of in Indian reservations instead of being regarded as public domain, and designated as "ceded Indian lands"?

Mr. ROBINSON. And they are held in trust by the Government for the Indian. It is, therefore, fair that the proceeds of this timber as well as the proceeds of the land go to the Indians. The committee took that view of it, and the Secretary of the Interior approved the same.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not also a fact that in providing for the disposition of the dead and down and injured timber the Indians have the right under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to do any work that may be necessary to be done toward the marketing of this timber, and sawing it, and putting it into lumber, and so forth?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The question is, Would the Indian's right to do this work for the purpose of giving him employment be respected by the department if your bill passed?

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the law as it now exists there is no authority for the sale of this timber on these lands, and I think under the statute the Secretary of the Interior would have authority to prescribe rules and regulations concerning the manner of disposal.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I simply wish to call your attention to the fact that the Indians have priority in the work to be done on reservations.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Secretary of the Interior would doubtless recognize that. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. It there objection?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I would like to have the gentleman explain this language on page 2:

That the damaged timber upon any lands embraced in an existing claim shall be disposed of only upon the application or with the written consent of such claimant, and the money received from the sale of damaged timber on any such lands shall be kept in a special fund to await the final determination of such claim.

Now, do I understand from the gentleman that there shall be no sale of the dead timber upon the lands without written consent, or does this language mean there shall be no disposition of the money until the claim is disposed of?

Mr. ROBINSON. This language means exactly what I understand it to say, and that is, that there shall be no sale by the Interior Department of fire-killed or seriously or permanently damaged timber—timber which has been damaged by fire—without the consent of the claimant; that is to say, if you claim, under any of the public-land laws of the United States, 160 acres of land where timber has been injured by fire, and I represent the Interior Department, I can not sell that damaged timber unless you consent to it in writing; and after it has been sold, the proceeds do not go to you for the time being, nor does it go to the Government, but it is held in a special fund to await the determination of your claim. If your claim is adjudicated in your favor, and you are given title to the land by the Government, you get the proceeds of this burned timber, and if you do not, you do not get it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman uses the term "160 acres." We have another unit in our country, of 10½ acres—a mining claim. Do you include mining claims or not?

Mr. ROBINSON. It says in all of the public land of the United States. It does not contemplate sales where the area is small and the damaged timber is not appreciable. It is only intended to apply to those large areas where the damage is great and whole communities have been affected.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. You certainly are not evading my question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not intend to do so.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. We have another unit—that is, a mining claim of 10½ acres. But the gentleman goes off and refers to a large area of 160 acres.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I did not go off.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Does this cover a mining claim of 10½ acres?

Mr. ROBINSON. It covers, according to my construction of it, any claim upon the public domain.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is all I desire.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Does the chairman think this bill will relate to lands in the forest reserves?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is intended to relate to all public lands.

Mr. SHARP. How long ago were these lands burned over?

Mr. ROBINSON. Last fall.

Mr. SHARP. What kind of timber is it—hard or soft?

Mr. ROBINSON. The hearings before the committee disclosed the fact that there is a necessity for prompt legislation. Otherwise worms or weevils will eat into the timber and ruin it and render it practically valueless within a year or two. The character of the timber varies with the locality.

Mr. SHARP. I asked the question because if it is soft wood, pine and hemlock, it would last a good many years. If hardwood, the decay would be very rapid.

Mr. ROBINSON. We went into that very fully with a view of considering it in reference to this legislation, and the Secretary of the Interior and the representative of the Bureau of Forestry, Mr. Potter, in the extended hearings before the committee concerning the matter, said it was desirable that prompt action should be taken, because the deterioration will start in, on a part of the timber, at least, within a short time.

Mr. MANN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that under this bill the Secretary of the Interior would have the right to sell the burned timber on the forest reserves?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. He merely asked that sales be made of the burned timber in the forest reserves. That would be done by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. It does not apply to the burned timber on the forest reserves?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. The Secretary of Agriculture attends to that.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. He already has that authority.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not contemplated that he should be interfered with as to forest-reserve timber.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. PRAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if the principal purpose of the bill that we passed last December was not to afford the entrymen on these lands some immediate relief on account of the losses which they had sustained during the great fires that swept over Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, and other sections of the West during the fall of 1910, and if section 3 of the bill that we passed in December last did not adequately provide for that relief, in that it enabled the entrymen, if they had resided on the land and complied with the law, to receive an amount of money from the fund derived from the sale of the timber on their claims commensurate with length of residence? Now, under this bill the entryman is obliged to perfect title to his claim, and the Secretary of the Interior must certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the title has been earned and a patent issued before he can receive any money at all. This is the difference, is it not?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the difference. Still I can not concede all of the premises that the gentleman has laid down. It was not the primary purpose of the bill, in my judgment, to favor the settler or claimant. The primary purpose was to prevent waste of timber. It must be clear to all gentlemen that unless some one has the power to sell this burned timber, and unless it is sold within a reasonable time and before it deteriorates, there will be a great waste. I think the total amount burned and damaged was probably 5,000,000,000 feet. The proper purpose of the bill was to prevent waste that would inevitably have occurred otherwise.

Now, we did think it imperative that the settler should receive his share of the proceeds as the sales were made, and I think the bill was adequately safeguarded in that respect. But the President—and I will suggest to the gentleman from Montana that the President is just as much his President as he is mine—took a different view of the matter and vetoed the bill, probably at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, who said that it was difficult, if not impossible, to disburse the funds under the terms of the bill, for the reason that the settler who might be on the land for a part of the time required might never complete his title, and then he would have received funds from land to which he had not perfected his claim. So I think it would be best to let the proceeds be held in a special fund.

Mr. PRAY. The former bill was vetoed on request of the Secretary of the Interior, and in my judgment was a much better bill than this one, although I am not opposed to this one. The former bill, however, was introduced as the result of memorials from State legislatures in the interest of entrymen who lost their property in the forest fires, was it not?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Arkansas to say that this does not authorize the sale of timber in forest reserves?

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the existing law the Secretary of Agriculture has been and is disposing of the burnt timber in the forest reserves. This does not take away from him the power to sell that timber.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. This does not authorize the sale of timber in forest reserves?

Mr. MANN. Not forest-reserve timber.

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out, in lines 19 and 20, the words "from the sale of public or ceded Indian lands, as the case may be," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "from the sale of public lands, unless by legislation the lands from which the timber had been removed had been theretofore appropriated to the benefit of an Indian tribe or otherwise, in which event the net proceeds derived from the sale of the timber shall be transferred to the fund of such tribe or otherwise credited or distributed as by law provided."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THE SUGAR TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill revising the sugar schedule for the purpose of disagreeing to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sugar bill, H. R. 21213, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not ask for a conference.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that by unanimous consent we consider a motion to concur in the Senate amendments as pending and let it go over until to-morrow morning and have a vote on it when the gentleman calls up the other tariff bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that that is agreeable; and that if unanimous consent is given to take the bill from the Speaker's table for the purpose of voting on the Senate amendments, I will allow the gentleman from New York to make the motion to concur and then will move to adjourn, with the motion pending, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman going to move to adjourn right away?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. I want to ask unanimous consent to adjourn until 11 o'clock in the morning.

The SPEAKER. What is the agreement?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the agreement is——

Mr. MANN. You only ask unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent to take the sugar bill from the Speaker's table and consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and will state that if that agreement is ratified I shall not call it up for consideration until to-morrow morning, when I will give the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] an opportunity to move to concur.

Mr. PAYNE. That is satisfactory, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sugar bill and to consider the Senate amendments in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Then there is a supplementary agreement, with which the Chair has nothing to do, that the gentleman from New York shall have an opportunity to move to concur.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to reserve that right.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the right to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. He has the right, under the agreement, to make a motion to concur. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that there is a special order for to-morrow.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish the special order to interfere with this bill, but I do desire to have an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. MANN. This would not interfere with that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was going to suggest, to the gentleman from Texas that I desire, if this is granted, to ask unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock in the morning, and hope to have these matters out of the way in time not to interfere with the special order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the request for unanimous consent made by the gentleman does not interfere with the special order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, which I shall not do, I suggest to the gentleman that 11 o'clock to-morrow will probably be too early to call up the tariff bill. I think meanwhile, after we meet, we can dispose of the Indian bill, so that by the time gentlemen are here the tariff bill can be taken up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I have an assurance from the gentleman from Texas that he thinks he can dispose of the Indian bill in an hour, or about that time, I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. This bill has the right of way under the rule, anyhow.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think we can readily dispose of it in an hour.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. There is a matter of mine on which I wish to move to nonconcur. I think I ought to have an hour. I have never asked an hour before in this House. I want an hour in which to present that case.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is entitled to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, we can arrange that matter in the morning.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We can arrange that to-morrow I think.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] desire to say anything?

Mr. PAYNE. I am anxious that we shall not vote on the tariff bill before 12 o'clock. I have no objection to meeting at 11 o'clock, but I do not want to have the vote taken before people will naturally come in.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if I have assurances that the Indian bill is not going to occupy the day, so that we can get these tariff bills in conference, I shall have no objection.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the Indian bill will not take very long.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 100. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming.

SOCIALIST PLATFORM.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement of the principles of the Socialist Party as contained in the platform adopted at the Socialist national convention, May 12–13, 1912.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement of the principles of the Socialist Party.

Mr. MANN. How long is it?

Mr. BERGER. Not long.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

SOCIALIST PLATFORM ADOPTED AT THE NATIONAL SOCIALIST CONVENTION, MAY 12–13, 1912.

The Socialist Party of the United States declare that the capitalist system has outgrown its historical function, and has become utterly incapable of meeting the problems now confronting society. We denounce this outgrown system as incompetent and corrupt and the source of unspeakable misery and suffering to the whole working class.

Under this system the industrial equipment of the Nation has passed into the absolute control of a plutocracy which exacts an annual tribute of billions of dollars from the producers. Unafraid of any organized resistance, it stretches out its greedy hands over the still undeveloped resources of the Nation—the land, the mines, the forests, and the water powers of every State in the Union.

In spite of the multiplication of labor-saving machines and improved methods in industry which cheapen the cost of production, the share of the producers grows ever less, and the prices of all the necessities of life steadily increase. The boasted prosperity of this Nation is for the owning class alone. To the rest it means only greater hardship and misery. The high cost of living is felt in every home. Millions of wage workers have seen the purchasing power of their wages decrease until life has become a desperate battle for mere existence.

Multitudes of unemployed walk the streets of our cities or trudge from State to State awaiting the will of the masters to move the wheels of industry.

The farmers in every State are plundered by the increasing price exacted for tools and machinery and by extortionate rents, freight rates, and storage charges.

Capitalist concentration is mercilessly crushing the class of small business men and driving its members into the ranks of propertyless wage workers. The overwhelming majority of the people of America are being forced under a yoke of bondage by this soulless industrial despotism.

It is this capitalist system that is responsible for the increasing burden of armaments, the poverty, slums, child labor, most of the insanity, crime, and prostitution, and much of the disease that afflicts mankind.

Under this system the working class is exposed to poisonous conditions, to frightful and needless perils to life and limb, is walled around with court decisions, injunctions, and unjust laws, and is preyed upon incessantly for the benefit of the controlling oligarchy of wealth. Under it also the children of the working class are doomed to ignorance, drudging toil, and darkened lives.

In the face of these evils, so manifest that all thoughtful observers are appalled at them, the legislative representatives of the Republican and Democratic Parties remain the faithful servants of the oppressors. Measures designed to secure to the wage earners of this Nation as humane and just treatment as is already enjoyed by the wage earners of all other civilized nations have been smothered in committee without debate, and laws ostensibly designed to bring relief to the farmers and general consumers are juggled and transformed into instruments for the exaction of further tribute.

The growing unrest under oppression has driven these two old parties to the enactment of a variety of regulative measures, none of which has limited in any appreciable degree the power of the plutocracy, and some of which have been perverted into means for increasing that power. Antitrust laws, railroad restrictions and regulations, with the prosecutions, indictments, and investigations based upon such legislation, have proved to be utterly futile and ridiculous.

Nor has this plutocracy been seriously restrained or even threatened by any Republican or Democratic Executive. It has continued to grow in power and insolence alike under the administrations of Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft.

In addition to this legislative juggling and this executive connivance, the courts of America have sanctioned and strengthened the hold of this plutocracy as the Dred Scott and other decisions strengthened the slave power before the Civil War. They have constantly been used as instruments for the oppression of the working class and for the suppression of free speech and free assemblage.

We declare, therefore, that the longer sufferance of these conditions is impossible, and we purpose to end them all. We declare them to be the product of the present system in which industry is carried on for private greed instead of for the welfare of society. We declare, furthermore, that for these evils there will be and can be no remedy and no substantial relief except through Socialism, under which industry will be carried on for the common good and every worker receive the full social value of the wealth he creates.

Society is divided into warring groups and classes, based upon material interests. Fundamentally this struggle is a conflict between the two main classes, one of which, the capitalist class, owns the means of production, and the other, the working class, must use these means of production on terms dictated by the owners.

The capitalist class, though few in numbers, absolutely controls the Government—legislative, executive, and judicial. This class owns the machinery of gathering and disseminating news through its organized press. It subsidizes seats of learning—the colleges and schools—and even religious and moral agencies. It has also the added prestige which established customs gives to any order of society, right or wrong.

The working class, which includes all those who are forced to work for a living, whether by hand or brain, in shop, mine, or on the soil, vastly outnumbers the capitalist class. Lacking effective organization and class solidarity, this class is unable to enforce its will. Given such class solidarity and effective organization, the workers will have the power to make all laws and control all industry in their own interest.

All political parties are the expression of economic class interests. All other parties than the Socialist Party represent one or another group of the ruling capitalist class. Their political conflicts reflect merely superficial rivalries between competing capitalist groups. However they result, these conflicts have no issue of real value to the workers. Whether the Democrats or Republicans win politically, it is the capitalist class that is victorious economically.

The Socialist Party is the political expression of the economic interests of the workers. Its defeats have been their defeats and its victories their victories. It is a party founded on the science and laws of social development. It proposes that, since all social necessities to-day are socially produced, the means of their production and distribution shall be socially owned and democratically controlled.

In the face of the economic and political aggressions of the capitalist class the only reliance left the workers is that of their economic organizations and their political power. By the intelligent and class-conscious use of these, they may resist successfully the capitalist class, break the fetters of wage slavery, and fit themselves for the future society which is to displace the capitalist system. The Socialist Party appreciates the full significance of class organization and urges the wage earners, the working farmers, and all other useful workers everywhere to organize for economic and political action, and we pledge ourselves to support the toilers of the fields as well as those in the shops, factories, and mines of the Nation in their struggle for economic justice.

In the defeat or victory of the working class party in this new struggle for freedom lies the defeat or triumph of the common people of all economic groups, as well as the failure or the triumph of popular government. Thus the Socialist Party is the party of the present-day revolution, which marks the transition from economic individualism to Socialism, from wage slavery to free cooperation, from capitalist oligarchy to industrial democracy.

WORKING PROGRAM.

As measures calculated to strengthen the working class in its fight for the realization of its ultimate aim, the cooperative Commonwealth, and to increase its power of resistance against capitalist oppression, we advocate and pledge ourselves and our elected officers to the following program:

COLLECTIVE OWNERSHIP.

1. The collective ownership and democratic management of railroads, wire and wireless telegraphs and telephones, express services, steamboat lines, and all other social means of transportation and communication and of all large-scale industries.

2. The immediate acquirement by the municipalties, the States, or the Federal Government of all grain elevators, stockyards, storage warehouses, and other distributing agencies, in order to reduce the present extortionate cost of living.

3. The extension of the public domain to include mines, quarries, oil wells, forests, and water power.

4. The further conservation and development of natural resources for the use and benefit of all the people:

(a) By scientific forestation and timber protection.

(b) By the reclamation of arid and swamp tracts.

(c) By the storage of flood waters and the utilization of water power.

(d) By the stoppage of the present extravagant waste of the soil and of the products of mines and oil wells.

(e) By the development of highway and waterway systems.

5. The collective ownership of land wherever practicable, and in cases where such ownership is impracticable, the appropriation by taxation of the annual rental value of all land held for speculation or exploitation.

6. The collective ownership and democratic management of the banking and currency system.

7. The abolition of the monopoly ownership of patents and the substitution of collective ownership, with direct rewards to inventors by premiums or royalties.

UNEMPLOYMENT.

The immediate Government relief of the unemployed by the extension of all useful public works. All persons employed on such works to be engaged directly by the Government under a workday of not more than eight hours and at not less than the prevailing union wages. The Government also to establish employment bureaus, to lend money to States and municipalities without interest for the purpose of carrying on public works, and to take such other measures within its power as will lessen the widespread misery of the workers caused by the misrule of the capitalist class.

INDUSTRIAL DEMANDS.

The conservation of human resources, particularly of the lives and well-being of the workers and their families:

1. By shortening the workday in keeping with the increased productiveness of machinery.

2. By securing to every worker a rest period of not less than a day and a half in each week.

3. By securing a more effective inspection of workshops, factories, and mines.

4. By forbidding the employment of children under 16 years of age.

5. By abolishing the brutal exploitation of convicts under the contract system and substituting the cooperative organization of industries in penitentiaries and workshops, for the benefit of convicts and their dependents.

6. By forbidding the interstate transportation of the products of child labor, of convict labor, and of all uninspected factories and mines.

7. By abolishing the profit system in Government work, and substituting either the direct hire of labor or the awarding of contracts to cooperative groups of workers.

8. By establishing minimum wage scales.

9. By abolishing official charity and substituting a noncontributory system of old-age pensions, a general system of insurance by the State of all its members against unemployment, illness, and invalidism, and a system of compulsory insurance by employers of their workers, without cost to the latter, against industrial diseases, accidents, and death.

POLITICAL DEMANDS.

1. The absolute freedom of press, speech, and assemblage.

2. The adoption of a graduated income tax, the increase of the rates of the present corporation tax, and the extension of inheritance taxes, graduated in proportion to the value of the estate and to nearness of kin—the proceeds of these taxes to be employed in the socialization of industry.

3. Unrestricted and equal suffrage for men and women.

4. The adoption of the initiative, referendum, and recall and of proportional representation, nationally as well as locally.

5. The abolition of the Senate and of the veto power of the President.

6. The election of the President and the Vice President by direct vote of the people.

7. The abolition of the power usurped by the Supreme Court of the United States to pass upon the constitutionality of the legislation enacted by the Congress. National laws to be repealed only by act of Congress or by a referendum vote of the whole people.

8. The abolition of the present restrictions upon the amendment of the Constitution, so that that instrument may be made amendable by a majority of the voters in a majority of the States.

9. The granting of the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia with representation in Congress and a democratic form of municipal government for purely local affairs.

10. The extension of democratic government to all United States territory.

11. The enactment of further measures for general education and particularly for vocational education in useful pursuits. The Bureau of Education to be made a department.

12. The enactment of further measures for the conservation of health. The creation of an independent bureau of health, with such restrictions as will secure the full liberty of all schools of practice.

13. The separation of the present Bureau of Labor from the Department of Commerce and Labor and its elevation to the rank of a department.

14. Abolition of all Federal district courts and the United States circuit courts of appeals. State courts to have jurisdiction in all cases arising between citizens of the several States and foreign corporations. The election of all judges for short terms.

15. The immediate curbing of the power of the courts to issue injunctions.

16. The free administration of justice.

17. The calling of a convention for the revision of the Constitution of the United States.

Such measures of relief as we may be able to force from capitalism are but a preparation of the workers to seize the whole powers of Government, in order that they may thereby lay hold of the whole system of socialized industry and thus come to their rightful inheritance.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 30, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 30, 1912.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, as we stand before Thee to acknowledge Thy goodness and to ask Thy guidance we remember before Thee the nation whose people mourn the death of their Emperor. Their sorrow is our sorrow, as their loss is our loss, seeing that none of us liveth to himself and none of us dieth to himself, since we are members one of another. Uphold them, we pray Thee, by Thy gracious mercy, and hasten the time when all the peoples of the earth shall acknowledge Thee to be the Lord. And unto Thee, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and whose dominion endureth throughout all generations, be glory and praise, now and forever more. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 122) providing for the payment of the expenses of the Senate in the impeachment trial of Robert W. Archbald.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5545) providing for the issuing of patent to entrymen for homesteads upon reclamation projects with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18041) granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5145. An act authorizing the city of Hot Springs, Ark., to occupy and construct buildings for the use of the fire department of said city on lot No. 3, block No. 115, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.;

H. R. 6735. An act to authorize the exchange with the Coconino Cattle Co. of lands within the Coconino National Forest;

H. R. 15509. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a sewer pipe upon and across the Fort Rodman Military Reservation, at New Bedford, Mass.;

H. R. 21888. An act providing for the sale of the United States unused post-office site at Perth Amboy, N. J.; and

H. R. 24266. An act to authorize the sale of burnt timber on the public domain.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FLETCHER presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of St. Augustine, Fla., favoring the enactment of legislation providing that what is known as the powder-house lot, now abandoned for military purposes, be turned over to the city of St. Augustine as a public park and to be used for park purposes only, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the board of directors of the American Forestry Association, remonstrating against the adoption of a proposed amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill relative to the selection, classification, and segregation of all lands within the boundaries of national forests that are suitable for agricultural purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted in behalf of the citrus growers of Florida, favoring a continuance of the work of the Department of Agriculture for the benefit of the citrus industry of that State, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. RAYNER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Maryland, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Bourne parcel-post bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Owen bill or any similar medical legislation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT SARTELL, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 7209) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the town site of Sartell, Minn., and I submit a report (No. 990) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, in line 3, to strike out "Sartell Bros. Co." and in lieu thereof to insert "village of Sartell, in the county of Stearns and State of Minnesota"; in the same line, before the word "corporation," to insert "municipal"; in lines 4 and 5, to strike out the words "its successors and assigns, be, and it"; and in line 5, after the word "hereby," to strike out the comma, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the village of Sartell, in the county of Stearns and State of Minnesota, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a wagon and foot bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at the town site of Sartell, Stearns County, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Martin, Va.	Smoot
Bacon	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sutherland
Bailey	Gallinger	Massey	Swanson
Borah	Gronna	Myers	Thornton
Bourne	Heyburn	Nelson	Townsend
Bristow	Hitchcock	Overman	Warren
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Page	Watson
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Jones	Pomerene	Williams
Clapp	Kern	Rayner	Works
Crawford	Lippitt	Sanders
Culberson	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Cullom	McLean	Smith, Mich.

Mr. THORNTON. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. WATSON. My colleague [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. ASHURST. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is unexpectedly and unavoidably detained from the Chamber on important public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. Are there further reports of committees?

ANNA LAGUEE.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2637) for the relief of Anna Laguee, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 991) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 7391) granting a pension to Sarah E. Hood; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 7392) to prescribe the method by which the terms of service shall be computed under the act of May 11, 1912, entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico"; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 7393) granting a pension to Cornelius A. Ahearne (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted an amendment proposing to pay to former employees of the Forest Service and certain other persons named an amount recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for injuries incurred in and losses resulting from fighting forest fires in 1910, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to pay E. C. Talbot $750, Addison T. Smith $500, and J. K. White $150 for services rendered the Committee on Privileges and Elections, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 25970), which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriations for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT (for Mr. RICHARDSON) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

LIEUT. EDWARD L. KEYES.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 370), which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas it is charged that the court-martial by which Lieut. Edward L. Keyes was tried was illegally constituted and was void of jurisdiction; and

Whereas the testimony adduced at this trial was conflicting and insufficient to substantiate the charge; and

Whereas the President of the United States has not the power to convene a board of officers to examine into this case: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate is hereby directed to examine into the trial of said Lieut. Keyes, sending for him to appear before the committee, and to summons such witnesses as it may deem necessary, with a view to authorizing the President to restore said Keyes to the service and place him on the retired list of the Army as a captain of Cavalry.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on July 30, 1912, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 5623. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 6340. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 6978. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

HOMESTEADS UPON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5545) providing for the issuing of patent to entrymen for homesteads upon reclamation projects, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any homestead entryman under the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, including entrymen on ceded Indian lands, may, at any time after having complied with the provisions of law applicable to such lands as to residence, reclamation and cultivation, submit proof of such residence, reclamation and cultivation, which proof, if found regular and satisfactory, shall entitle the entryman to a patent, and all purchasers of water-right certificates on reclamation projects shall be entitled to a final water-right certificate upon proof of the cultivation and reclamation of the land to which the certificate applies, to the extent required by the reclamation act for homestead entrymen: Provided, That no such patent or certificate shall issue until all sums due the United States on account of such land or water right at the time of issuance of patent or certificate have been paid.

SEC. 2. That every patent and water-right certificate issued under this act shall expressly reserve to the United States a prior lien on the land patented or for which water right is certified, together with all water rights appurtenant or belonging thereto, superior to all other liens, claims or demands whatsoever for the payment of all sums due or to become due to the United States or its successors in control of the irrigation project in connection with such lands and water rights.

Upon default of payment of any amount so due title to the land shall pass to the United States free of all encumbrance, subject to the right of the defaulting debtor or any mortgagee, lien holder, judgment debtor, or subsequent purchaser to redeem the land within one year after the notice of such default shall have been given by payment of all moneys due, with 8 per cent interest and cost. And the United States, at its option, acting through the Secretary of the Interior, may cause land to be sold at any time after such failure to redeem, and from the proceeds of the sale there shall be paid into the reclamation fund all moneys due, with interest as herein provided, and costs. The balance of the proceeds, if any, shall be the property of the defaulting debtor or his assignee: Provided, That in case of sale after failure to redeem under this section the United States shall be authorized to bid in such land at not more than the amount in default, including interest and costs.

SEC. 3. That upon full and final payment being made of all amounts due on account of the building and betterment charges to the United States or its successors in control of the project, the United States or its successors, as the case may be, shall issue upon request a certificate certifying that payment of the building and betterment charges in full has been made and that the lien upon the land has been so far satisfied and is no longer of any force or effect except the lien for annual charges for operation and maintenance: Provided, That no person shall at any one time or in any manner, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, acquire, own, or hold irrigable land for which entry or water-right application shall have been made under the said reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, before final payment in full of all installments of building and betterment charges shall have been made on account of such land in excess of one farm unit as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior as the limit of area per entry of public land or per single ownership of private land for which a water right may be purchased, respectively, nor in any case in excess of 160 acres, nor shall water be furnished under said acts nor a water right sold or recognized for such excess; but any such excess land acquired at any time in good faith by descent, by will, or by foreclosure of any lien may be held for two years and no longer after its acquisition; and every excess holding prohibited as aforesaid shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction; and this proviso shall be recited in every patent and water-right certificate issued by the United States under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to designate such bonded fiscal agents or officers of the Reclamation Service as he may deem advisable on each reclamation project, to whom shall be paid all sums due on reclamation entries or water rights, and the officials so designated shall keep a record for the information of the public of the sums paid and the amount due at any time on account of any entry made or water right purchased under the reclamation act; and the Secretary of the Interior shall make provision for furnishing copies of duly authenticated records of entries upon payment of reasonable fees, which copies shall be admissible in evidence, as are copies authenticated under section 888 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 5. That jurisdiction of suits by the United States for the enforcement of the provisions of this act is hereby conferred on the United States district courts of the districts in which the lands are situated, and to amend the title so as to read: "An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes."

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 5145. An act authorizing the city of Hot Springs, Ark., to occupy and construct buildings for the use of the fire department of said city on lot No. 3, block No. 115, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.;

H. R. 6735. An act to authorize the exchange with the Coconino Cattle Co. of lands within the Coconino National Forest; and

H. R. 24266. An act to authorize the sale of burnt timber on the public domain.

H. R. 15509. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a sewer pipe upon and across the Fort Rodman Military Reservation at New Bedford, Mass., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 21888. An act providing for the sale of the United States unused post-office site at Perth Amboy, N. J., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CORBETT TUNNEL, WYO.—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. MYERS. If the President pro tempore will withhold that announcement, I ask that Senate bill 4862, and the President's veto thereof, be laid before the Senate for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 4862) for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project, and the veto message of the President. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate, and the question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the message of the President be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be read.

The Secretary read the President's message as follows:

To the Senate:

For the reasons stated in the letter of July 12 of the Secretary of the Interior, which accompanies this message, I return without approval Senate bill 4862, entitled "An act for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project."

I do this because I think this legislation is of retroactive character and imposes on certain of the reclamation settlers an additional burden over and above the contract price of the work done, increasing that price by a double payment of part of what was due under the contract from the reclamation fund to the principal contractors. At the time when the work was begun and continued there was no law which relieved the subcontractor or the material man from the necessity of looking after the collection of what the contractor owed him or which imposed on the Government or the reclamation authorities the duty of seeing to it that the money paid under the principal contract was used by the principal contractor to pay his subcontractors or material men. To require that this additional amount should now be included in the assessment upon the lands is by law to increase a contract burden by a change of the character of the liability after it has been assumed and fixed. This is retroactive and is legislation in its nature unjust to the reclamation settlers.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 18, 1912.

Mr. SMOOT. I also ask that, in connection with the veto message, the letter dated July 12, 1912, from the Secretary of the Interior be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter from the Secretary of the Interior will be read.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 12, 1912.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In reply to that portion of Mr. Hilles's letter of July 8, requesting information whether there is any objection to your approving S. 4862, "An act for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project":

The contractor for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel failed to comply with his contract, whereupon the work was completed by the United States through the Reclamation Service. Suits were begun by the United States on the contract and bond in the district of Montana, and to enforce a lien on the construction equipment in the district of Wyoming. In the latter suit a cross bill was filed by the concern that sold a portion of the equipment to the contractor. A tentative agreement for a settlement has been reached by the representatives of the bondsmen and of this department. The Department of Justice, however, holds that the settlement should be conditional upon the settlement of the Wyoming cross suit at the same time, and my latest advice is that none of the suits have yet been dismissed. The terms of settlement tentatively agreed upon included the payment of $42,000 by the bondsmen to the Government. This is only a fraction of the Government's claim, but is the most that it seems possible to recover.

The pending bill as originally introduced would have directed the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and pay the laborers and material men's claims outright. As it now reads it gives the laborers and material men priority in recourse to the bondsmen over the claims of the Government. This reverses the existing rule of priority and returns to that prevailing before the act of February 24, 1905 (ch. 778, 33 Stat., 811).

The proponents of the bill cite the act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1170), as a precedent. That act reversed priorities on the Belle Fourche as is now proposed for the Shoshone project. On the Belle Fourche project the contract was advertised before the rule of priority was changed by the act of 1905, though actually let thereafter. The pending bill would reverse the rule of priority although the contract was advertised several months after the rule of priority was changed by statute.

If the bill becomes a law, it will bring to naught the work done in instituting the suit and in protracted negotiations for settlement. The precedent will probably be followed in future cases with the result that the Government's security will be of little value in any case. I am of the opinion that reasonable security for the claims of laborers and material men should be given by the Government's withholding payment on the contract during a time fixed for the filing of notice of such claims, payment thereafter to be made to the contractor or claimant as may be ordered by the proper court. This would require general legislation.

The bill properly provides that the United States shall not be involved by it in any expense. The laborers and claimants who seek relief through the pending bill have suffered undoubted hardship. The effect of the proposed statute would be to shift that hardship to such water users on the Shoshone reclamation project, or the part of it served by the Corbett Tunnel, as hereafter settle upon the public lands or initiate irrigation on the private lands under the project. The Director of the Reclamation Service reports that there are approximately 150,000 acres of irrigable land in the whole project, of which but a small proportion is private or State land; that there are approximately 80,000 irrigable acres which will be served by the Corbett Tunnel, but that the expense of the tunnel has been charged upon the whole project and not merely upon the 80,000 acres; that about 22,000 acres are covered by existing water-right contracts with entrymen and private owners; and that about 12,000 acres are subject to existing public notices fixing the price of water rights to settlers who shall hereafter make entry, or private owners who shall hereafter contract for water from the project.

As to the 22,000 acres: The existing contracts, so long as they are fulfilled by the water users, are binding upon the United States. This fact precludes the shifting of any of the burden from the laborers and material men to water users on said 22,000 acres. As to the 12,000 acres: The department could cancel existing public notices and charge upon this 12,000 acres, together with other lands for which the price of water rights has not yet been fixed by any public notice, the expense of the proposed relief to the laborers and material men. To ascertain the area upon which this burden ($42,000) could be charged it is therefore necessary to subtract either 22,000 acres or 34,000 acres from the total irrigable acreage (150,000) of the project, or from the irrigable acreage (80,000) which will be served by the tunnel. The result would be a maximum charge of about 91 cents per acre and a minimum charge of about 33 cents. Since the director reports the average holding to be 60 acres, this would be a maximum burden of $54.60 and a minimum burden of $19.80 on each farmer (average).

The chief engineer of the Reclamation Service advises me that the water-right charge already imposed and to be imposed upon the lands in the project is, in view of the nature and value of the lands, now at the maximum of safety, and that the addition which the pending bill would render necessary would be a heavy burden upon all future settlers and water-right contractors and would seriously jeopardize the success of the project. Under these circumstances I am reluctantly compelled to advise that the bill should not receive your approval. If the lands of the project were able to bear the additional charge I would be gladly advise otherwise.

Very respectfully,

WALTER L. FISHER,
Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House.

Mr. MYERS obtained the floor.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I do not remember the provisions of this bill, and am not able to judge of its legal effect. I understand it is quite short, and therefore I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate, as requested by the Senator from California.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 4862) for the relief of certain persons having supplied labor and materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel of the Shoshone irrigation project.

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons having supplied labor or materials for the prosecution of the work of constructing the Corbett Tunnel as a part of the Shoshone irrigation project in the State of Wyoming, under any contract or contracts let for that purpose by the Government of the United States, and their assigns and legal representatives, are hereby given the full rights and remedies awarded to persons supplying labor and materials in the prosecution of public works, as set forth in the act of August 13, 1894, entitled "An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works," to the same force, extent, and effect as if the act had not been amended, modified, or repealed, with full right of action in the name of the United States for his or their use and benefit against any contractor or contractors and their sureties upon any bond or bonds furnished to the United States under any such contract: Provided, That no action prosecuted under this act shall involve the United States in any expense.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will take the liberty of submitting to the Senate a statement of this matter. I want to present all sides of it and all the facts in the case, so that the Senate may have a full knowledge in the premises. Even though the matter is of minor importance, relatively, I do not want any Senator to vote on this question without a full history of the matter and a full understanding of the facts. It is, of course, a matter of some moment to vote to pass a measure over the President's veto; but it is also a matter of some moment for this body to recede from a position it has heretofore unanimously taken, simply because one man differs in opinion from the stand the Senate has taken.

This bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. DIXON], and yet I have been, I believe, from the beginning as fully conversant with the facts and details as has he. I have cooperated with him from the beginning in furthering the interests of this bill, being impressed, just as fully as he could possibly be or as any other person could possibly be, with the merits of the proposition, and my zeal in support of the measure is just as great as though I had originally introduced the bill. To me it is a matter of no moment or consequence who is the author of a bill; the considerations which to me are of moment and consequence are the facts and merits of the case.

On September 27, 1905, the Secretary of the Interior awarded a contract to Charles Spear, of Billings, Mont., for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, in connection with the Shoshone irrigation project. This contract was by Spear sublet to the Western Construction Co. In the following summer both the contractor, Spear, and the subcontractor failed financially, and on August 4, 1906, the contract, according to its provisions, was suspended, and the Reclamation Service thereafter completed the work.

The claims to which this bill relates are claims for labor and material, furnished the subcontractor, the Western Construction Co. The contract price for this work was, I believe, $750,000. A bond of $75,000 was exacted of the contractor by the Government, a bond which, it appears to me, was entirely insufficient and inadequate; in fact, subsequent developments have absolutely proven that the bond was wholly inadequate and insufficient, and I believe the Government officials were derelict in duty in not requiring a larger bond for the performance of that work. Subsequent developments also show that the contractor took the work at entirely too low a price. He took it upon estimates furnished him by the Government officials, as to the nature of the material he would have to handle and the nature of the work he would have to do; and, acting on these facts furnished by the Government, he took the contract at too low a figure and failed. That was the reason of the failure of the contractor and the subcontractor.

During the existence of the contract, while the work was being carried on under the subcontractor, certain people in Montana, small tradesmen, storekeepers, and shopkeepers, and small dealers of limited means, knowing that this was a Government contract, relying upon the fact that a bond had been given for the faithful performance of the work, knowing that they were, in a way, dealing with the Government, and feeling that they were absolutely safe, furnished a quantity of supplies and material for the subcontractor—lumber, hay, provisions, groceries, and such things. Some of them also cashed time checks issued by the subcontractor to the laborers for their labor. That was done in the usual course of business; it is a common practice in the West and all over the country; and the time checks issued to a laborer by a contractor who is operating for the Government and under bond are certainly supposed to be good.

The presumption is that they are good; and many such time checks were cashed. So the money of these small dealers and tradesmen was paid out to laborers who were in the employ of the subcontractor on this Government work.

The situs of this contract, the place where the work was done, was in the State of Wyoming, and the people who furnished the supplies and paid out this money on the strength of the credit of the Government live in both Montana and Wyoming—some live in Montana, others live in Wyoming; but the work was done in Wyoming. When the contractor failed there were outstanding about $42,000 of obligations to small tradesmen and dealers in Montana and Wyoming for supplies and money furnished. Those people were left holding an indebtedness of $42,000.

In 1894 Congress enacted a law to govern such transactions as this. It was long in force; for many years it was the prevailing law. That act of August 13, 1894, was for the regulation of Government contracts. It provided among other things:

That such contractor or contractors shall promptly make payment to all persons supplying him or them labor and materials in the prosecution of the work; and a condition to this effect shall be incorporated in the bond to be given by the contractor.

Here is the gist of this matter—and it is very important in this transaction:

Persons supplying such labor and materials shall have a right of action, and shall be authorized to bring suit in the name of the United States for his or their use and benefit against such contractor and sureties and to prosecute the same to final judgment and execution: Provided, That such action and its prosecutions shall involve the United States in no expense.

Under that law of 1894 people who furnished money or supplies to the contractors were given the first right to sue on any bond given by the contractor for the recovery of what might be due them. They were given a prior right to the United States Government; that is, they had the first right to sue on the bonds, to avail themselves of its benefits, and to recoup themselves out of the bond for any losses they might have sustained. By the act of 1894 creditors were given the first right.

In 1905 the law of 1894 was repealed by Congress, and the prior right of creditors to sue on the contractor's bond was repealed; so that, from and after the passage of the act of 1905, creditors did not have the first right to avail themselves of the benefits of the bond.

The bill vetoed by the President, as originally introduced in the Senate, provided that the Secretary of the Interior should be authorized and directed to hear evidence as to the losses of these creditors and to permit them to establish and make proof of their claims before him.

As I say, this bill originally provided that these creditors might make proof of their claims and establish the amount of their claims before the Secretary of the Interior, and he was thereupon ordered to find the amount of money due to each one, and the bill provided that they should be paid out of the reclamation fund. In that shape the bill unanimously passed this body.

When it was introduced it was referred to the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands. There were several hearings had before that committee. The matter was fully investigated and exploited. It was gone into fully and discussed fully, and the objections of the Secretary of the Interior to giving these people any relief were communicated to that committee.

As a matter of fact, the people who held these claims had first applied to the Interior Department for relief and to have the money due them paid to them. They were advised by the officials of that department that the Interior Department had no power to grant them any relief, and they were advised by the Interior Department that the only relief was through the introduction of a bill in Congress; and that remedy was suggested by the Interior Department.

Then, when the bill was introduced, the Interior Department opposed its passage. The bill, as is usual, was referred by the Senate committee to the Interior Department, and the objections of the Interior Department were communicated to the committee. But, after several conferences, a quorum of the committee, a majority of the committee present and acting, unanimously reported the bill favorably to this body. Of course, all the members of the committee were not present; and those Senators who did not join in the report are not bound by it; nor are those who did, if they now see the facts in a different light. But a quorum of the committee unanimously recommended the bill to this body for passage, and the bill unanimously passed this body.

Then it went to the House and was referred to the House Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, and several hearings were had before the House committee, some of which I attended, and the bill was discussed thoroughly before that committee, and the objections of the Interior Department to the bill were made known to the House committee. That is a large committee, having, I think, not less than 20 members, and all but 3 of them united in recommending to the House the passage of the bill with an amendment, which puts it in its present form. Three joined in a minority report. But a large majority of the committee, after thoroughly discussing and clearly understanding the matter, in every phase and light, reported that as amended the bill be passed by the House.

So it was passed by the House with practical unanimity, I understand. There may have been a few dissenting votes, but it was practically unanimous, and it came to this body, and the Senate unanimously concurred in the House amendment and made the bill, so far as it is in the power of Congress, a law, in its present form.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is it not a fact, may I ask the Senator, that there is not a single suggestion made in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior that was not embraced in the protest of the Secretary of the Interior to the committee, and is not the President's veto, as a matter of fact, based entirely upon the protest which was fully examined and investigated by the committee?

Mr. MYERS. Yes. That is my understanding of the matter. The Interior Department sent several communications to the House and Senate committees. I think the facts are as stated by the Senator from Oregon.

The bill as it now stands merely authorizes these creditors to avail themselves of what were the provisions of the act of 1894. It simply puts them in the position that they would be if the act of 1894 had not been repealed. That is——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The act of 1894 gave the right to a lien upon irrigation projects and provided it might be charged up to the settler?

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not understand——

Mr. MYERS. I am going to reach that in a few moments.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did not understand the Senator to say that.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Montana has gone too far in his statement.

Mr. MYERS. How is that?

Mr. SMOOT. That the law of 1894 gives a right to a lien on a reclamation project. It gives a right of lien upon the bondsmen for the contractor.

Mr. MYERS. That remark about the lien was interjected by the Senator from South Dakota and did not emanate from me.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Montana answered in the affirmative, and I just wanted to call his attention to the fact——

Mr. MYERS. I want to be set right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to know whether under the act of 1894 the losses of these material men and subcontractors could be charged up so that the settler on the reclamation project would have to pay for them?

Mr. MYERS. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; under the law it could not be charged to the settler on the reclamation project.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This bill does provide that the settler shall pay an additional amount, and it must finally come out of the settler.

Mr. SMOOT. If the money is paid to relieve the people who furnished the material, then it finally comes out of the settler under the bill vetoed, but under the law of 1894 such could not be the case. It is true a lien could be enforced against the bondsmen of the contractor.

Mr. CLAPP. Is not the Senator from Utah partly right and possibly partly wrong? Of course, the remedy of the laboring man under the law of 1894——

Mr. SMOOT. Of 1894——

Mr. CLAPP. Was against the bond.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. The law of 1905 took that away in part by providing the lien of the Government should be given preference ahead of any lien.

Mr. CLAPP. I am not asking this question as a matter of controversy. The Senator may be right. But under the old law, although the laborer's remedy went to the bond, was or was it not true that the Government could charge the final cost to the irrigation of the land?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. I am asking for information.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Government could not. The Government could only charge against the land the actual contract price.

Mr. CLAPP. Is the Senator sure of that?

Mr. SMOOT. I am positive.

Mr. CLAPP. I am not asking these questions for any purpose of controversy.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I think the Senator from Utah is a little bit mistaken. The purpose of this bill was to place these people's claims ahead of the Government's on the bond, and the bill itself does not by its terms impose upon the land what it seeks to recover.

But if the Government fails to recover what it has to expend to complete the project, possibly that cost would be assessed against the land and the settler would have to pay it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will kindly get, through the Chair, permission of the Senator entitled to the floor. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

My MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator will agree with me that if this bill passes and the $42,000 is received from the bondsman by the people who furnished the materials, then the $42,000 must be charged to the entryman on the reclamation project.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, representing a State greatly interested in this proposition, I do not propose to concede that extra expenses due to the mistakes and derelictions of duty upon the part of the department shall be charged up to the settlers. If the Government failed to take a bond which was sufficient to protect the situation, the settlers should not pay for that proposition. The settler neither in good conscience nor in law should pay for anything other than actual cost under a reasonable and proper administration of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. The $42,000 of which we are speaking, as I understand it, is a compromise on the bond of $75,000, and the Government is to receive $42,000, and if the Government finally receives the $42,000 it will be credited to the reclamation project, but if the Government does not receive the $42,000, then the settlers on the reclamation project must pay that amount of money.

The contractors took a contract to complete the reclamation project for $750,000. They failed in carrying out the contract. They were paid by the Government for all the work done and material furnished up to the time of their failure, and then the Government had to step in and finish the project. Of course it cost more because of the extra cost to the contractor as well as the Government in starting the work. As the Senator well knows, in every project the starting is very expensive, and all that was lost in so doing was charged to the project, and then when the contractors failed the Government had to get together a force of workmen to begin work again, with an extra cost in so doing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not a fact that the contractors bid too low?

Mr. SMOOT. That, of course, I can not say. Evidently they did, because it cost the Government, when it completed the work, $180,000 more than the contract price, but how much I can not say, as all of the expense that was entailed in starting the work by the contractor was charged to the cost of the project as well as the extra expense to the Government in getting the work again started after the contractor had failed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not true that the Government misled the contractor?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please address the Chair. To whom does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina and then to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask that question which I proposed to the Senator—whether or not the Government in making out its estimates and defining the kind of material to be taken out misled the contractors, and whether the material taken out was a different quality of material from that which the Government laid before him as the material to be taken out?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe for a minute that the contractors would have made a contract without going over every foot of the work. They knew what they were bidding on. They knew exactly what they were expected to do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wish to say that I have been on the ground; I saw this tunnel in the Shoshone reclamation project; and it is a fact that these contractors were misled largely by the representation of the Government officials who went there and made tests of excavations and tests of the tunnel, and the contractor relied very largely upon the report of the Government engineers.

Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I will state that this is another case where the department undertook to do the legislating. This matter had been fully examined by both the committees of the House and Senate. They had before them the protest of the Secretary of the Interior, and went into an examination of it and made a report on it. Having failed in their efforts to induce the Irrigation Committees of the House and Senate to legislate in accordance with their wishes, they then made the same protest to the President, after both bodies of Congress had acted on the bill.

The President himself in his veto message says expressly that he bases his veto upon the letter he received from the Secretary of the Interior. If there ever was a strong and meritorious case where people had advanced money to the laborers and furnished money to pay for materials which were bought, this is such a case, and I question, as the Senator from Idaho does, the right of the Government to charge this up against the settlers within the irrigation project and make it a charge against them.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This is the particular point upon which I want to hear an explanation. If this were a proposition involving only the Government and the expenditure of its funds to make good the loss of these laborers and subcontractors, because the Government may have been at fault, that is one thing. If this bill is what the Secretary of the Interior seems to say it is, and what the President appears to say it is, it does not intend that this shall simply be a payment of money by the Government out of its Treasury to make good some loss that has been sustained through its laws, but it is a proposal to transfer that loss from these laborers and material men to the settlers upon this reclamation project. The President apparently has had it figured out and finds out how much it will add to the cost of each one of these entrymen, nineteen dollars and some cents in one instance and fifty-odd dollars in another.

Now, if this bill has any such effect as that, and if the loss to these material men, who, as compared with the entrymen, should have looked out for themselves somewhat, is to be transferred to the shoulders of the entrymen, I for one think the veto rests on very good grounds. I want to understand whether or not this bill does commit the shifting of this burden to the entrymen.

Mr. MYERS. I will explain that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MYERS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not what the Senator from South Dakota calls the loss merely an assessment of the true cost? He talks about transferring the loss to the settler. Is it not merely assessing them with the true cost, even if it should be an assessment against them, which seems to be denied?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi I have lived in the West long enough and I have been close enough to the burdens borne by the men who are struggling not only upon homesteads elsewhere, but in these reclamation projects, to protest absolutely and as earnestly as I know how against the addition of any burdens upon them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I wish to say that I join the Senator from South Dakota in that. I would not put any additional burdens upon them, but I understand the whole irrigation scheme, all this reclamation work, is based upon the idea that the land reclaimed shall bear the cost of the work. Now, then, if the true cost of this work be x plus 20 and x only has been paid, and this difference has been brought about largely by the fault of the Government in the survey of the character of the soil, and in its reports of what that soil was, is it quite fair to call it a transfer of a loss?

Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. SMOOT, and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Montana yield? Four Senators are asking for recognition.

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota and then to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield until I make a suggestion?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am going to make merely a suggestion, and I would have been through if let alone.

Mr. CLAPP. The bill in express terms limits the remedy, and it will be the remedy provided by the law of 1894 which is limited to a suit on bonds.

Mr. MYERS. Certainly, it does.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no question about that.

Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield further to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I merely want to say in answer to the Senator from Mississippi that I have heard nothing here that satisfies me that this is a mere question of a legitimate cost that should be assessed against this project. It cost the Government more to take up the work, after the bond was paid, and carry it on, but it does not necessarily follow that because that was the fact the amount is in excess of the reasonable cost of the project, as it would have been incurred had these men acted in good faith.

Mr. SMOOT and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to answer the question just asked by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Utah and then to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and then to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

Mr. SMOOT. The suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi is a pertinent one, and it ought to be answered. It can be answered in this way: That the $42,000 which was furnished by the parties to the contractors was paid by the Government on monthly estimates, and now, if they have to pay it again, it will be a double cost upon the land.

I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that it only allows the parties who furnished these goods to the contractor to bring suit against the bondsmen. Under the law of 1905 the Government has done that, and they have a prior lien. They have brought the suit against the bondsmen to collect this $42,000, and as the Government has already paid it once through estimates to the contractor, the Government will take the $42,000, if collected, and will credit the amount to the project. But if the people who furnished the goods to the contractor are allowed to get the $42,000 from the bondsmen, as the bill provides, then the project will not be credited with the $42,000, and it will be a double charge to the men who may go on the land.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question? I wish to ask the Senator from Utah why the Government compromised a $75,000 bond for $42,000?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not in possession of information as to whether that was all that they could get out of the bondsmen or not.

Mr. OVERMAN. These labor and material men say they were ready to compromise, and the Government cut them out of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know why it was.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. It all resolves itself into the proposition whether or not we can compel the settlers on these projects to pay for a conceded mistake of judgment on the part of those who were in charge of the work for the Government. There is no law on the statute book at this time which compels them to do that or equity which authorizes it to be done, and I venture to say there never will be any put on the statute book which will authorize it to be done.

The law contemplates that the settler shall pay what it actually costs to construct the canal or the work, and it does not contemplate and equity does not enjoin him to pay that which has resulted from the failure to take a bond or that which has resulted by reason of a bad compromise or that which has resulted by reason of the fact that they did not in some other way perform their official duty.

The settlers are not responsible for the failure to do their official duty, and the law does not impose it upon them to pay for it. If there is any mistake about that proposition it is the duty of Congress not to impose upon those settlers burdens which may arise by reason of some mistake on the part of the Government officials.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. It seems to be a little difficult for a Senator who respects the rules of the Senate to be heard, but the Senator from Idaho has practically covered what I desired to say.

It seems to me that in the matter of carrying on these irrigation projects the Government of the United States should be regarded as a trustee for the settlers upon these lands. If there are any mistakes made by which money is lost, that loss should be borne by the Government, and not by the settlers.

Mr. President, this thing of adding to the burden of the settlers under these irrigation projects is a very serious matter, as I know. The burden is altogether too heavy as it is. One of the dangers that is confronting the whole Reclamation Service is the fact that burdens which are imposed upon the settler under these projects are too heavy for them to bear. I am quite sure that before very long the Congress of the United States will have to pass some additional legislation that will bring relief to the settlers under these projects.

The question here is simply one as to which of two innocent parties should bear this loss—whether it should be borne by the contractors and dealers who furnished material to the contractors or whether it should be borne by the settlers under the project. I do not believe that it should be borne by either one of them. I believe that if any loss has been incurred in this matter it should be paid out of the General Treasury of the Government and not be borne by the settlers upon these lands. That, it seems to me, is the vice of this bill. The Secretary of the Interior seems to have construed it in that way.

I think I understand what the terms of the bill are. It seems to me there can be no question but that the final loss will have to be borne by the settlers themselves, and that, it seems to me, is utterly unjust.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Personally, I believe this money should be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, but I think there is some misapprehension here with regard to what will happen if the bill passes.

This project proposed to irrigate 150,000 acres of land. Twenty-two thousand acres of the land are already sold, and the Secretary of the Interior says, and I agree with him in respect to that, that the increased cost which might be reached by this amount can not be assessed upon the land that is already sold by the Government, and there is no proposal to increase the assessment upon the land already sold or entered. There are 118,000 acres of the project which have not been sold. There are no entrymen upon these acres. Contracts between the Government and entrymen are yet to be made. If this money is imposed upon any part of the project, it will be imposed only upon the 118,000 acres in which no one has as yet any right whatsoever and upon which no one as yet has expended any money whatsoever.

It is perfectly fair and equitable, as I look at it, if it must be imposed at all, to impose it upon these 118,000 acres, and thus the 33 cents per acre named in the report of the Secretary of the Interior are determined. The Secretary of the Interior says:

> The Director of the Reclamation Service reports that there are approximately 150,000 acres of irrigable land in the whole project, of which but a small proportion is private or State land; that there are approximately 80,000 irrigable acres which will be served by the Corbett Tunnel, but that the expense of the tunnel has been charged upon the whole project and not merely upon the 80,000 acres; that about 22,000 acres are covered by existing water-right contracts with entrymen and private owners; and that about 12,000 acres are subject to existing public notices fixing the price of water rights to settlers who shall hereafter make entry, or private owners who shall hereafter contract for water from the project.
> As to the 22,000 acres, the existing contracts, so long as they are fulfilled by the water users, are binding upon the United States. This fact precludes the shifting of any of the burden from the laborers and material men to water users on said 22,000 acres. As to the 12,000 acres, the department could cancel existing public notices and charge upon this 12,000 acres, together with other lands for which the price of water rights has not yet been fixed by any public notice—

But upon which no entries have been made or contracts made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I say just a word? Those contracts entered into with these entrymen that cover the 22,000 acres specify the amount they are to pay, and how can they be made to pay any more?

Mr. CUMMINS. And they can not be made to pay a single penny.

Mr. CLAPP. And they can not impose any further burden upon it.

Mr. CUMMINS. This law does not propose to impose any additional burden upon it. The Secretary of the Interior could not do it if he so desired. There is no law which permits the Secretary to impose an additional assessment upon the 22,000 acres, but as to the 118,000 acres which as yet have not been entered, concerning which no rights have accrued, where is the inequity in selling that land for the cost of this project, including the $42,000 proposed by the bill? There is no inequity in it, and if the settlers do not want to take the land with the additional 33 cents per acre, they need not do it. The Secretary of the Interior says:

> As to the 22,000 acres, the existing contracts, so long as they are fulfilled by the water users, are binding upon the United States. This fact precludes the shifting of any of the burden from the laborers and material men to water users on said 22,000 acres.

And everybody will agree with that, that they have no right attached concerning the 118,000 acres that are yet unoccupied and yet unentered.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Iowa has a peculiar idea of the object and purpose of this reclamation legislation. I had always supposed that the object and purpose of the Government was to settle these lands upon the payment by the settlers of the actual cost of the project.

The Senator seems to think that no injury would result because of the fact that whoever may settle upon these lands in the future may be compelled to pay an excessive amount on account of the mistake of the Government in constructing these works. There should be an inherent right on the part of the people of this country to settle upon this land under the legislation that we have now at the actual cost of the project under which they propose to take up their land.

There is no contract right or liability with respect to it, I confess, but certainly the purpose of the Government was that this land should be settled by the people of this country at the actual and proper cost of these projects.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. WORKS. If not, I have misunderstood entirely the object and purpose of the reclamation legislation.

Mr. CUMMINS. When settlers yet come in and pay the additional 33 cents which will be required they will then have paid only the actual cost of this work. There is no suggestion that the project could have been built or completed by anybody for less than the amount expended, including the $42,000 covered by the bill.

Mr. WORKS. There, I think, is where the Senator from Iowa is mistaken. As the statement is made here—I do not know how true it may be—the Government failed in its duty with respect to this particular project by not demanding and requiring of the contractors a sufficient bond to protect the parties interested in the construction of this particular project.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that were true, the contractor would have lost the land. If something from the bond was necessary to reimburse the Government, then the Government is taking advantage of a mistake on the part of the contractor in agreeing to do the work at too low a price.

Mr. WORKS. That assumes that the contractor took the contract at too low a price. I do not know whether he did or not; but if he did and the Government let out this contract at a price that must result in the failure of the contractor, and somebody is to lose money by it, I do not know how the Government and innocent parties should be held responsible.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. It is apparent to all familiar with the facts in this controversy that the $42,000 is not the amount expended in the actual construction of this reclamation. Therefore, if the loss occurs it will arise by reason of the failure either to take sufficient bond or by reason of the failure to compromise and take the full amount of the bond when settled.

Suppose—speaking now to those who contend that the settler should bear this mistake—suppose they had proceeded to judgment and some representative of the Government had collected judgment and embezzled it, would anybody contend that the settler therefore should suffer by reason of that kind of an act? This law does not contemplate and no fair construction of it can impose upon the settler that kind of a burden, or that kind of an expense. It only contemplates their return to the Treasury that which was the actual expense of construction bona fide expended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I will yield to the Senator from Utah and then I will ask to be allowed to continue.

Mr. SMOOT. I only want to answer the question asked by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] as to why the compromise of $42,000 was made by the Government. The reason is because of the fact that $42,000 is all the claims that are made against the project. That is all that was to be collected from the bondsmen, because that pays all the claims made against the contractor.

Mr. OVERMAN. In taking into consideration this compromise of the Government, in connection with the loss of the Government, absolutely they neglected to go into the question of these laborers and material men.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator to say that they compromised for the Government loss at $42,000?

Mr. SMOOT. No; what the Government lost, the claims against the contractor by those very parties whom the bill now undertakes to see paid, amounted to $42,000; and that is all the claims there were made against the contractor and all the claims that the people furnishing material could have sued the bondsmen for.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand the Senator to say that the bondsmen paid into the Treasury $42,000, the amount of these claims?

Mr. SMOOT. No; they have not paid it, but I understand there is a compromise, and they will pay it into the Treasury and the reclamation project will get the credit for it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then this compromise was for the material and the laborers' lien?

Mr. SMOOT. The compromise covers all claims, as I understand it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Government compromised to that amount, and that amount belongs to these people?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, it does not belong to the people, for this reason: That when the goods were furnished to the contractor by the different people, the Government paid the contractor for the items furnished in estimates every month; that is, the $42,000 that was furnished to the contractor went into the project, and every month an estimate was given as to how much of the project had been completed, and in this amount the $42,000 was included. The Government has already paid it, and it has been charged to the reclamation project.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Government has paid these claims?

Mr. SMOOT. The Government paid the contractors for goods furnished on the basis of the claims.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the Senator from Utah is mistaken about that. The Government paid the contractor upon the estimates and according to the work done. It happened that those estimates were not sufficient to cover the expenses of the contractor while he was doing the work. The Government did not make any estimate with regard to the material furnished, with regard to the labor, or with regard to other things of that sort. The Government made estimates with regard to the work done on the project.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had examined the contract made by the Government he would have found they allowed 90 per cent of all material that is upon the ground for the project, and everything that was furnished up to the time the Government paid for, because there was an estimate made for it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to be enlightened a little on one phase of this matter mentioned by the Senator from Iowa. It seems to me the suggestion made is not quite a fair one, if it be true that the Government still owns 118,000 acres of land which have not been entered by anyone and not disposed of or sold. I should like to inquire from the Senator what amount of this 118,000 acres is Government land and whether any part of it is land owned by private individuals. Then I desire to inquire further whether or not this 118,000 acres has been benefited by this improvement. If the 118,000 acres has been benefited by the improvement made by reason of this irrigation project, then I see no reason why the Government should not stand this expense of $42,000 and take its chances of getting back the money out of the 118,000 acres to be sold.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; it is Government land, I understand.

Mr. President, I will resume my statement, and, if not interrupted a great deal more, I think I can say all I have to say in a comparatively short time, and then I will be very glad for each and every Senator who may so desire to express his views on the subject.

As I was saying when interrupted, this bill, as passed by the Senate and the House, simply enabled the creditors to avail themselves of the provisions of the act of 1894, to have the first right to sue on the contractor's bond for the $42,000 due them, and to recover it out of the bond. What the Government may do in regard to its deficit caused by the expense to which it was subjected to complete the contract, over and above the contract price, is another matter about which I will say a few words before I get through. The object of this bill is to put these creditors exactly where they would have been under the law of 1894 by enabling them to have the first right under the contractor's bond. I see no justice in the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that the Government is willing to compromise on $42,000 and expects to get that amount, but the creditors are to get none of the money.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will admit, however, that the contractor signed the contract for doing the work under the law of 1905, will he not?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; and I will have something to say about that a little later.
